The Iowa Legislature, at its recent special session, adopted a railroad law limiting the rates for passenger travel to 3½ cents per mile upon all roads where gross earnings exceed $4,000 per mile per year. The Indiana Legislature has likewise passed a law regulating passenger and freight charges. Passenger fares are fixed at 3 cents a mile; for local freights, within distances of 20 miles, not more than 100 per cent. in excess of through freight rates shall be charged; within distances of 50 miles, not more than 75 per cent., and for greater distances not more than 50 per cent. ....James Walker, of Jacksonville, Ill., an old man of 80, recently wandered from home. One Senator was offered $1,000 to absent himself from the vote. The Senate has ordered the facts to be investigated....The first cotton mill ever established in the Northwest has just been opened in Jonesville, Mich. The new Temperance law enacted by the Indiana Legislature is but a step removed from absolute prohibition. One of its provisions is, that any person desiring a permit to sell intoxicating liquors must present a petition signed by a majority of the legal voters of the town in which he lives, or of the ward in which he resides, in case of a city organization.

A miner's drill, four feet long and an inch in diameter, fell from the mouth of the shaft and struck Benjamin Couch, 128 feet below, in the back at the right of the spine just above the hips, and passing through his body came out near the rectum. The drill made a terrible wound, but it was withdrawn by a fellow workman at Couch's request. Medical aid was summoned at once, and the sufferer will probably recover....The notorious "Buffalo Bill" was arrested, recently, at Osage, Kansas, for horse-stealing. He recites the facts of the conflict of authority, the existence of two Executives and two Legislatures, explains and defends his interference to sustain Judge Durell, and states that, in case Congress does nothing to restore order in the State, he will feel it his duty to do so by recognizing and maintaining the Government declared elected by the Lynch Returning Board.

CONGRESS IN BRIEF.

Thursday, Feb. 20.—Senate.—Carpenter, majority of the Committee on Elections, reported that there is no legal State Government in Louisiana, and reported a bill providing for a new election for the purpose of establishing in that State a republican form of government. Trumbull made a dissenting report favoring the recognition of the McEnery Government. Morton also made a dissenting report favoring the recognition of the Kellogg Government. Hill made a dissenting report recommending that the members of the Louisiana Legislatures declared elected by both Returning Boards be called together, and that they proceed jointly to count the votes and declare who are legally elected....A report was received from the Committee on Commerce, asking to be discharged from further consideration of the question as to the authority of Congress to regulate freights and fares on railways running through two or more States.

House.—The bill to reopen the war claims of 1812 so as to pay Virginia, North Carolina and other States $2,735,860 for amount claimed because of error in the computation of interest due them was lost....Wood (N. Y.) offered a resolution that the testimony reported by the Credit Mobilier be referred to the Judiciary Committee, with instructions to report articles of impeachment against Vice-President Colfax if, in their judgment, the evidence warrants. By a vote of 105 yeas to 109 nays, the House refused to consider the resolution. A resolution was then adopted referring the testimony reported by the Poland committee to the Judiciary Committee, with instructions to inquire whether anything in such testimony warrants articles of impeachment against any officer of the United States not a member of the House, or makes further investigation necessary....A resolution was adopted directing the Ways and Means Committee to investigate the charges that money had been used last session to secure an additional subsidy to the Pacific Mail Steamship Company....The report of the Wilson committee on the Union Pacific road and the Credit Mobilier was received.

Friday, Feb. 21.—Senate.—A resolution of the South Carolina Legislature, stating that the withdrawal of Government troops from that State would endanger the public peace, was presented.... The Committee on Public Lands reported adversely on the Soldiers' Bounty Land bill, and the bill for the incorporation of the European and American Land and Emigration Company....An amendment to the Postal Appropriation bill repealing all laws authorizing the free transportation of any mail matter whatever was agreed to....The bill to punish and prevent traffic in obscene literature was passed. ....The Two-per-cent. bill was discussed, and the Senate, by a vote of 28 to 26, refused to allow it to go to a third reading.

House.—The bill granting right of way to the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe railway, giving power to the company to mortgage its lands, was rejected....An amendment requiring the erection of all Government buildings to be let by contract to the lowest bidder was adopted....The bill authorizing the bridging of the Mississippi river at Carondelet (South St. Louis) was passed....A bill was passed donating six bronze cannon for a statue to Gen. Kearney....Banks addressed the House on Cuban affairs, in which he attacked the policy of the Administration toward the struggling patriots of that island. Sargent replied to him, defending the Administration.

Saturday, Feb. 22.—Senate.—Edmunds, from the Judiciary Committee, reported adversely on the House bill for the distribution of the Geneva award....The Postoffice Appropriation bill was taken up. An amendment was adopted authorizing the appointment of a Superintendent of Free Delivery, at a salary of $2,500. The amendment for the issue of two-cent stamped letter-sheet envelopes was voted down. An amendment to the Webb Subsidy bill, and also the amendment requiring all persons who receive mail matter through the free delivery to provide boxes at their offices or houses, were defeated. The amendment providing additional compensation for the railroad mail service was concurred in. The bill was then passed.

House.—E. H. Roberts, from the Committee of Ways and Means, reported the evidence taken in the matters pending before it in reference to Judge Charles T. Sherman, of Ohio. The committee state that the evidence implicates no member of either house, and offer a resolution referring to the Judiciary Committee the evidence taken, with instructions to determine whether further investigation should not be had with a view of presenting articles of impeachment against Judge Sherman. The resolution was adopted....The House took up the Sundry Civil Appropriation bill—the pending amendments being that offered by Banks prohibiting the publication of books or documents for gratuitous distribution, and that of Butler forbidding any payment of salary or expenses of officers of the so-called Competitive Civil Service Examination. After a long and spirited debate both amendments were voted down. The amendment requiring contracts for public buildings to be made with the lowest responsible bidder was rejected...The remainder of the day's session was devoted to the consideration of the River and Harbor Appropriation bill.

Monday, Feb. 24.—Senate.—Nearly the whole day was devoted to the consideration of the Agricultural College bill. Several amendments were voted down, including one by Morton, that no distinction shall be made in colleges on account of race, color, or prev as condition of servitude. The Senate, for want of a quorum, finally adjouaned without action on the bill.

House.—The Speaker presented a message from the President, urging legislation to bring into operation the articles of the Treaty of Washington, of May 8, 1871, relative to the fisheries....Butler (Mass.), from the Judiciary Committee, presented the report in the matter of impeachment arising out of the reports of the Credit Mobilier Committee. The Clerk proceeded to read the report in full. The only two impeachable officers involved in the matter, the report says, are the Vice-President of the United States, and James Brooks, in the capacity of Government Director of the Union Pacific Railway Company. The latter having long ceased to be such an officer, the case against him had been considered no further. The report then cites the facts and circumstances in the case of Colfax. The committee argues that both the impeaching power and the power of expulsion are remedial only, and not primitive, and comes to the conclusion that, so far as receiving and holding an interest in the Credit Mobilier stock is concerned, there is nothing in the testimony submitted which would warrant the impeachment of the Vice-President. The committee, therefore, asks to be discharged from further consideration of the subject. Potter and Goodrich each presented a dissenting report. Consideration of the subject was postponed until Wednesday, 26th. ....The River and Harbor bill and the Fishery bill were passed....The Civil Appropriation bill was taken up. Butler offered an amendment increasing salaries after the 4th of March as follows: President of the United States, $50,000; Vice-President, Justices of the Supreme Court, heads of departments, and Speaker of the House, $10,000 each; Chief Justice of the Supreme Court, $10,500; Assistant Secretary of State, of the Treasury, and of the Interior, $6,500 each; Senators, Representatives, and Delegates, including the Forty-second Congress, $7,500 each; and, in lieu of mileage, they are to be allowed their actual expenses to and from Washington each session, including the Forty-second Congress. After a lively debate the amendment was agreed to—yeas, 81; nays, 66.

Tuesday, Feb. 25.—Senate.—The Agricultural College bill came up. A motion was made to table it, which was lost—yeas, 18; nays, 26. After a long debate, the bill was referred to a conference committee....The Senate resumed consideration of the Army bill. An amendment by Ames abolishing distinctions in the army on account of race or color was defeated—yeas, 20; nays, 22. An amendment by Logan appropriating $1,000,000 for head-stones in the national cemeteries was agreed to, and the bill passed.

House.—The whole day, including the evening session, was devoted to the consideration of the report of the Credit Mobilier Committee, and to the reception of Oakes Ames' defense, which was read by the Clerk. The House adjourned without action on the subject.

Wednesday, Feb. 26.—Senate.—The amendment to the Geneva Award bill was non-concurred in, and a committee of conference ordered....Bills passed: To extend the time for the completion of the St. Paul and Pacific railroad; to carry into effect the fishery clause of the Treaty of Washington; authorizing the exchange of the old Postoffice property in Chicago for other property in that city.... Edmunds called up the bill to aid the execution of the laws in Utah, and a lengthy debate ensued. The bill was finally passed....Wright, from the select committee to investigate the charges against Clayton (Ark.), made a report, accompanied by a resolution declaring the charges not sustained.

House.—Consideration of the report of the Poland Credit Mobilier Committee was resumed, and the entire day's session was consumed in debate. The House, without reaching a vote, adjourned at 11:40 p. m.

A Railroad Conductor's Good Luck. —The thousand-dollar bill which Conductor McKinney took from a stranger, on the owl train, between New Haven and this city, over a year ago, is still on deposit, to Mr. McKinney's credit, at one of the city banks. The interest has amounted to over $100. It will be remembered that the conductor, when the bill was handed him, passed on, saying he would change it when he had gone through the train. When he returned, the man denied having presented a thousand-dollar bill. He was probably a thief, gave the money by mistake, and was afraid to rectify it. At all events, Mr. McKinney thinks it a pretty good night's work.—Hartford Courant.

Mr. Colfax's Counsel.

It seems to be necessary that somebody should stand up for Judge Hale, Mr. Colfax's counsel before the Credit Mobilier Committee, since the brass-collar newspapers have fallen to denouncing him for malpractice, attributing Colfax's final demolition to the blundering of his lawyer. We never could see why Colfax or any other accused person should need the services of a lawyer in an investigation affecting his integrity, if he had a good case. He was not on trial. The rules of evidence applicable to a criminal proceeding in court were not in force. There was really nothing for a lawyer to do, unless the facts were against Mr. Colfax. In that case, and in that only, it might be useful to have the services of counsel, to obstruct the investigation and cover up the facts. Mr. Colfax, we believe, was the only accused person who appeared before the committee flanked by a lawyer. This fact was prima facie against him. Mr. Colfax, of course, told Judge Hale that his defense against the charge that he had received and deposited $1,200 of Credit Mobilier money was, that he had received $1,000 in a bank note on June 20, by mail, from Nesbitt; that Nesbitt had adopted this singular mode of remitting the money in order that it might be kept secret, etc. If Mr. Colfax then told Judge Hale of the other remittances from Nesbitt, all of them in checks, and especially if he showed Nesbitt's letters to Colfax, he would have seen that the defense was inconsistent with these additional facts, and would have advised him to keep them in the back-ground. Here is what Mr. Colfax said to the committee about the Nesbitt greenback remittance:

> About the middle of June, and very soon after the payment of Matthews, I was opening my letter mail at the breakfast table, in accordance with my usual custom, and found an envelope within another envelope post-marked New York. On opening the inner envelope I found it contained a letter written by George W. Nesbitt congratulating me most cordially and warmly on my nomination for the Vice-Presidency, and saying that the writer desired me confidentially to accept the remittance inclosed to aid me in the heavy expenses of the canvass, but wished it kept secret, as neither his family nor any one would ever know it unless I told them. Inclosed in this was a greenback, or national bank note, for $1,000. It was as gratifying as it was liberal, and, holding up the letter and bill, I asked the attention of all my family to it, and then read them the letter. The fact of sending so large a bill by mail was commented upon, and the magnitude of the gift was discussed, when Matthews remarked that it came in good time, referring to the appeal of the Chairman of the Indiana Republican Committee for money to aid in the arrangements for the canvass already in active progress. The bill was then passed around from hand to hand and examined.

Here is what Mr. Nesbitt said in his letter of July 11, three weeks later, inclosing a check for $1,000:

> New York, July 11, 1868.
> Dear Sir: Allow me to congratulate you upon the result of the first battle of the political campaign, and to predict a satisfactory result at its close. As you are about to leave your present occupation for the more active and expensive one of a canvass for the approaching election, I beg to offer the inclosed to assist in paying the cost.

Nothing about a payment three weeks earlier for the identical purpose of assisting Mr. Colfax in a contest impending, but not yet begun, which was to transfer Mr. Colfax to a higher and more expensive position! It is evident that Mr. Colfax, in his dire extremity to account for the $1,200 deposit of June 22, borrowed the idea, and almost the phraseology which he employed, from the Nesbitt letter of July 11. If Judge Hale saw this letter before the committee forced it out, he would very properly have advised Mr. Colfax not to produce it, since it contained explosive material which would blow up the whole theory of the defense. Hence we say that the attacks on Judge Hale by the brass-collar fraternity are both unjust and imbecile.—Chicago Tribune.

Another Bad Memory.

The following is Judge Sherman's letter to Legrand Lockwood, Jr., of the New York Stock Exchange, asking for $10,000 for services rendered in having a tax repealed:

> Judge's Rooms, U. S. Court for the Northern District of Ohio,
> March 27, 1872.
> Last summer, at the instance of your father, I attempted to get such a construction placed upon the revenue laws as would relieve the bankers and brokers from the payment of a heavy tax. There was a partial success, but such a boasting, or rather publicity, was given to it that the attention of the Secretary of the Treasury was called to it, and he forbade the order to be issued. There was then no remedy but in Congress, and so suggested to your father. He then wrote me the inclosed letter. On the authority and in consideration of what he said in it, I went to work and had an interview with Mr. Boutwell and with John Sherman, Chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, with Mr. Garfield, and other prominent members of Congress, and the result was, that it became the policy of the Administration to repeal not only the tax in question, but the stamp and other taxes. I think this result was brought about by discussions raised and influences used by me. The taxes are not yet repealed, but they are certain to be within the next sixty days. If your father were living there would be no necessity for asking about it; but, as the agreement was made through him, I fear there may arise a misunderstanding, and therefore ask you to inquire into it and ascertain whether the Committee of the Stock Exchange still recognize the contract. If they do, it is all right, and I will continue my labors. Let me hear from you at your earliest convenience. Please preserve the letter. Another thing—please inquire what is the selling-value of the stock of the Central Pacific railroad of California, and let me know.
>
> Yours truly, C. T. Sherman.

In this letter, Judge Sherman asserts that he did each of the following things:

1. That he so influenced the subordinate officers of the Treasury that they construed the Revenue law to relieve bankers and brokers from the payment of a heavy tax, but that Mr. Boutwell, coming to hear of it, reversed the order.

2. That he then suggested an appeal to Congress, and received a written promise of $10,000.

3. "In consideration of" this promise "I went to work and had an interview with Mr. Boutwell, and with John Sherman, Chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, with Mr. Garfield, and other prominent members of Congress," and the policy was adopted of repealing the tax.

4. He claims that this result "was brought about by discussions raised, and influences used by me."

This was the statement made by him when he was demanding the $10,000 fee promised for preparing the change in the law. Now, when brought to face the brokers of whom he demanded the money, he states on oath:

1. That he never sought to influence anybody to have the law construed differently.

2. That he never went to work to induce Congress to change the law.

3. That he never, by word or letter, exchanged views with Mr. Boutwell, Mr. Sherman, or Mr. Garfield on the subject.

4. That he never sought by discussions or otherwise to influence legislative action on the subject, the change in the policy of the Administration was in no wise due to him.

When a man holding the high position of a Judge of the United States Court thus places himself before the public in making broad and emphatic assertions of fact as a reason why he should be paid $10,000, and then upon oath as broadly and emphatically declares that the statements in his letter were false in every particular, there can be but one judgment, and that is, that his seat on the Federal bench should be vacated instantly.

For bold and unblushing falsehood this case of Judge Sherman's will compare with that of Colfax, Patterson, Caldwell, and Pomeroy. Judge Sherman is his own accuser. Swearing that the statements in his letter were false merely fastens upon him the disgrace of making a demand for services never rendered, and of fabrication of official evidence to support the fraudulent demand.—Tribune.

More Pomeroyism in Alabama! Mr. Grant's Postmaster at Mobile, a person of the name of Moulton, is now discovered to have purchased the office for the sum of $6,000, "placed where it would do the most good" in the hands of Congressmen and others having the ear of the President and influence with Senators. And, worse still, the $6,000 was raised by the virtuous Moulton by hypothecating $10,000 worth of postage stamps—Moulton being at the time in possession of the office. The compensation of the Postmaster at Mobile is limited by law to $4,000 a year, yet such are the conveniences for official stealing by Federal officeholders in the "reconstructed" States that this patriotic Republican party rogue could afford to pay $6,000 for the appointment. He is one of the interesting pets of the interesting Senator Spencer, who is a compatriot of Pomeroy, Harlan, Caldwell, and Patterson in his mode of getting office.

A question upon which public curiosity is beginning to be somewhat excited is this: How many Republican party "leaders," and "representative men," and "statesmen" are there left, of whom it may be said they are probably free from bribery, theft, perjury, or some other form of crime or corruption.—Chicago Times.

A Horrible Story.

Some years ago there was a well known engineer, whose name is not given for good and sufficient reasons, who ran a passenger train on one of the most popular and most traveled roads that runs out of Indianapolis. At a curtain place on the road, every night for about a week, as the passenger train run by this engineer came thundering along, it was certain to be thrown from the track by obstructions placed there. Several of these mishaps to the train caused loss of life, and the company was becoming considerably alarmed, and the ability of the engineer was becoming seriously questioned. One night, as the unfortunate train was nearing the fatal spot, the engineer, who had been sitting grum and silent at the throttle, turned to the fireman and said, "If this train jumps the track at this place to-night, you follow me; don't stop for anything, but keep close after me. Somebody has been throwing this train off the track, and I'm going to catch him." When the train arrived at the usual place it struck a misplaced rail and was banked. The engineer, closely followed by the fireman, jumped from the engine and ran into a corn field, and started up a man that lay concealed there. Upon bringing the culprit back to the wreck the enraged passengers wanted to lynch him, but the engineer, a stern, cold, determined man, prevented them, saying he would take charge of him, and through the intercession of the conductor the trembling wretch was left in charge of the engineer. The train was righted and was soon speeding on its way. The prisoner, who had confessed his fiendishness, had been seated on the engine, and the fireman placed beside him as a guard. When the train was on a smooth piece of track, bowling along at a speed of twenty-five miles an hour, the engineer beckoned the fireman to stand out of the way. The fireman stepped aside and the engineer picked up a round stick of wood and struck the criminal such a blow upon the head that it completely stunned him. He then caught the quivering form of the poor wretch, and, opening the furnace doors, threw his body into the hot, seething hell of flame. The doors were shut, the train rattled along, and never, until upon his death-bed the engineer confessed the act, was it ascertained what had been the fate of the fiend who had been in the habit of throwing the train off the track.—Exchange.

A Mermaid.

The Los Angeles Express says that a genuine mermaid is now on exhibition in that place, having been caught in the Pacific waters a few weeks since, and embalmed by a physician of San Diego. It is thus described: "The eyes, in large sockets, were pricked to let out the water in the embalming process. The mouth is very broad, with twenty-eight curved and singularly shaped teeth. The nose is an abomination of the Roman and the snub. The brow is heavily indented with heavy brain lopes; long and broad ears adorn the queer-looking head, and short, wooly hair covers the head and sides of the face. The cerebellum and Adam's apple are very prominent. The arms are long and terminate in long claws, consisting of four fingers and a thumb, with the sharpest of nails. There are eleven ribs extending around the body and meeting at the breast. Here the fishy portion of the thing begins. It is covered with scales, the spine having the dorsal fin, and the fish continuing in the usual development to the tip of the tail.

Another Vesuvius Horror.

The accident last September, by which an Englishman and American lost their lives while being lowered by ropes into the crater of Vesuvius, had a counterpart on July 15, when a Belgian named Le Mirx and a Swiss named Schmidt met a similar horrible fate. These foolhardy tourists insisted on being lowered, and in spite of remonstrances of the guides, took hold of the loops and swung over the gloomy void. The guides' last warning to them was not to venture inward. Whether they were smothered with the fumes of sulphur, or, missing a step, were hurled into the abyss, nobody will ever know. Contrary to the advice of the guides, they let go the looped ropes and ventured into the crater's recesses. The tourists above cried out, but no response came. The guides were lowered repeatedly, and several of the excursionists went as far as the ropes would allow, in search of their comrades, but in vain. This is the third disaster of this nature within the past ten years.

Explosion of a Flour Mill.—A flour mill is reported to have exploded at Glasgow, Scotland, recently. The cause of the explosion is stated to have been, that two of the revolving mill-stones, on account of the accidental stoppage of the supply of grain, rubbed against each other and threw out sparks. These sparks ignited the fine particles of dust diffused through the air in the exhaust conduits, the rapid combustion of which caused a high temperature and expansion, which resulted in an explosion.

T. C. MAYS, PUBLISHER.

WANTED, $400,000.

Likewise the Postmaster who Carried It Off—What a Thrifty and Saving Young Man Can Accomplish.

[Granville (N. Y.) Cor. New York World.]

The facts of the life that I am giving as briefly and tersely as possible have startled this section of the State far and wide.

Last Friday Thomas Cree—commonly known hereabouts as "Tom" Cree—was put in bankruptcy at Buffalo. Born on an island of Lake Champlain, spending his early days in a poor house, cared for in boyhood by a kind benefactor, he now turns up as one of the boldest adventurers whose deeds have ever been recorded in this State. Mr. J. M. Northrup, of North Greenville, was the foster-parent of Tom Cree, brought him up in his own family, and amid surroundings that were pleasant and pure. Even as a lad Cree developed a speculative spirit, and finally became widely known as a dealer in "horse gold" by selling cheap imitation gold watches at horse races and fairs. He developed as a speculator after several attempts to continue in a fixed and permanent business, and soon by the boldness of his transactions and the prodigality of his expenditures became widely known as a man of wealth. This brought influence and increased business, and in the end made Tom Cree one of the foremost men in this section of Washington county. Carrying out his operations with still bolder endeavors he announced, a few years ago, that he was going West as a banker. He took with him the fruits of his extensive speculations (in which he had made much wealth), and really established several banks in Iowa—one at Belle Plains, another at Tama City, and still another at Nevada City. These operations only improved his financial standing with his creditors here, and his borrowing operations were almost unlimited. He is alleged to have received heavy loans on forged and fictitious mortgages. One of these was on an extensive tract of land in Iowa, which an investigation showed was the property of Oakes Ames. To another bank in this section he presented a mortgage for $10,000 on an entire section of land in Iowa. Developments just made indicate that no such section (no such number) exists in that State. While in the confidence of our bankers he represented that Henry L. Smith, a distinguished Western financier and capitalist, was his partner, and so completely had he won the confidence of his numerous friends that his story was believed, and the indorsement of the mythical "Henry L. Smith" brought thousands of dollars. When the notes of Cree came due he presented others, and when these finally went to protest he made such representations that a settlement was delayed until he could hear from his "agents" in the West. On small sums borrowed from farmers and others he paid extravagant rates of interest, frequently returned the principal some time before it was due, pretending that he had too much money on hand. Winning the confidence of the leaders in this way he would, it is said, on the next occasion borrow all that would be given him, and then payment was not thought of. He was, four years ago, thought to have been worth a quarter of a million of dollars, and he borrowed money to pay the tax on a pretended enormous income, and he was then rated by commercial agencies as "A No. 1." He was for years postmaster, and made this position conducive to his speculative plans. Incredulous ones were told that if Tom Cree was good enough to be postmaster he ought to be trusted. Within a year the bubble has burst, and to-day hundreds of rich men are made poorer, some of them almost penniless; and hundreds, yes thousands, of poor men as well as widows and others, find their little bank accounts in the hands of an absconding speculator. The banks are heavy losers by forged notes, mortgages, etc. The banks at Poultney, Vt., Whitehall, Granville, Fort Edward, and, it is said, one New York bank, suffer. The losses to banks alone foot up fully $250,000, and not less than $150,000 is due to farmers and others. His accounts as postmaster are now being investigated by Detective Spencer, of the Postal Department, and it is generally believed that they will be found in a surprising condition. A peculiar and distressing feature of the case is the fact that his early benefactor, Mr. J. H. Northrup, of this place, who had always reposed implicit confidence in Cree, is almost ruined financially. The operations of Cree have swept away a handsome competency which Mr. Northrup had a few years ago. He was a heavy indorser for Cree, and stuck to him till the last moment, saying, in the end, when the full wreck of his fortune was revealed, "Well, Tom, you have at last sent me where I took you from." Within a year the allegation was made that Cree had taken to drink, and that before his sudden disappearance he was evidently endeavoring to drown his sorrows in the temporary oblivion of intoxication. It has been asked what became of the immense sums of money which he received. His fast life consumed everything. His personal expenses exceeded $25,000 per annum. He had the fastest horses in the county, and was the most liberal man in all things. He was known by all, and liked by all for his openhandedness and liberality on all occasions. Some time ago he erected a costly monument in his lot in the cemetery—so costly and magnificent that it was an object of attraction to visitors from the city. Cree is supposed to be out West, speculating again. He is about thirty-five years of age, light build, blue eyes, and not of an impressive appearance. It is reported that he was seen last week in Essex county, where he was traveling under the suggestive name of "Shift." The correctness of this is doubted. In conclusion, I need only state that no event in this section has ever created so much feeling, nor has ever any other experience been so costly to the people nor a better lesson taught. The credulous creditors of Cree acknowledge this with shame.

THERE is no less than 1,100,000 lives insured in the United States at an average of about $2,700 each. This vast business is divided chiefly among seventy odd companies.

The South African Diamond Fields.

We quote the following from an interesting article in Scribner's for March, on "Life in the New Diamond Diggings" of South Africa:

The population of the diggings is rather mixed, but on the whole well disposed and law-abiding. The English element predominates, yet a good number of Americans are here, some Germans, and a sprinkling of Frenchmen, Italians, and Spaniards. The Dutch boers of course predominate in the surrounding country and are numerous at the diggings. As a rule they are not favorites; the English especially hate them heartily, and their regard is returnek with interest. The Germans are more apt to be diamond dealers than diamond diggers. Native laborers, Kaffirs, Korannas, and Hottentots swarm at the fields. The "Zulus" are the most trustworthy, and the fresher they are from the up-country Kraals, the better. The native women about the camps are chiefly Hottentots and Korannas. They find ample and profitable employment as washer-women, household servants, etc.

A large number of trades and professions are represented in the camps; carpenters, tent-makers, and blacksmiths find constant employment at remunerative rates. Butchers make rapid fortunes, the demand for meat being enormous. Bakers and confectioners find quick market for their wares at exorbitant prices. Photographers are already on the ground, and Du Toit's Pan has a matrimonial agent! There are also doctors, lawyers, watchmakers, and jewelers. Hotel-keepers, store-keepers and auctioneers are plentiful, the last finding all the business they want, and as they get ten per cent. of the sales their profits are very large.

The hotels do a rushing business; three meals a day are furnished; breakfast at 8, 2s.; tiffin (lunch) at 1, 2s.; dinner at 6, 2s. 6d. A bed costs 2s. or 2s. 6d., a "shake-down" 1s. or 1s. 6d. Some diggers board and lodge regularly at the hotels, but it is a bad practice. The food supplied is abundant but of small variety—mutton and beef, venison, a few vegetables, white and brown bread of indifferent quality, and plenty of tea and coffee. There is no style—the rough digger in his shirt-sleeves elbows the gorgeously-arrayed diamond dealer, or the clergyman of the camp—one man is as good as another, and all are free and easy.

Sunday is generally observed as a day of rest, and the churches are well attended. The Church of England has regular chaplains at all the camps, with stated places of worship at all the older stations. The Methodists are well represented, and so are the Roman Catholics. The boers are generally members of the Dutch Reformed Church, but their religious feeling is not apt to be very fine, or strong enough to prevent their being what the Yankee diggers call "mean cusses." Collections have been made for the erection of permanent church-buildings, and substantial structures are everywhere taking the place of the insufficient and unstable church tents heretofore in use.

Amusements are well provided for. We have already a Theater Royal (at Du Toit's Pan), where appreciative and paying audiences are regularly gathered. A grand ballad concert, with the comedy of "Delicate Ground" and the farce of "Box and Cox," was the first performance, by gentlemen amateurs. The price of seats is usually 2s. 6d., 3s. 6d., or 4s. for reserved seats. A company of actors and vocalists make regular tours of the diggings and find it profitable. We have had a circus stationed here for some time, and it was well filled with merry diggers. Billiard-tables are numerous in every camp, and several bowling-alleys are doing a roaring business.

The Unwashed Prince.

One day the Crown Prince of Germany heard an uproar in his nursery. He stepped in to inquire, and the nurse said: "Prince Henry refuses to be washed." "What, my son, will you not be washed and made clean?" "No, I won't be washed," he petulantly responded; "I don't like to be washed. Let me be." "Well," said Fritz, "if that is his choice, let him be, he need not be washed!" Away he bounded with great glee at having conquered the nurse, and getting his own way. By and by the nurse and Prince Henry took a ride through the Thier Garten and streets of Berlin. He soon noticed that the sentries stationed all over the city did not give them the customary salute. "Why don't the soldiers present arms, nurse?" "I cannot tell," she said; "we are dressed correctly, are in the royal carriage, and I cannot guess why they refuse us the honors." At eventide his papa asked Prince Henry if he had enjoyed his ride to-day. "No, papa, not a bit." "Not a bit? What can the matter be?" "Why, papa, not a soldier recognized or saluted us in driving all round the city, and we had on uniform, and rode in the royal carriage." "Ah!" he says to the lad; "soldiers did not salute you, eh! Well, you must understand, my boy, that no Prussian soldier will present arms to an unwashed Prince!"

A GOAT ON THE RAMPAGE.—A retired clergyman sends an account of a little affair that happened in his place. It appears that there was a young woman, a fine-spirited girl, engaged at a wash-tub, opposite an open door. Just behind her was a young man, as is generally the case; and in the yard was an old buck that was allowed the freedom of the premises, which is not always the case, we are glad to say. Well, this old buck came to the door and looked in, and the young man, going behind the young woman, pointed his finger straight at the buck, and the old fellow, recognizing at once the pressing character of this mute invitation, put down his head and dashed forward, and the miserable man stepped to one side and fled, and the young woman, unconscious of the arrangements, received the awful shock without warning, and passed over the tub, and the air for an instant appeared to be full of slippers, and wet clothes, and soap, and hot water, and suds. And the next moment that goat came flying out of the door at a dreadful speed, bald the whole length of his spine, and with a wild look in his eye. And for an hour afterward he stood back of the barn, scratching his chin, and trying to recall all the circumstances in the unfortunate affair.—Danbury News.

FARM AND GARDEN.

Fattening Cattle in Illinois.

Most Illinois feeders give their fattening cattle all the corn they will eat, whether ground, husked, scraped, or on the stalk—shock corn. The grain is the main article of diet, hay or corn fodder—"roughness"—a relish, instead of the reversed order, that makes the grain a sort of dessert.

John A. Alexander's plan is said to have been to feed the cattle down with corn. This otherwise wasteful method becomes an economical one, when the cattle are followed by hogs—from one to two to the steer—where it is practicable. By properly regulating the number of hogs, they will clean up the waste almost entirely; and all agree, I believe, that the hogs do better with this system than any other. We grind corn for cattle and steam it for hogs; this plan removes the necessity for either.

We grind corn for cattle that they may assimilate it better—get out of it more of the fat there is in it. But so long as we catch in one where the other misses, what is the loss? The thing is to get the corn into fat; whether beef or pork is immaterial, for, on food, they are usually about the same price. Cattle fed on corn do gain rapidly, and the grain they void is ready cooked for the pigs that feed themselves. A great saving of labor is thus effected; shelling corn, hauling to and from the mill, to say nothing of toll, cooking for hogs, and feeding them. Every man can estimate the cost for himself; but "many a little makes a muckle," and the economy is important in proportion to the extent of business done.

In conversation with a large farmer and feeder of Pike county, Ill., the other evening, I asked if they had never tried grinding for themselves with the iron crushers. Certainly, he replied, there is one of them laid up on nearly every farm in our section of country. I don't know of anybody who is using them, it costs so much, with labor at twenty to twenty-five dollars per month, to grind for a large lot of stock; and, besides, as we feed, the cattle grind for nothing, and we get all out of the corn there is in it—if a little less beef, a little more pork, usually worth about the same, so we lose nothing after all, you see.—Michigan Farmer.

Meteorology in Agriculture.

The value of the barometer to the farmer in hay and grain harvest has frequently been demonstrated. Now we are to have an important branch of the public service employed in aid of agriculture. The powers of the Signal Office have been enlarged by the act of Congress of June 10, 1873, and extended to the more immediate interests of agriculture. Appropriation is made by that act for the expenses of storm signals, by telegraph, announcing the probable approach and force of storms throughout the United States, for the benefit of agriculture as will as commerce. To aid in the accomplishment of the object, the Chief Signal Officer has issued a circular to agricultural and horticultural societies, inviting any suggestions or recommendations to perfect the system now established, and to render it more directly useful to the agricultural interests, and suggesting that the best mode in which such societies can operate with the Signal Officer in the matter is by the appointment of permanent committees to confer occasionally with the Chief Signal Officer, and to take, in conjunction with him, such steps as may be desirable. A large number of societies have already responded to the request of the Signal Officer, and appointed the committees as proposed. It is not to be understood that these committees are to take meteorological observations or make reports for the signal service, their only object being to obtain their practical cooperation through correspondence and conference.

Relative Profits of Wheat, Oats, and Barley.

In the States east of Ohio and north of Maryland, the growing of wheat has in most localities given way to the raising of other crops, the sale of which will buy more flour than the land will produce. This is of course less the case toward the western edge of the section mentioned, and very notably increases toward the coast, where, as in Massachusetts, the annual yield of breadstuffs is only a fraction of the quantity consumed by the population. But it is somewhat surprising to find that California, with its vaunted advantages for wheat-growing, should show a decided tendency in the same direction.

From published statements before us, it appears the area in wheat in that State yields only an average of nineteen bushels to the acre, while barley gives thirty-five bushels, and oats forty-five bushels per acre. The cash value of the yield per acre for each of the three crops is set down respectively at $18.24, $21.84 and $26.90, from which it will be seen that barley yields in dollars nearly one-fifth, and oats nearly one-half more than wheat for a given average.

Six-sevenths of the export of barley from California is to Peru, the Orient, British Columbia, Chili, and Japan. The export of oats is chiefly to Australia, British Columbia, Japan, China, Mexico, and New Zealand. These facts are suggestive not only with reference to the future of agriculture on the Pacific coast, but with regard to the probable direction of that commercial enterprise which sooner or later must dot the South Sea with the ships and steamers of a great and varied traffic.

How to Make the Crops More Profitable.

But how are we to so utilize the products of our farms as to render them profitable and aid in their fertilization? To sell corn at 25 cents a bushel, and haul it to market, will not pay very large profits. We must then adopt some economical and easy transforming process, by which we may realize higher prices for our corn. The cheapest and the easiest managed farm manufactory that I can suggest is first-class cattle, horses, mules and hogs. With these for our machinery, corn and grain for our fuel, and industry and intelligence for our engineers, we will convert our corn and grass into more profitable and marketable products that will give us one dollar per bushel for our corn, and twenty dollars per ton for our hay, and in this way we will utilize farm products and fertilizing material, and be able to return to the soil a large proportion of the nutrient materials abstracted by the crops. If we will make specialties of fine horses and cattle on our high lands, and of hogs and mules on our low lands, we will find that corn and grass are very profitable crops, but do not feed your corn and hay to scrub stock.—Northwestern Farmer.

Drains.

As a rule, ditches or drains no more than twenty inches in depth are insufficient except to carry off surface water. No drain will be quite effectual unless at least three feet deep. As a rule, also, no straw should be put into drains or covered ditches, in any way, either as covering or filling. It attracts rats, mice and other vermin, and their burrowings are often injurious. With these exceptions, the ditch described might work pretty well for a few years, but on figuring up the cost of all the work, gathering materials included, it will most likely be found to be equal to a good tile drain, which would last twenty years, and might last fifty. If this is so, tile is evidently cheaper.

Curious Facts About Water.

The extent to which water mingles with bodies apparently the most solid, is very wonderful. The glittering opal, which beauty wears as an ornament, is only flint and water.

Of every twelve hundred tons of earth which a landholder has in his estate, four hundred are water. The snow-capped summits of Snowden and Ben Nevis have many million tons of water in a solidified form. In every plaster-of-Paris statue which an Italian carries through our streets for sale, there is one pound of water to every four pounds of chalk.

The air we breathe contains five grains of water to each cubic foot of its bulk. The potatoes and the turnips which are boiled for our dinner have, in their raw state, the one seventy-five per cent., the other ninety per cent. of water. If a man weighing ten stone were squeezed flat in a hydraulic press, seven and a half stone of water would run out, and only two and a half of dry residue remain. A man is, chemically speaking, forty-five pounds of carbon and nitrogen, diffused through five and a half pailfuls of water.

In plants we find water thus mingling no less wonderfully. A sunflower evaporates one and a quarter pints of water a day, and a cabbage about the same quantity. A wheat-plant exhales, in a hundred and seventy-two days, about one hundred thousand grains of water. An acre of growing wheat, on this calculation, draws and passes out about ten tons of water per day. The sap of plants is the medium through which this mass of fluid is conveyed. It forms a delicate pump, up which the watery particles run with the rapidity of a swift stream. By the action of the sap, various properties may be communicated to the growing plant. Timber in France is, for instance, dyed by various colors being mixed with water, and poured over the roots of the tree. Dahlias are also colored by a similar process.

Good Rules for Emergencies.

Prof. Wilder, of Cornell University, gives these short rules of action in cases of accident. It would not be a bad thing to cut this out and carry them in one's pocket-book, or, better yet, commit them to memory:

For dust in the eyes, avoid rubbing, dash water into them; remove cinders, etc., with the round point of a pencil.

Remove insects from the ear by tepid water; never put a hard instrument into your ear.

If any artery is cut, compress below.

If choked, get upon all fours and cough.

Smother a fire with carpets, etc.; water will often spread burning oil and increase danger. Before passing through smoke, take a full breath, and then stoop low; but if carbonic is suspected, walk erect.

Suck poisoned wounds, or cut out the part without delay; hold the wounded part as long as can be borne to a hot coal or the end of a cigar.

In case of poisoning, excite vomiting by tickling the throat, or by warm mustard.

For acid poisons, give alkalies; for alkaline poisons, give acids; white of an egg is good in most cases.

For apoplexy, raise the head and body; for fainting, lie flat.

If in the water, float on the back, with the nose and mouth projecting.

For slight burns, dip the part in cold water; if the skin is destroyed, cover with varnish.

A Hint.

To secure oneself from the danger of taking cold, nothing is surer than to bathe the feet every day. If the pores of the skin are closed in any part of the body, that part is either unnaturally hot or cold. If the circulation is vigorous, it overheats because it cannot escape through these 'scape pipes of the system. If the circulation is sluggish, if there is but little vitality, the blood of the veins stagnates, and the blood of the arteries, which carries heat and life, cannot get there; hence the first step in keeping the feet warm is to keep the pores open. The pores of the soles of the feet are much the largest in the whole body; hence the necessity of keeping the pores in the soles always open. That can only be done in one way. Keep the feet clean; clean away the concretions of perspirations, oil and dust, which are always accumulating, and seal the tops of these pores, the chimneys of the system, hermetically. Each morning, before you dress, put both feet in cold water for a second or two; they need go no deeper than the toes, then wipe dry. This bath ought to be attended to by all persons of sedentary habits. Many have got rid of the discomfort of cold feet in the way described. If persons have no strength nor vitality, this, as other methods, will fail.

ONE EDITOR NOT IN A HURRY.—A Hartford subscriber writes that he is just recovering from small-pox, and will be on in a few days to renew his subscription. We hope he won't mind a little thing like that. We will send the paper and wait for the money. We will wait cheerfully. We ain't of that avaricious kind of people who will grab as for very life. We despise such things. There's no earthly reason for his coming on; we will wait.—Danbury News.

CAN a pretty woman be a plain cook?

The Secret of Keeping Good Health.

The Springfield Union says: Mr. George Catlin, the lately deceased American painter, has left us a thin octavo of less than a hundred pages, entitled "The Breath of Life," in which he develops a theory of health formed and matured by him during his long sojourn among our Western Indian tribes, of which the above motto is the key. Finding no cases of infant mortality or physical deformity among our aborigines, and satisfied from personal observation that this has not resulted from any custom of killing off the puny and unpromising births, he set to work to ascertion the causes of this exemption from those ills of civilized life, and thinks he has done it by discovering that almost always by day, and uniformly by night, the Indians keep their mouths shut. They have the universal impression that this is essential to health and good physical development; and they form their babies to the habit of breathing through their nostrils when asleep, by pinching their mouths closely together. This, and the pure air of unconfined lives, is Mr. Catlin's explanation of the facts which so strongly impressed him in contrast with the condition of things which he had left behind among the whites. He himself went among these tribes a confirmed invalid; but learning their method of nourishing the lungs with the atmosphere, he forced himself into the same practices, and regained a state of comfortable and long protracted vigor.

His treatise is packed with instances, and is profusely illustrated with the oddest facial contortions and contrasts of his pencil. His idea is that the apertures of the nose are formed for the express purpose of cleaning the air of its impurities, thus fitting it to be taken into the respiratory organs. If taken through the mouth all these impurities go into the lungs, and breed all kinds of disease. Nightmare and unrefreshing sleep are caused by breathing through the mouth. Snorers generally have this habit. These people do not know that their mouths are open, for they shut them instantly on awaking. But the dryness of the mouth and throat tells the story, as the saliva thus is exhausted. Sleeping on the back is not injurious or unpleasant if the mouth is closed. The Indians sleep thus, with their heads raised so as to incline the teeth to meet. No pillows is a bad usage, letting the head sink to a horizontal line with the body; but the fashionable square pillows are also very hurtful, which elevates the shoulder with the head. Babies should never be kept closely to their mothers during the night, the smothering warmth inducing the habit of opening the mouth to breathe. Nor should their faces be covered in sleep for the same reason. They do not need warmth as much as free, fresh air. The Indians understand all about this, and in their native separation from the whisky drinking of their white neighbors, they would seem to have been about as exempt from bodily ailments as the wild animals of their prairies.

Mr. Catlin very likely has carried his pet notion fully as far as it will bear when he says that curvature of the spine, idiocy, deafness, polypus in the nose, malformation and neuralgia, and three-fourths of the physical deformities and premature deaths, from conception to old age, are caused, or greatly aggravated, by these wrong modes of sleeping.

The Washington Monument.

The Washington Monument question is again up. Grace Greenwood, in her letter to the New York Times, says:

They are agitating the subject of again grappling with the Washington Monument. I half wish they would let it alone—and leave us something of the past untouched by the contractor and the jobbist—something for the mad waves of improvement to dash against in vain. Why carry it up to the heaven-daring height first contemplated? Washington will not come down and pose himself on it—and we are hardly the people to utilize it, as the French did the Vendome Column—as a favorite point for the sublime self-destruction of unfortunate poets and lovers and ruined gamesters and politicians. Here, where the poet and lover are not, and the gamester and politician are one, there is little need of it. Lord Bacon says: "The way to great place is by a winding stair," and from that "great place" our political idols fall fast and far enough. Lured by the three arch tempters of the age, alcohol, ambition and avarice, they one after another cast themselves down and are dashed to pieces, leaving us to mourn and marvel

That we can call these delicate creatures ours,
But not their appetites.

An unknown patriot, who vails his light under the signature of "M," writes to the Chronicle opposing the completion of the monument on the original plan as too costly a piece of patriotism, and proposes, instead, to finish it off with "an appropriate entablature, and upon its top to provide for fire that shall never be extinguished while the Republic shall exist."

Here is economy for you!

Mr. M. also proposes that this perpetual fire shall he "watched and tended by a few war-worn veterans from year to year, and from century to century." It is a grand idea, but veterans, though prodigies of longevity, will die at last; even Revolutionary pensioners are giving out. Then what will be done? Must we have a new war to keep the monument in veterans? or shall we establish an order of vestal virgins, and look to New England to supply the sacred fire tenders? She will respond generously as she always does in a patriotic emergency.

The Republican Feeling in Europe.

Foreign letters announce that the first symptoms of a republic have appeared in the north of Europe. Sweden has just refused to vote the King the cash necessary for a magnificent coronation fete, and one of the Deputies, Hedlen by name, indulged in an address pertinent to the occasion, which might have emanated from an English agitator. He objected to the proposed pageant on the ground that it was not worth while for Sweden to make itself ridiculous. A republican feeling is also said to be growing gradually in Norway and Denmark.

George Sand on the Dead Emperor.

The Paris Temps, says the correspondent of the Pall Mall Gazette, prints a letter from George Sand, dated Jan. 10, containing some remarkable passages concerning Napoleon III. After remarking that three years ago the Emperor had already ceased to exist, the authoress goes on to say:

"The war with Prussia was not even an allusion, for he was unable to conceal from himself that the specter of defeat had appeared, and was hurrying him fatally to destruction. * * * In the days of Ham, by his correspondence and his other writings, he showed himself a young man without energy dominated by a powerful dream, a dream conceived in infancy, and kept alive by those who surrounded him, and to whose influence he submitted with the resignation of lassitude. Without real instruction, he showed great intelligence, and had the rudiments and even the flashes of genius rather literary than philosophic, rather philosophic than political. Failing health, vitality tottering, unequal, and at times suspended by the reflux of emotions and stifled pain. However, no bitterness, no rancor, very little anger; too contemplative to be passionate; amiable, loving, made to love in private life; disinterested with regard to himself—see what formidable contrasts—capable of the greatest political crimes, because his notion of the rights of humanity differs from ours. When I spoke to him, when I saw him at the Elysee twice a week, I was completely deceived, and believing myself fooled by him, would not see him again. I quitted Paris, and failed to keep a rendezvous he had given me. No one said, 'Le Roi a failli attendre!' but 'L'Empereur a attendu!' But I continued to write to him when I hoped to save a victim, to comment on his answers, and to observe all his acts. I convinced myself he had no intention of fooling any one; he fooled all the world and himself. He believed what he said, but regarding himself as the sole means of salvation, as the instrument invested with an inevitable mission, not feeling the necessary physical and moral energy, but reckoning upon them in the fatal arrangement of circumstances, he adopted all the ideas which were suggested to him under the form of oracles. Go on, he said; and if such a thing be impossible, I will try another, and if it be bad, it will teach me. The exercise of absolute power aiding him, this habit of playing heads or tails with events became a monomania, and his tranquil and patient fatalism assumed all the appearance of strength and cleverness."

In speaking of the Emperor's appearance, George Sand says that all she saw of the caged eagle of Ham was the cage—something restless, constrained, timid, which toned down into an expression of sadness and tenderness. Of his natural disposition she remarks that he was terribly persecuted, and that a pretended or false reason of state struck with impotency the man of feeling, who deplores in principle the means employed to give him power. He appeared to ignore the excesses and ready to disavow them. He disavowed nothing, and accepted with cowardly pain the murders in the streets and the persecution throughout France. George Sand thinks Napoleon III. deserves neither great praise nor great blame. He was neither a monster nor an idiot. He had several good qualities.

"He had also a dream of French grandeur which did not belong to a sound understanding, nor was it that of a second-rate mind. Of a truth, France would be too much disgraced if she had submitted for twenty years to the will of a driveler working in his own interest. One would be obliged to despair of her. The fact is that she took this meteor for a star; this silent dreamer for an astute politician. Then when she saw him succumb under disasters which she should have forseen and prevented she took him for a coward. He was no coward; he had a cool courage and I believe that he did not cling to life. He felt himself crushed; the illusion of his role was gone, perhaps he was weary of himself."

English Reminiscences of the Crimean War.

A leading London journal, writing on the subject of the probability of war with Russia, and the diplomacy of the St. Petersburg Government, publishes the following:

It is a common opinion, almost an established fact, that the Emperor Nicholas would never have placed himself in absolute and pronounced hostility to England in 1854, if he had not been led to believe that she really did not mean fighting for Turkey. If so, the belief in our excessive peacefulness of temper was a grave misfortune both for us and for him. Whether the Russian Government has up to this time been guided by such arguments into supposing we shall never step from our gates to beat off the foe that saps up to them, but shall remain content in the reflection that we can repulse actual assault whenever it comes, this, of course, is a matter of which we have no knowledge. But we are strongly inclined think that the Russians have long gone on in the enjoyment of that supposition; for they had every reason to rely upon it, and even within a few months from to-day have been encouraged to pursue a steady policy of encroachment toward a position from which they could largely control the action of England in any matter of dispute whatever.

THE statement is made that only one of every nine of the 95,000 Protestant ministers in the United States have been able to provide for their families in the way of life insurance, and of these not more than half can pay the necessary premiums.

ANNE GIOVANOLI, aged 102 years, lately died in the Grisons of Switzerland, where it is said not to be unusual to see men aged between 80 and 90 years playing billiards.

New York has a man without muscles. He was a fare dealer, and about four years ago he was compelled to relinquish the practice of a lucrative profession, by a paralysis of the right fore-finger. The nerve cell (in the spinal column,) which supplied the joint, had died from overwork, and the muscles of the finger gradually passed away through disuse—atrophied the doctors call it. The dead cell in the spinal marrow, in some way, by contact, or sympathy, destroyed its neighbor, which controlled the same finger on the left hand. The atrophy extended over both hands, up the arms, to the chest shoulders and neck. At the present time there is not a muscle in those portions of the man's body. The arms hang useless and absolutely fleshless—mere skin and bone. The intercostal muscles are gone, and the man can make no respiratory movements requiring their action. The neck is œsiphagus, trachea and the spinal column clad in skin, and that is all, the processes of the latter, standing out as plainly as that in a skeleton. The Head unsupported hangs down on the chest, as though it were merely tied there.

To Young Men.

The young manwho has the ambition to make a great noise, in the world should learn boiler making.—he can make more noise at that trade, than any other business he can get into.

If he believes a man should "strike for gages," he learn black-smithing, especially if he is very good at "blowing.'

If he could imbrace a profession in which he could rise rapidly, he should become anæronaut. He couldn't find anything that would be better "for high."

He certainly could do a staving, and (perhaps a starving business) at the couper trade.

If he believes in "measures, not men, he will embard in the tailoring business.

If the one great object of nis life is to make money, he should get a position in tae United States Mint.

If he is a punctual sort of chap, and anxious to be "on time," he should put his hands to watch-making.

If he belives it to be the cheif end of man, to have his business largely "felt," why of course he will be a hatter.

If he wants to get at the "root of a thing," he will become a dentist—although if he does, he will often be very fond of "looking down in the mouth."

If a man is a burgler at the best, he should become a physician, and then he will not have any of his bad work thrown upon his hands. It is generally out of sight.

Should he not incline to high living but preser blain board, the carpenter trade will suit him, he can plain board enough at that.

If he is needy and well bred, he will be right at home at the baker trade.

He shouldn't become a cigar maker, if he does, his work will all end in smoke.

The young man who enjoyes plenty of company and always ready to scrape acquaintance, will find the barbar business a very convenial pursuit.

The quickest way for him to ascend to the top round of his calling is to become a hod carier.

A veay "grave yound man might flourish as an undertaker.

Don't learn chairmaking, for no matter how well he may please his customers, they will soon get down on his work,

And don't become an umberella maker, for their trade is very soon "used up."

If he would have his work touch the head of the nation we know of no way he could sooner accomplish his object, than by making combs.

The young man who would have the fruits of his labor brought before the eyes of the people, will become an optican. The work being easily seen through, cannot be very difficult to learn.

A man can always wake a scent in the perfumery business.

If a young man is a paragon of honor, truthfulness and sobriety, has never swear a profane word, and has twenty thousand dollars he has no use for, then he should immediately start—a newspaper.

TROUBLE.—You are going to have your troubles as well as your pleasures A man is not worth a snap that has not had trouble. You can subdue selfishness without a struggle. You can restrain pride without a conflict. You cannot expect to go through life without bearing a burden. But you are going to have help under circumstances that will redeem you of these things. You are going to experience more victories than defeates. Your sufferings will only be here and there in little spots in a great wide field of peace and joy.

A man of Iowa Falls, who has a limekiln, asserts that with wood and corn in about equal parts the fire is better, and scarcely more expensive and that the lime is somehow vastly better.

A mentionable old lady died in Newburyport, Mass last week. This was Mrs. Aadigail D. Cook. She died on the 72nd aniversary of her wedding, and in the same room in which she was married. Singularly enough her age is not given, but she was one of the choir which sang at the welcome of Gen. Washington, on his visit to Newburyport, and she also sang at the commemorative services on the occasion of the general's death. She was the mother of nine childred, and was a member of the church. She is said to have been a very handsome woman in her prime, and she maintained her sprightlyness to the last.

LOST IN MOUNT VESUVIOUS.

The New Yook Sun says: "In September last, two tourists, an Englishman and an American, obstinately disregarded the entreaties of their guides insisted upon being lowered down into the dark caverns," immediately under the orffice of the crater of Mount Vesuvious, and these daring tourists have not since been heard of. When the news reached Naples, that city was filled with horror, and for weeks succeeding the disaster, few tourists ventured to the summit of the burning mountain. Fashionable adventurers, for whom the icy hights of the Matter horn or Mount Blanc had no detering awfulness or horror winced at the idea of approaching the mouth of Vesuvious, after in had so mysteriously become the impromptu tomb of two young men, who had not the least misfgiving of their doom.

Recently a similar calamity occurred, and almost under the same circumstances. The victims in this instance were Jean Le Mieux, Belgium, and Louis Schmidt of Berne, Switzerland. They were remaining at a very respectable boarding house, on the Chiaja, when a party were formed to make the ascent together, and it is strrnge that on the morning of the night on which they started for Resina, a villiage at the foot of Mount Vesuvious where horses, staffs and guides are procured) Schmidt received a letter from his sister at Genoah, in which she stated that it would not reach Naples long in advance of herself. Shmidt therefore begged his companions of relaese him of his promise to start for Resinah that night, but as he had projected the excursion, they insisted that he should go. Schmidt, after making arrangements with his landlady for the reception of his sister, started with his companions on Tuesday night for Vesuvious. They left Resinah at one in the morning, so that they might reach the summit of the crator, in time ta witness the rising of the sun above the peaks of the surrounding Alps and Alpennies.

Having reached the end of their romantic journey—the summit of the volcane—everything was quiet as upon asecluded ructic hill and Le Mieux called upon any of the party to join him in going down the crator. The guides are always provided with plenty of rope either for that purpose or for assisting cumbersome travelers up the last portion of the steep ascent.—Schmidt agreed to accompany Le Mieux, and in spite of the remonstrances of their guide each took hold of a loop and swung himself over the gloomy void, from whence came the tremendiots shawer of ashes and streams of lava which buried in a single night the famous cities of Pompeii and Herculaneum. The guides cautiously lowered them down until the rash adventurers announced that they were standing on firm ground. The guides' last warning to them was not to venture inward. A call from one of the tourists above, was answered by a faint hollow, "Ve beue," (all right,) from the headstrong explorers of the mysteries of the burning mountain.

Whether they were smothered with fumes of sulphur, on missing a step, were hurled into the unknown abyss of the volcano, no body on earth will ever know. Contrary to the advice of the practiced guides, they let go of the looped ropes, and ventured into the fatal darkness, of the crator's recesses. The tourists above cried out impatiently and in vain, but no response came after the first and only "Ve bene."—The guides and friends of the unfortunate ones remained until near sun down when all hopes of their reappearance were abandoned. The guides were lowered down repeatedly and severl of the excursionists went as far as the ropes would permit, in search of their fatally venturous comrads. This is the third instance of a disaster of this nature within the last ten years.

Beyond the Mississippi.

Thousands have already gone, and thousands more are turning their eyes towards new homes in the fertile West. To those going to Missouri, Kansas, Colorado, Utah, Wyoming, Nevada, Oregon or California, we recommend a cheap, safe, quick and direct route, via St. Louis, over the Missouri Pacific Railroad, which runs its fine Day Coaches and Pullman Sleepers from St. Louis to principal points in the West, without change. We believe that the Missouri Pacific Railroad has the best track and the finest and safest equipment of any line west of the Missippi, and its connections with roads further West are prompt and reliable. The Texas connection of this road is now completed and passengers are offered a first class, all rail route from St. Louis to Texas, either over the Missouri, Kansas & Texas R. R. via Sedalia, or over the Atlantic & Pacific R. R. via Vinita. For maps time tables, information as to rates, &c., we refer our readers to S. H. Thompson, Eastern Passenger Agent, Columbus, Ohio, or E. A. Ford, General Passenger Agent, St. Louis, Mo. Questions will be cheerfully and promptly answered!

WISHART

PINE TREF!

Tar Cordial,

NATURE'S GREAT REMEDY

FOR

Throat and Lungs.

It is gratifying to us to inform the public that Dr. L. Q. C. Wishart's Pine Tree Tar Cordial, for Throat and Lungs diseases, has gained an enviable reputation from the Atlantic to the Pacific coast, and from thence to some of the first families of Europe, not through the press alone, but by persons throughout the States actually benefited and cured at his office. While he publishes less, so say our reporters, he is unable to supply the demand. It gains and holds its reputation—

First. Not by stopping cough, but by loosening and assisting nature to throw off the unhealthy matter collected about the throat and bronchial tubes, which causes irritation.

Second. It removes the cause of irritation (which produces cough) of the mucous membrane and bronchial tubes, assists the lungs to act and throw off the unhealthy secretions, and purifies the blood.

Third. It is free from squills, lobelia, ipecac and opium, of which most throat and lung remedies are composed, which allay cough only, and disorganize the stomach. It has a soothing effect on the stomach, acts on the liver and kidneys, and lymphatic and nervous regions, thus reaching to every part of the system, and in its invigorating and purifying effects it has gained a reputation which it must hold above all others in the market.

The man who answered an advertisement to the following effect, says his curiosity is satisfied:

"If you would learn how to make home happy, send a postage stamp and twenty-five cents to P. O. box No. — Cincinnati Ohio."

He did send the necessary cash, and received this answer:

"If you are as big a fool as we think you must be for giving us your money you can make home happy by leaving it and going west by yourself."

And yet the man is not happy.

There was a time when distinguished Senators were compelled to retire to private life for the purpose of retrieving their fortunes, impaired by devotion to their public duties. They don't do so any more. On the contrary, the Senate is deemed a promising field for the rebuilding of fortunes impaired in private life, for which purpose, according to late developments, a membership is worth a premium of $60,000 and a 15,000 inducement to the revival candidate not to play his hand.

Let us Returen to our Mutton.

A good story is told of the recent excellent performance of Handel's Messiah Broadway Baptist Church.

A farmer took his wife to hear the grand music so beautiful rendered on that occasion; and after listening with apparent enjoyment, the pair became suddenly interested in one of the choruses:

We, all like sheep, have gone astray.

First a sharp soprano voice exclaimed We all, like sheep—

Next a deep bass voice uttered, in the most earnest tones—

We all, like sheep—

Then all the singers at once asserted We all, like sheep—

Darned if I do! exclaimed rustious to his partner. I like beef and mutton, but I can't bear sheep meat.

There was an audible titter in that vicinity, but the splendid music attracted attention from the pair and they quietly slipped out.

A Conundrum.

A tall, slim friend of the New York Post is in trouble. He wants to know what character to assume at masquerade. A Gotham Journal advises him to chalk his head and go as a billiard cue.

He might braid his legs and go as a whip lash.—Courier Journal.

He might wind himself round and round a few dozen times and go as a roll of tape —Lexington Caucasian.

The Paris True Kentuckion advises him to wrap himself in the American flag and go as a barber pole.

A little straw around his feet would enable him to appear as a broom.—Interior Journal.

Let him bristle his hair up and go as a white-wash brush.—St. Louis Times

Let him swallow a few marbles and go as a rattle box.—Cash Book.

He might put on a brass cap and represent a pair of tongs, or put an insulator in his mouth and go as a telegraph pole. Paducah Kentuckian.

What's the need of disguising himself? Why not go as a stick? Or he might put on a coat of glue and molass and go as a roller.—Newspaper Reporter.

He might twist his legs together, cut a screw on his feet and go as a gimblet.—Exchange.

There's only one way left, old lengthy, and that is to go dead drunk.

A Conjurer's Trick.

A pleasant looking gentleman of foreign appearance and accent entered a tobacconist shop in one of the market towns of England, and asked for a good cigar. The article having been furnished him, he proceeded to apply it to his nose with the air of a connoisseur, and then to protest that its flavor was most peculiar, not to say offensive.

The worthy tradesman declared that the cigar was an excellent one; his visitor as stoutly maintained that it was not, and at once determined to try what the cigar was really made of. Taking a penknife from his pocket, he began to cut the "weed" in two, and he had no sooner commenced to do so than a quantity of feathers dropped from the cigar. The more he cut the faster the feathers flew, until the cigar had been whittled away, and the shop looked more like an upholsterer's than a tobacconist's. Having given this ocular and practical proof that he had not remarked the peculiar flavor of the cigar without reason, the gentleman took his departure, leaving the shopkeeper utterly bewildered, and the possessor of a quantity of feathers, enough to stuff an ordinary cushion. The customer was Signor Basco, the conjurer.

The public statuary of the United States has cost 1,500,000.

The Indianapolis Journal once spoke of the new law.

The time for discussing the merits or demerits of the measure has passed, and it is the duty of every law abiding citizen to aid in its enforcement and not its nullification. If it is a good law it will establish itself and steadily in its object, the best way to prove its excellence is to enforce it; or if it is a bad law, and not founded on the solid bed rock of public sentiment, its vigorous enforcement will disclose its weak points. In either case it is the interest as well as the duty of all classes to give the law a prompt, hearty and zealous support, and we now call on all classes to lend a helping hand in its strict enforcement.

There seems to be a general expression on the part of Republicans that any member of Congress, regardless of party, who have been implicated in a discreditable manner, with the Credit Mobilier or any other swindling transaction, should immediately be expelled from Congress.—Kendallville Standard.

The truth of history is just to the contrary. The Republican party in Congress, and the Republican press and Republican Papers out of it, are making an effort to shield the Credit Mobiler men, chief of whom is Schuyler Colfax. In this disreputable business the Standard is also engaged. If the Republican party had willed it, or could have averted it, no investigation would have been made.—Col. City Post.

The Fraud Consummated.

The Congress which adjourned on yesterday went out in blaze of execration for its perfidy to the interest of its tax-paying millions. Not content with having shielded the Mobiler ring in its steal of millions from the National Treasury, it takes an open handed dip itself, by increasing the salary of the President of the United States to $50 000, Vice President $10,000; Chief Justice of the Supreme Court, $10,000; Cabinet officers, $10,000 Assistant Secretaries of the Treasury, State and Interior departments $6,000 Speaker of the House after the present Congress, $10,000; Senators Representatives and delegate including the present Congress, $7,500.

By this steal, every member of the present Congress votes himself $5,000 back pay, dating his increase of salary from March 4th 1871. Ben Butler was the champion of this measure, but he found willing members to do the voting among which is the Radical member of Congress from this district, Hon. (?) Billy Williams. This is the retrenchment and economy as understood in the Philadelphia platform, by the Radical party. How do you like it tax-payers of DeKalb county?

For one, we are glad that Congress has adjourned. The sickning tale of its corruption has been nauseating. It is entirely proper that they should consummate this fraud upon the Treasury It was a body conceived in iniquity, and it has lived its full life to sin. It goes out condemned by every honest man who does not believe the Radical party immaculate.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 28—A most astounding revelation has just been made against Vice President Colfax, that rivets fast upon him the long line of deception and falshood that he has gradually developed from his South Bend speech to the present hour. It will be remembered, that in his very latest explanation he insisted that Geo Nesbitt of New York had given him the $5 000 at odd times, in the summer of 1868 as voluntary contributions out of friendship, though a total stranger, and that all the favor that ever was returned were a few tickets to the inaugural ceremonies, in the spring of 1869. Now it has just came to light, from the official records of the postoffice department, that Mr. Colfax was the attorney and lobbyist of Nesbitt, and that he filed an argument in reply to the one made by the attorney general for the extension of the stamped envelope contract, then in the hands of this very same Mr. Nesbit. It is there endorsed as submitted by him—The history of the transaction is simply this: When Postmaster Gen. Randall retired from the department, he allowed Nesbitt's contract to continue without advertising for another year. When Postmaster Gen. Creswell came in, he thought this irregular, and called on the attorney general for an opinion, which was soon forthcoming, and adverse to Mr. Randall's course. It was to this that Mr. Colfax filed a reply, and on this Nesbitt's contract was allowed to run until sometime afterward, when bids were invited. In order that no injustice should be done to Mr. Colfax, it should be stated that while the 30 pages of the argument in Nesbitt's behalf, are not in his handwriting, his letter indorsing it and transmitting it, is there. It may have been coppied for him, or it may have come from Mr. Nesbitt's Lawyer, but Mr. Colfax alone appears on the record as making appeal for Nesbitt, in violation of the act in 1862, making such an offence from the vice President or a senater or a member, the subject of criminal indictment. It is not believed that he will rise to explain any more.

So dark and yet so light; as the man said when he looked at the last ton of coal.

I do say that man will steal, said a witness on, but if I was chicken, I'd roost high when he was around.

THIRTY YEARS AGO.

My book is out of date now!
You'll find it very slow;
For the people in it lived, sir,
Thirty years ago!

Thirty long, long years, and now
Their faces all are strange;
For faces change like hearts, you know,
And time works many a change.

That one? Well, that's my wife—yes!
You'd never think it—no!
But then, you know, 'twas taken, sir,
Thirty years ago!

I hadn't any wrinkles then,
My hair was brown, not gray,
My cheeks were soft, they're parchment now,
And I'm growing bald, they say.

And this? Ah dear, how pretty, too,
That little tinted face!
It's faded like the rest, though,
And sadly out of place.

Dear! what a girl that was, sir!
Such eyes and such a nose,
Married, and went to India, then,
She's dead now, I suppose.

This fellow, such a noodle, too,
A hopeless kind of spooney;
He emigrated on a chance,
And made a mint of money.

And this one, on the other page,
Oh, such a handsome fellow!
He took a fever at the Cape,
And died, they say, quite yellow!

My! what a handsome man he was!
Such eyes, with such long lashes,
Such glorious, glossy whiskers, too.
Such hair, and such mustaches!

The woman in the velvet gown—
An authoress, you know,
She wrote "The Bloody Secret" and
"The Murderer's Last Blow."

These two, a happy couple then,
A bridegroom and a bride.
It was the fashion then, you see,
To be taken side by side.

They had a little quarrel, sir,
Thirty years ago—
She was a little fast, they say,
And he a little slow.

Some say he was the cause of it,
That fellow all in gray;
It never cleared up, you know,
But I heard she ran away.

That one, sir, with the curly hair,
She was a charming creature;
Such splendid eyes you never saw,
No fault in any feature.

And this one, on the other side—
Dear! how the colors fade!
She, too, was then a beauty, sir,
She's living—an old maid.

And that one with the laughing eyes,
And tresses black as jet,
How well I can remember her—
She was a sad coquette!

How has the cold world dealt with her;
Where has her life been set;
And have those laughing eyes of hers
With many tears been wet?

Who knows? I never saw her since,
And life is always so;
But the photograph was like her then,
Thirty years ago!

And this one with the sunny hair,
And eyes divinely blue!
It is the dearest in the book,
The sweetest and most true.

It isn't a face to draw, you see,
Or to carve in marble cold,
But a living face to blush beneath
A halo of warm gold.

It isn't a face to rave about,
To cut one's throat, and yet
It's the kind of face that having seen,
It's hard, sir, to forget.

She's vanished like the others, now,
The way that all things go;
But I would have given my life for hers,
Thirty years ago!

It's only a shadow picture, too,
Of an innocent young face,
With nothing to commend it
But the gentle, girlish grace.

But ah! the passionate longing,
As I see her smiling so,
Still swells within me, as of old,
Thirty years ago!

My book is out of date now,
You'll find it old and strange!
Fashions fade like faces, sir;
And time works many a change!

MARK TWAIN'S ACCOUNT OF "JIM SMILEY."

[As Related by Simon Wheeler, Esq., of Angel's Camp, Calaveras County, Cal., on being asked for Information Concerning a CertainRev. Leonidas W Smith.]

There was a fellow here once by the name of Jim Smiley, in the winter of '49—or may be it was the summer of '50—I don't recollect exactly; somehow, though, what makes me think it was one or the other is because I remember the big flume wasn't finished when he first came to the camp; but, anyway, he was the curiousest man about always betting on anything that turned up you ever see, if he could get anybody to bet on the other side; and if he couldn't he'd change sides. Any way that suited the other man would suit him—any way, just so's he'd got a bet, he was satisfied. But still he was lucky, uncommon lucky; he almost always came out winner. He was always ready and waiting for a chance; there couldn't be no solitary thing mentioned but that feller'd offer to bet on it, and take any side you please, as I was just telling you. If there was a horse race you'd find him flush or you'd find him busted at the end of it; if there was a dog fight he'd bet on it; if there was a cat fight, he'd bet on it; if there was a chicken fight, he'd bet on it; why, if there was two birds sitting on a fence, he'd bet you which one would fly first; or if there was a camp meeting, he would be there reg'lar, to bet on Parson Walker, which he judged to be the best exhorter about here—and so he was too—and a good man. If he even saw a straddle-bug start to go anywhere, he would bet you how long it would take him to get wherever he was going to, and if you took him up he would follow that straddle-bug to Mexico but what he found where about he was on the road. Lots of the boys here has seen that Smiley, and can tell you all about him. Why, it never made no difference to him—he would bet on anything—the dangdest feller. Parson Walker's wife laid very sick once, for a while, and it seemed as if they warn't a going to save her. But one morning he came in, and Smiley asked how she was, and he said she was considerably better—thank the Lord for his infinite mercy—and coming on so smart that, with the blessing of Providence, she'd get well yet; and Smiley, before he thought, says, "Well, I'll risk two and a half that she don't, any-way."

This yer Smiley had a mare—the boys called her the fifteen minute nag, but that was only in fun, you know, because of course she was faster than that—and he used to win money on that horse for all she was so slow, and always had the asthma, or the distemper, or the consumption, or something of that kind. They used to give her two or three hundred yards start, and then pass her under way; but always at the fag end of the race she'd get excited and desperate like, and come cavorting and straddling up, and scattering her legs around limber, sometimes in the air and sometimes out to one side among the fences, and kicking up m-o-r-e dust and raising m-o-r-e racket with her coughing and sneezing and blowing her nose—and always fetch up at the stand just about a neck ahead, as near as you could cipher it down.

And he had a little small bull pup, that to look at you'd think he wasn't worth a cent but to set around and look ornery, and lay for a chance to steal something. But as soon as the money was put up on him he was a different dog; his under jaw'd begin to stick out like the fo'castle of a steamboat, and his teeth would uncover, and shine savage like the furnaces. And a dog might tackle him, and bullyrag him, and bite him, ann throw him over his shoulders two or three times, and Andrew Jackson—which was the name of the pup—Andrew Jackson would never let on but he was satisfied, and hadn't expected nothing else—and the bets being doubled and doubled on the other side all the time, till the money was all up; and then all of a sudden he would grab the other dog jest by the j'int of his hind leg and freeze to it, not chaw, you understand, but only jest grip and hang on till they throwed up the sponge, if it was a year. Smiley always come out winner on that pup, till he harnessed a dog once that didn't have no hind legs, because they'd been sawed off by a circular saw, and when the thing had gone along far enough, and the money was all up, and he came to make a snatch for his pet holt, he saw in a minute that he'd been imposed on, and the other dog had him in the door, so to speak, and he 'peared surprised, and then he looked sorter discouraged like, and didn't try to win the fight, and he got shucked out bad. He gave Smiley a look, as much as to say his heart was broke, and it was his fault, putting up a dog that hadn't no hind legs for him to take hold of, which was his main dependence in a fight, and then he limped off a piece, and laid down and died. It was a good pup, was that Andrew Johnson, and would have made a name for himself if he'd lived, for the stuff was in him, and he had genius; I know it, because he hadn't had any opportunities to speak of, and it don't stand to reason that a dog could make such a fight as he could under the circumstances if he hadn't no talent. It always makes me feel sorry when I think of that last fight of his'n, and the way it turned out.

Well, this yer Smiley had rat tarriers, and chicken-cocks, and all of them kind of things, till you couldn't rest, and you couldn't fetch nothing for him to bet on but he'd match you. He ketched a frog one day and took him home, and said he cal'klated to edercate him; and so he never done nothing for three months but sit in his back yard and learn that frog to jump. He'd give him a little punch behind, and the next minute you'd see that frog whirling in the air like a doughnut—see him turn one summersault, or maybe a couple, if he got a good start, and come down flat-footed and all right like a cat. He got him up so in the manner of catching flies, and kept him in practice so constant, that he'd nail a fly every time as far as he could see him. Smiley said all a frog wanted was education, and he could do most anything; and I believe him. Why, I've seen him set Dan'l Webster down here on this floor—Dan'l Webster was the name of the frog—and sing out, "Flies, Dan'l, flies!" and quicker'n you could wink, he'd spring up, and snake a fly off'n the counter there flop down on the floor again as solid as a gob of mud, and fall to scratching the sides of his head with his hind foot as indifferent as if he hadn't no idea he'd been doing any more than any other frog might do. You never see a frog so modest and straight for'ard as he was, for all he was so gifted. And when it come to fair and square jumping on a dead level, he could get over more ground at one straddle than any animal of his breed you ever see. Jumping on a dead level with his strong suit, you understand; and when it comes to that Smiley would ante up money on him as long as he had a red. Smiley was monstrous proud of this frog, and weil he might be, for fellers that had traveled and been everywhere all said he laid over any frog that ever they see.

Well, Smiley kept the beast in a little box, and he used to fetch him down town and lay for a bet. One day a feller—a stranger in the camp, he was—come across him with his box, and says:

"What might it be that you've got in that box?"

And Smiley says, sorter indifferent-like:

"It might be a parrot, or might be a canary, maybe, but it ain't—it's only just a frog."

And the fellow took it, and looked at it careful, and and turned it round this way and that, and says: "Hum! so 'tis. Well, what's he good for?"

"Well," Smiley says, easy and careless, "he's good for one thing, I should judge—he can out jump any frog in Calaveras county."

The feller took the box again, and took another long particular look and give it back to Smiley, and says, very deliberate, "Well, I don't see no p'ints about that frog that's any better'n any other frog."

"Maybe you don't," Smiley says. "Maybe you understand frogs, and maybe you don't understand 'em; maybe you've had had experience, and maybe you ain't only a amature as it were. Any ways, I've got my opinion, and I'll risk forty dollars that he can out jump any frog in Calaveras county."

And the feller studied a minute, and then says, kinder sad-like, "Well, I'm only a frog, but if I had a frog I'd bet you."

And then Smiley says, "That's all right—that's all right; if you'll hold my box a minute, I'll go and get you a frog." And so the feller took the box, and put up his forty dollars along with Smiley's and set down to wait.

So he set there a good while, thinking and thinking to himself, and then he got the frog out and pried his mouth open, and took a teaspoon and filled him full of quail shot—filled him pretty near up to his chin—and set him on the floor. Smiley he went to the swamp, and slopped around in the mud for a long time, and finally he ketched a frog and fetched him in, and give him to this feller, and says:

"Now, if you're ready, set him alongside of Dan'l, with his fore paws just even with Dan'l, and I'll give the word." Then he says, "One—two—three—jump!" and him and the feller touched up the frogs from behind, and the new frog hopped off, but Dan'l give a heave and hysted up his shoulders—so—like a Frenchman—but it wasn't no use—he couldn't budge; he was planted as solid as an anvil, and he couldn't no more stir than if he was anchored out. Smiley was a good deal surprised, and he was disgusted, too, but he didn't have no idea what the matter was, of course.

The feller took the money and started away; and when he was going out at the door, he sorter jerked his thumb over his shoulders—this way, at Dan'l and says again, very deliberate, "Well, I don't see no p'ints about that frog that's any better'n any other frog."

Smiley stood, scratching his head and looking down on Dan'l a long time, and at last he says, "I do wonder what in the nation that frog throwed off for. I wonder if there ain't something the matter with him, pears to look mighty baggy, somehow." And he ketched Dan'l by the nap of the neck and lifted him up and says: "Why, blame my cats, if he don't weigh five pounds," and turned him upside down and belched out a double-handful of shot. And then he see how it was, and he was the maddest man. He set the frog down and took after the feller, but he never ketched him. And——

Here Simon Wheeler heard his name called from the front yard, and got up to see what was wanted. And turning when he moved away, he said, "Just set where you are, stranger, and rest easy—I am going to be gone a second."

But the stranger did not think that the continuation of the history of the enterprising vagabond, Jim Smiley, would be likely to afford much information concerning the Rev. Leonidas W. Smith, and so I started away.

Suicides in France.

Dr. Decaisne, in the France, gives the following official list of the means employed by 71,207 individuals who committed suicide in France during the twenty-two years from 1836 to 1857: Strangulation, 24,536; fire-arms, 10,197; suffocation by charcoal fumes, 5,587; poison, 1,500; submersion, 23,221; knives, razors, etc., 2,871; falls from buildings, etc., 2,841; various other means, 454; total, 71,207. The presumed motives of these 71,207 suicides were exceedingly numerous. The more frequent causes were—misery, financial difficulties, domestic troubles, the desire to put an end to physical sufferings, and mental alienation.

Scottish Hospitality Sixty Years Ago.

In those days Scotland would have been a rich field for Father Mathew's labors. Habits of drunkenness were common alike to rich and poor. They were associated with good-fellowship, and were tenderly dealt with, even by the church. The orgies of Osbaldistone Hall, graphically described in Rob Roy, found their counterpart in many a Scottish manor. The old bacchanalian rhyme,

> "He who goes to bed, goes to bed sober,
> Falls as the leaves do, and dies in October;
> But he who goes to bed, goes to bed mellow,
> Lives a long, jolly life, and dies an honest fellow,"

was quoted half in earnest, as apology for the excesses which wealthy and respectable hosts, under the guise of hospitality, literally forced upon their guests, when the cloth was drawn and the ladies had abandoned the dinner-table to their riotous lords and masters.

I have heard my father, more than once, relate what happened on such an occasion, when he was one of the actors. He had been dining with a party of eight or ten gentlemen and a few ladies, at the luxurious country-seat of a friend who had shown him much kindness. When the ladies withdrew, the host, having caused the butler to set out on the table two bottles of port, sherry and claret, locked the door, put the key in his pocket, and said to his guests, no shirking to-night! Not a man leaves this room till these bottles are emptied."

No remark was made in reply, and the wine passed round. My father drank three glasses, the utmost to which I have ever know him to go, though he habitually took a glass or two of sherry after dinner. At the fourth round he passed the bottle without filling. His host remonstrated at first in jest, then in an angry tone, when the recusant persisted. Thereupon my father, approaching a front window which opened on the lawn, only a few feet below it, threw up the sash and leaped out, followed by three or four other guests.

This enraged their host. As the fugitives looked back they saw him upset the dinner table with a violent kick, smashing bottles and glasses, declaring with an oath that, if they didn't choose to drink that wine, nobody else should.

The deserters joined the ladies in the drawing-room, but the host did not reappear; and my father, as leading conspirator, lost and never regained his friendship.—Robert Dale Owen, in Atlantic.

Curious Story Concerning Amadeus.

European letters give the following curious explanation of the sudden abdication of King Amadeus:

When his youngest son was born at Madrid, a few weeks ago, the young Queen was in great distress of mind, and in very alarming physical pain, and in her agony she made a vow she would beg her husband on her knees to resign the throne of Spain and to hasten back to Italy. Her husband was present when she made this vow, and he uttered no remonstrance against it. There is no doubt that he has been growing more and more weary of Spain for several months, and the anguish of his young wife strengthened his desire to get rid of his thankless task. He and his wife had never been able to win over to their side the proud nobles of Spain. The Kng made a last effort to do this on the occasion of the christening of the new-born child. He asked the Dutchess Serrano to present the Royal infant at the baptismal ceremony. She refused with scorn, and the baby would have probably had to suffer being "presented" by a lady of low rank, had not the widow of Marshal Prim, herself a Duchess, consented to leave her mourning retirement and perform the function. There was a terrible scene in the palace that day, and it was then that the King finally yielded to the prayers and tears of his wife, and made to her the promise of abdication which he fulfilled on the 11th.

Mysterious Mathematics.

One of the Paris journals has just made a curious discovery. The Emperor was 64 years of age at time of his death. He was born in 1808; the coup d'etat took place in 1851; he was proclaimed Emperor in 1852, and was dethroned in 1870. Calculated as follows, these figures give his exact age:

1808 — 17
1851 — 15
1852 — 16
1870 — 16
64

Curiously enough, if the figures are added vertically, the same result is obtained, thus:

1 8 0 8
1 8 5 1
1 8 5 2
1 8 7 0
4 32 17 11 — 64

If the date of the Empress' birth, 1826, be substituted for that of the Emperor, the result is precisely the same. And again, if the date of the Emperor's birth, 1808, be taken with the dates of the attempt at Strasbourg, 1836, the descent on Boulogne, 1840, and the dethronement, 1870, the product sixty-four is still obtained.

Railway Traveling in England.

Railwayism was practically begun in England by the opening or the Liverpool and Manchester road on the 15th of September, 1830. Over forty-two years have passed since that very memorable event, and yet, not until now has any attempt been made to take care of the passengers' luggage from the time it reaches one railway station and arrives at the end of the journey. Such a simple process as our American mode of giving a check with each trunk, valise, and carpet-bag, which secures the delivery of the article only to the person presenting a check corresponding in number with that attached by the railway porter to the article, is now only discussed in the English papers as desirable and practicable. At present, each passenger has personally to look after his luggage—first to see that it is put into the luggage van on the train, and finally, at the end of his journey, to select it from a huge pile of trunks, boxes, and bags. In another ten years or so perhaps our simple and safe American plan may be adopted on the English railroads. Possibly, too, it may be boasted of as a British invention.—Philadelphia Press.

An Iowa doctor thoughtlessly lanced a pimple on a patient's nose with his vaccinating lancet. It took beautifully, but the patient says that both for appearance and comfort he would almost as lief have the small-pox.

The First Newspaper.

Authorities have differed widely as to the nation and city entitled to the honor of having started the first printed newspaper. For many years it was supposed that the credit belonged to England. It was claimed that the British Museum had a copy of the earliest paper in its collection. It was called the English Mercurie, and printed July 23, 1588; but it has been shown that this copy, like specimens of rare old coins, was spurious, and gotten up for sale. Watts, the bibliographer of the Museum, who saw, on examination, that the type and paper were of modern origin and did not belong to the sixteenth century, exposed the forgery. It was an ingenious fabrication, pretending to give the news of the Spanish Armada, which was destroyed in the English channel by Drake and Howard a day or two previous to the date of the sheet. There were seven numbers of this spurious Mercurie produced—four in manuscript and three in print.

Venice has claimed the honor of leading the way in giving newspapers to the world. The Gazetta, thus named because it sold for a small piece of money called gazzetta, it is asserted, was printed there in 1570, and it is pretended that copies of this paper of that date are in one or two collections in London. But late discoveries have, apparently, established the claim of the old city of Nuremburg to this high honor. A paper called the Gazette, according to trustworthy authorities, was printed in that city as early as 1457, five years after Peter Schoffer cast the first metal type in matrices. Nuremburg, with the first paper in the fifteenth century, also claims the honor of the first paper in the sixteenth century. There is an anciently printed sheet in the Libri collection which antedates all others except the sheet of 1457 and the Chronicle of Cologne. It is called the Neue Zeitung aus Hispanien und Italien, and bears the date of February, 1534. The British Museum, it is said, has a duplicate of this sheet.

Thus to Germany belongs the honor not only of the first printers and the first printing, but also of the first printed newspaper. It has also another distinction. In 1615, Egenolf Eurmel started Die Frankfurter Oberpostampts Zeitung, the first daily paper in the world. This paper is still published; and the city of Frankfort is to erect a monument in honor of its founder and editor, as the father of newspapers.

Hen-Herding.

When a woman has a hen to drive into the coop, she takes hold of her hoops with both hands, and shakes them quietly toward the delinquent, and says: "Shew! there." The hen takes one look at the object to convince herself that it's a woman, and then stalks majestically into the coop in perfect disgust of the sex. A man don't do that way. He goes out of doors and says: "It's singular nobody in this house can drive a hen but myself," and, picking up a stick of wood, hurls it at the offending biped, and observes, "Get in there, you thief." The hen immediately loses her reason and dashes to the opposite end of the yard. The man straightway dashes after her. She comes back again with her head down, her wings out, and followed by an assortment of stove-wood, fruit-cans, and coal-clinkers, with a much puffing and very mad man in the rear. Then she skims up on the stoop, and under the barn, and over a fence or two, and around the house, and back again to the coop, all the while talking as only an excited hen can talk, and all the while followed by things convenient for handling, and by a man whose coat is on the sawbuck, and whose hat is on the ground, and whose perspiration and profanity appear to have no limit. By this time the other hens have come out to take a hand in the debate, and help dodge the missiles—and then the man says every hen on the place shall be sold in the morning, and puts on his things and goes down street, and the woman dons her hoops, and has every one of these hens housed and contented in two minutes, and the only sound heard on the premises is the hammering by the oldest boy, as he mends the broken pickets.—Danbury News.

The Old Editors--How They Go.

Raymond, George D. Prentice, Edwin Crosswell, Bennett, Greeley, and now William Cassidy—how the men who have long wielded the gigantic power of the press are passing away!

The venerable William Cullen Bryant, of the Old Guard, almost or quite an octogenarian, still remains in active duty, and those who see his agile form as he walks swiftly down Broadway cannot but expect, as all must hope, that he may be with us many years longer.

Francis P. Blair, who edited the Globe in Jackson's time, and contributed greatly to the strength of his Administration, still lives in honorable retirement at Silver Spring, near Washington; but nearly all his contemporaries have passed away.

Thurlow Weed is among us, feeble in health, but just now asserting again the vast control which he exercised in New York politics for so many years.

What has become of all these men who are gone? Where are they now? Authentic intelligence on this subject would be read with deeper interest than any news that we shall ever publish. They differed in their religious views. If they are now truly wise and able to see the truth, they must know who was right and who was wrong.—New York Sun.

Billiards.

A recent English work on billiards gives some interesting particulars connected with the game. It was only in 1837 that slate tables were substituted for wood and marble, and only in 1835 that india-rubber cushions took the place of flock and list. Again, it was not until 1807 that leathern tips were invented for cues, which rendered side strokes possible. About 1818 the side stroke was discovered by one Bartley, the proprietor of billiard rooms at Bath, England. Bartley had a marker named Carr, to whom he confided his secret, and Carr, when pressed to reveal it, produced boxes of what he called "twisting chalk," to the use of which he attributed his powers, and which he sold at seventy-five cents each.

LOVE ME LITTLE, LOVE ME LONG.

[Originally printed in 1569.]

Love me little, love me long!
Is the burden of my song;
Love that is too hot and strong
Burneth soon to waste.
Still I would not have thee cold—
Not too backward, nor too bold;
Love that lasteth till 'tis old
Fadeth not in haste.
Love me little, love me long!
Is the burden of my song.

If thou lovest me too much,
'Twill not prove as true a touch;
Love me little more than such—
For I fear the end.
I'm with little well content,
And a little from thee sent
Is enough, with true intent
To be steadfast, friend.

Say thou lovest me, while thou live
I to thee my love will give,
Never dreaming to deceive
While that life endures;
Nay, and after death, in sooth,
I to thee will keep my truth,
As now when in my May of youth:
This my love assures.

Constant love is moderate ever,
And it will through life persever;
Give me that with true endeavor—
I will it restore,
A suit of durance let it be,
For all weathers—that for me—
For the land or for the sea;
Lasting evermore.

Winter's cold or Summer's heat,
Autumn's tempests on it beat;
It can never know defeat,
Never can rebel:
Such the love that I would gain,
Such the love, I tell thee plain,
Thou must give, or woo in vain:
So to thee—farewell!

An Englishman, it is said, hearing a great deal about the Yankee propensity of "bragging," thought he would make an experiment in the art himself. Congressional Amenities.

There was a lively and spicy debate in the House of Representatives, the other day, on Butler's bill increasing salaries. Messers. Stevenson and Dickey exchanged compliments in this pleasant style:

Mr. Stevenson—I believe that if all the present members of the House were turned out—and half of us are being turned out [laughter]—we could not, on the average, do as well at our business as we are doing here. Mr. Stevenson declared that the salaries paid by the Government where sufficient to secure the services of good and proper men. He was satisfied with his present salary.

Mr. Dickey—Speak for yourself.

Mr. Steavenson (vehemently)—I will speak for myself, and you, too. I believe it is enough for you. [Laughter.] I believe it is all you are worth. [Laughter.] I would not hire you for the balance of your life at that rate. [Loud laughter.]

Mr. Dickey—You never made $5,000 in your life outside your salary as a member of Congress.

Mr. Stevenson—I have made $10,000 in a single case, and I doubt if the gentleman ever did the like.

Mr. Dickey—Then you fooled your client. [Laughter.]

Mr. Stevenson—I do not know why the gentleman from Pennsylvania endeavors to inject nonsense into everything in this House. [Laughter.]

Mr. Dickey—I should like to inject some sense into the gentleman from Ohio. [Laughter.]

Mr. Stevenson—The gentleman might engraft some sense in me if he had any himself. If I could buy the gentleman at what he is really worth, and sell him again at what he thinks he is worth, I never would need any salary from Congress. [Laughter.]

Undying Love.

Mr. George Stephens is the owner of a pretty extensive manufacturing business in Pittsburgh. George was not always a resident of the Birmingham of America, nor was he always the owner of an "unexpended balance" in one of the numerous monetary institutions of that city. In fact, a few years since the now wealthy Pittsburgh manufacturer was a poor clerk in a dry goods store in Orange county, N. Y. There, while selling colico and ribbons to the country damsels, he met, wooed and won a farmer's daughter named Ella Morrison. For a year all went well, but another young lady received trifling attentions, and Ella broke the engagement. Stephens went to Pittsburgh, was successful, and became proprietor of a large manufactory. The other day he visited Newark, and in passing through one of the mills his eye met that of a young lady who was working at a loom. He pretended not to recognize her, but when the girls came from the building when work was done Stephens was waiting. He addressed the girl as Ella Morrison. Her father died soon after he went to Pittsburgh, and she was left penniless. From Orange county she went to New York, thence to Paterson and Newark, working her way alone. Mr. George Stephens and Miss Ella Morrison were married the next day, and started for Pittsburgh immediately after the ceremony.—Titusville Herald.

What an Old Man Has Noticed.

I have noticed that all men are honest when well watched.

I have noticed that purses will hold pennies as well as pounds.

I have noticed that merit is always measured in this world by its success.

I have noticed that in nearly all things money is the main object in view.

I have noticed that in order to be a reasonable creature it is necessary at times to be downright mad.

I have noticed that some men are so honest that necessity compels them to be dishonest in the end.

I have noticed that silks, broadcloths and jewels are often bought with other people's money.

I have noticed that the prayer of every selfish man is, "Forgive us our debts," while he makes everybody who owes him pay to the utmost farthing.

I have noticed that he who thinks every man a rogue is very certain to see one when he shaves himself, and he ought, in mercy to his neighbor to surrender the rascal to justice.

I have noticed that money is the fool's wisdom, the knave's reputation, the poor man's desire, the covetous man's ambition, and the idol of all.

I have noticed that all men speak well of all men's virtues when they are dead, and that tombstones are marked with epitaphs of the good and virtuous. Is there any particular cemetery where the bad men are buried?

A Maine Judge Proves Equal to the Occasion.

At one of the judical tribunals in this country, not long since, a case of some importance was being heard, but it had been protracted beyond all reason, and the Judge sat with eyes closed, evidently comfortably wrapped in slumber. The lawyer who was arguing the case was considerably nettled by the circumstance, and having reached a very important part of his argument, raised his voice to a very high key and said: "I desire to call your attention, may it please your Honor, to an important point in this case." A heavy breathing, a sonorous snore, were the only judical response. The lawyer approached nearer the Court, and raising his voice to an excruciating key, repeated his remark: "May it please the Court, I desire to call your Honor's attention to an important point in this case." The Judge aroused himself, rubbed his eyes, and, before he had them open, cried out: "Wife, wife, isn't it most breakfast time?" The Judge speedily awoke to the reality, apologized, and said he was apt to be a little abstracted when engaged in deep thought.—Lewiston Journal.

The Iron Men.

A meeting of the American Pig Iron Manufacturers' Association was held yesterday in the St. Nicholas Hotel. O. R. Stone, of Ohio, presided.

The Secretary, Thomas Dunlap, read a long report, from which it appears that the total production of pig iron in the United States during 1872 was about 2,388,150 tons, or an increase of 25 per cent. over the production of 1871. The amount of pig metal made in 1872 may be divided as follows:

	Tons.
Anthracite iron	1,197,010
Raw bituminous coal and coke iron	712,800
Charcoal	478,500
Total	2,388,210

The increase in the number of blast furnaces in 1872 is unprecedented. The total number of new furnaces built or begun in 1872 was 109, and of those projected for 1873, which only includes those actually determined upon, 39. Fifty new rolling mills have been built or begun, and at least 30 per cent. added to the former puddling capacity of existing mills.

The total value of our iron imports for 1872 from Great Britain may be computed at $49,929,736.12, currency, against $30,866,021.96 in 1871; an increase in value of $19,063,714.16, although a decrease in quantity of 42,248 tons.

In consequence of a communication from the American Iron and Steel Association in regard to the union of all organizations connected with the iron industry, a committee was appointed to confer on the subject with the other associations.

A resolution was adopted favoring the appointment of a commissioner for the collection, analysis and description of the ores of the United States for the Centennial Exhibition.—New York Post.

The Story of a Vacant House.—There is near the Boston and Lowell railroad, in Somerville, a handsome brick house, just discernable from the cars as they enter a cut on the road-bed, which has a romantic history. It was built by a rising young lawyer of Boston, who was engaged to be married. He had fully furnished the house, in anticipation of soon making it his home, with his young wife, when the engagement was broken off, for reasons which, if they could be related, would greatly add to the romance of the story. The disappointed lover shut up his new house, just as it was, declaring it should not be opened as long as the would-have-been bride should live. That was nearly twenty years ago; and the furnished but untenanted house still stands closed, just as it was prepared to welcome its expected mistress.—Lowell (Mass.) Courier.

To Render Fabrics Fire-Proof.—Tungstate of soda has been successfully used for rendering cotton cloth and other fabrics fire-proof. Pestera recommends a cheaper mixture for the same purpose. It consists of four parts of borax and three parts of sulphate of magnesia, to be mixed first before being needed, and dissolved in twenty to thirty parts of boiling water. The goods are to be immersed in this solution immediately, then wrung out and dried. Another efficient mixture for rendering fabrics non-inflammable, recently patented in England, consists of equal weights of acetate of lime and chloride of calcium, dissolved in twice their weight of hot water.

A Death's Head and Crossbones ought to be the trade-mark of every dealer in Rum Bitters. But no; to proclaim their real mission would ruin them, so they sail under false colors, and do their deadly work surreptitiously. Fortunately their triumphs over credulity are nearly at an end. Ever since the introduction of Dr. Walker's California Vinegar Bitters the sale of all the burning fluids advertised as "tonics" has been rapidly declining. They are still the unwholesome solace of individuals who wish to satisfy a morbid appetite for strong drink without compromising their respectability; but the sick are everywhere discarding them and adopting the Vinegar Bitters. The success of this wonderful vegetable remedy astonishes Dr. Walker himself. He believed, when he gave it to the world, that it was an unequaled tonic, free from the objections urged against the medicated fire-waters and dilutions of strychnine, quinine and other powerful alkaloids employed in modern practice; but he scarcely expected that it would prove a specific for chronic dyspepsia, liver complaint, incipient consumption, confirmed rheumatism, gout, scrofula, nervous affections, general debility, and all diseases that disorder without destroying the vital machinery. Yet this, unless thousands of witnesses have conspired to deceive the public, is actually the case.—[Com.

He goes about, the ghost of his former self."

Perils of the Season.

The inhospitable winds and chilly fogs of spring are unwelcome visitors to the feeble and ailing, and are by no means congenial to the healthy. If there is any germ of disease lurking in the system, they are sure to develop it, unless proper precautions are taken to prevent such a misfortune. Bilious complaints, dyspepsia, nervous debility, rheumatism, irregularities of the bowels, and disorders which affect the kidneys, are all aggravated by the peculiar condition of the atmosphere at this season. Invalids who are subject to any of these disorders, or have a predisposition thereto, should therefore forearm themselves against danger by strengthening the digestive organs, the nervous system and the muscular fiber with daily doses of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters. There is no period of the year at which a stimulating tonic and regulating medicine is more urgently required than in the spring; and there is no preparation of that class in which so many valuable restorative and preventive properties are combined in such a perfectly safe and harmless form as in Hostetter's Bitters. It may be stated positively, as uncontradictable fact, that a course of this agreeable vegetable specific, commenced now and continued through the spring months, will effectually shield the inhabitants of marshy and miasmatic localities from the intermittent and remittent fevers caused by unhealthy exhalations from a wet soil.

Dr. Jayne's Expectorant is both a palliative and curative in all Lung Complaints, Bronchitis, &c. It is a standard remedy for Coughs and Colds, and needs only a trial to prove its worth.

Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy effects cures upon scientific principles, by its mild, healing properties, to which the disease gradually yields, when the system has been put in perfect order with Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, which should be taken earnestly, to correct the blood and system, which are always at fault, also to act specifically, as it does, upon the diseased glands and lining membrane of the nose and its communicating chambers. The Catarrh Remedy should be applied with Dr. Pierce's Nasal Douche, as this is the only form of instrument yet invented with which fluid medicine can be carried high up and perfectly applied to all parts of the affected nasal passages and chambers in which sores and ulcers exist, and from which the discharge generally proceeds.

So successful has the above course of treatment proven, that the proprietor offers $500 Reward for a case of "Cold in Head," Ozena or Catarrh which he cannot cure. The two medicines with instrument, for $2, by all druggists.

TWELVE years ago Lord Lytton built an elegant "asylum for poor authors" on his estate, and it has remained untenanted to this day, not a single "poor author" making his appearance. A RECENT flood in Ceylon compelled many of the natives in the western province of that island to seek refuge from the waters by climbing into cocoanut trees. These were found, in many instances, to be already occupied by snakes that had ascended them to escape drowning. The reptiles were very fierce, and did not yield place to the natives.

Undying Love.

Mr. George Stephens is the owner of a pretty extensive manufacturing business in Pittsburgh. George was not always a resident of the Birmingham of America, nor was he always the owner of an "unexpended balance" in one of the numerous monetary institutions of that city. In fact, a few years since the now wealthy Pittsburgh manufacturer was a poor clerk in a dry goods store in Orange county, N. Y. There, while selling colico and ribbons to the country damsels, he met, wooed and won a farmer's daughter named Ella Morrison. For a year all went well, but another young lady received trifling attentions, and Ella broke the engagement. Stephens went to Pittsburgh, was successful, and became proprietor of a large manufactory. The other day he visited Newark, and in passing through one of the mills his eye met that of a young lady who was working at a loom. He pretended not to recognize her, but when the girls came from the building when work was done Stephens was waiting. He addressed the girl as Ella Morrison. Her father died soon after he went to Pittsburgh, and she was left penniless. From Orange county she went to New York, thence to Paterson and Newark, working her way alone. Mr. George Stephens and Miss Ella Morrison were married the next day, and started for Pittsburgh immediately after the ceremony.—Titusville Herald.

What an Old Man Has Noticed.

I have noticed that all men are honest when well watched.

I have noticed that purses will hold pennies as well as pounds.

I have noticed that merit is always measured in this world by its success.

I have noticed that in nearly all things money is the main object in view.

I have noticed that in order to be a reasonable creature it is necessary at times to be downright mad.

I have noticed that some men are so honest that necessity compels them to be dishonest in the end.

I have noticed that silks, broadcloths and jewels are often bought with other people's money.

I have noticed that the prayer of every selfish man is, "Forgive us our debts," while he makes everybody who owes him pay to the utmost farthing.

I have noticed that he who thinks every man a rogue is very certain to see one when he shaves himself, and he ought, in mercy to his neighbor to surrender the rascal to justice.

I have noticed that money is the fool's wisdom, the knave's reputation, the poor man's desire, the covetous man's ambition, and the idol of all.

I have noticed that all men speak well of all men's virtues when they are dead, and that tombstones are marked with epitaphs of the good and virtuous. Is there any particular cemetery where the bad men are buried?

A Maine Judge Proves Equal to the Occasion.

At one of the judical tribunals in this country, not long since, a case of some importance was being heard, but it had been protracted beyond all reason, and the Judge sat with eyes closed, evidently comfortably wrapped in slumber. The lawyer who was arguing the case was considerably nettled by the circumstance, and having reached a very important part of his argument, raised his voice to a very high key and said: "I desire to call your attention, may it please your Honor, to an important point in this case." A heavy breathing, a sonorous snore, were the only judical response. The lawyer approached nearer the Court, and raising his voice to an excruciating key, repeated his remark: "May it please the Court, I desire to call your Honor's attention to an important point in this case." The Judge aroused himself, rubbed his eyes, and, before he had them open, cried out: "Wife, wife, isn't it most breakfast time?" The Judge speedily awoke to the reality, apologized, and said he was apt to be a little abstracted when engaged in deep thought.—Lewiston Journal.

The Iron Men.

A meeting of the American Pig Iron Manufacturers' Association was held yesterday in the St. Nicholas Hotel. O. B. Stone, of Ohio, presided.

The Secretary, Thomas Dunlap, read a long report, from which it appears that the total production of pig iron in the United States during 1872 was about 2,388,150 tons, or an increase of 25 per cent over the production of 1871. The amount of pig metal made in 1872 may be divided as follows:

	Tons.
Anthracite iron	1,197,010
Raw bituminous coal and coke iron	712,500
Charcoal	478,500
Total	2,388,210

The increase in the number of blast furnaces in 1872 is unprecedented. The total number of new furnaces built or begun in 1872 was 100, and of those projected for 1873, which only includes those actually determined upon, 89. Fifty new rolling mills have been built or begun, and at least 30 per cent. added to the former puddling capacity of existing mills.

The total value of our iron imports for 1872 from Great Britain may be computed at $49,929,736.12, currency, against $30,866,021.96 in 1871; an increase in value of $19,063,714.16, although a decrease in quantity of 42,248 tons.

In consequence of a communication from the American Iron and Steel Association in regard to the union of all organizations connected with the iron industry, a committee was appointed to confer on the subject with the other associations.

A resolution was adopted favoring the appointment of a commissioner for the collection, analysis and description of the ores of the United States for the Centennial Exhibition.—New York Post.

THE STORY OF A VACANT HOUSE.—There is near the Boston and Lowell railroad, in Somerville, a handsome brick house, just discernable from the cars as they enter a cut on the road-bed, which has a romantic history. It was built by a rising young lawyer of Boston, who was engaged to be married. He had fully furnished the house, in anticipation of soon making it his home, with his young wife, when the engagement was broken off, for reasons which, if they could be related, would greatly add to the romance of the story. The disappointed lover shut up his new house, just as it was, declaring it should not be opened as long as the would-have-been bride should live. That was nearly twenty years ago; and the furnished but untenanted house still stands closed, just as it was prepared to welcome its expected mistress.—Lowell (Mass.) Courier.

TO RENDER FABRICS FIRE-PROOF.—Tungstate of soda has been successfully used for rendering cotton cloth and other fabrics fire-proof. Pestera recommends a cheaper mixture for the same purpose. It consists of four parts of borax and three parts of sulphate of magnesia, to be mixed first before being needed, and dissolved in twenty to thirty parts of boiling water. The goods are to be immersed in this solution immediately, then wrung out and dried. Another efficient mixture for rendering fabrics non-inflammable, recently patented in England, consists of equal weights of acetate of lime and chloride of calcium, dissolved in twice their weight of hot water.

A DEATH'S HEAD AND CROSSBONES ought to be the trade-mark of every dealer in Rum Bitters. But no; to proclaim their real mission would ruin them, so they sail under false colors, and do their deadly work surreptitiously. Fortunately their triumphs over credulity are nearly at an end. Ever since the introduction of DR. WALKER'S CALIFORNIA VINEGAR BITTERS the sale of all the burning fluids advertised as "tonics" has been rapidly declining. They are still the unwholesome solace of individuals who wish to satisfy a morbid appetite for strong drink without compromising their respectability; but the sick are everywhere discarding them and adopting the VINEGAR BITTERS. The success of this wonderful vegetable remedy astonishes Dr. Walker himself. He believed, when he gave it to the world, that it was an unequaled tonic, free from the objections urged against the medicated fire-waters and dilutions of strychnine, quinine and other powerful alkaloids employed in modern practice; but he scarcely expected that it would prove a specific for chronic dyspepsia, liver complaint, incipient consumption, confirmed rheumatism, gout, scrofula, nervous affections, general debility, and all diseases that disorder without destroying the vital machinery. Yet this, unless thousands of witnesses have conspired to deceive the public, is actually the case.—[Com.

A WASHINGTON letter-writer says Chief Justice Chase's most intimate friends do not recognize him. "From the handsome, smooth-faced, portly man, he has become a tall, heavy, thin man, with a yellow beard; his mind is clear, but his voice is weak, and the thin lips quiver from paralysis. He goes about, the ghost of his former self."

THERE are to be Japanese Consuls in Italy. It is stated that three illustrious personages belonging to the "Empire of Silk" are already en route for their posts there, one of whom is to be Consul General at Rome, another Consul at Genoa, and another at Naples.

CUTLER'S Vegetable Pulmonary Balsam "Doubtless the best Cough Medicine in the world."—[Com.

Perils of the Season.

The inhospitable winds and chilly fogs of spring are unwelcome visitors to the feeble and ailing, and are by no means congenial to the healthy. If there is any germ of disease lurking in the system, they are sure to develop it, unless proper precautions are taken to prevent such a misfortune. Bilious complaints, dyspepsia, nervous debility, rheumatism, irregularities of the bowels, and disorders which affect the kidneys, are all aggravated by the peculiar condition of the atmosphere at this season. Invalids who are subject to any of these disorders, or have a predisposition thereto, should therefore forearm themselves against danger by strengthening the digestive organs, the nervous system and the muscular fiber with daily doses of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters. There is no period of the year at which a stimulating tonic and regulating medicine is more urgently required than in the spring; and there is no preparation of that class in which so many valuable restorative and preventive properties are combined in such a perfectly safe and harmless form as in Hostetter's Bitters. It may be stated positively, as uncontradictable fact, that a course of this agreeable vegetable specific, commenced now and continued through the spring months, will effectually shield the inhabitants of marshy and miasmatic localities from the intermittent and remittent fevers caused by unhealthy exhalations from a wet soil.

DR. JAYNE'S EXPECTORANT is both a palliative and curative in all Lung Complaints, Bronchitis, &c. It is a standard remedy for Coughs and Colds, and needs only a trial to prove its worth.

A PARTIALLY unmarried resident of Lafayette, Ind., poisoned himself with laudanum last week at a boarding-house, whither he had eloped from domestic infelicity, leaving the following touching posthumous message to his widow:

Please tell that old devil of a wife of mine that I had a poor time since I left the old shanty, but if ever I find her in the next world I'll pay her off.

Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy effects cures upon scientific principles, by its mild, healing properties, to which the disease gradually yields, when the system has been put in perfect order with Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, which should be taken earnestly, to correct the blood and system, which are always at fault, also to act specifically, as it does, upon the diseased glands and lining membrane of the nose and its communicating chambers. The Catarrh Remedy should be applied with Dr. Pierce's Nasal Douche, as this is the only form of instrument yet invented with which fluid medicine can be carried high up and perfectly applied to all parts of the affected nasal passages and chambers in which sores and ulcers exist, and from which the discharge generally proceeds.
So successful has the above course of treatment proven, that the proprietor offers $500 Reward for a case of "Cold in Head," Ozena or Catarrh which he cannot cure. The two medicines with instrument, for $2, by all druggists.

C. U. No. 13.

WHEN WRITING TO ADVERTISERS, please say you saw the advertisement in this paper.

The Auburn Courier.

Thursday, March 13th, 1873.

[illegible] Stal[illegible] Republican paper, [illegible] is going for the large number of Radicals that voted [illegible] of salaries, an unusual [illegible] that class of journ[illegible].

The Senate [illegible] voted increasing the per diem of township trustees from $2.50 to $3. Yeas, 27, nays, 15. The same body voted [illegible] increase county commissioners pay [illegible] dollars per day.

Persons living along lines of railway will be interested in knowing that the House has passed a bill which provides that in suits against railroad companies for damages for stock killed, the judgment shall include a reasonable allowance for plaintiff's attorney fees.

The Legislature.

The Senate on the 26th ult. passed a bill making it unlawful for keepers of public billiard tables to allow minors to congregate about the room, or to play. Also a bill making it a misdemeanor to employ them in the sale of liquors.

Gov. Hendricks has signed the temperance bill, and, for once in his life has taken a decided stand upon a question which is likely to make him some enemies in his own party.

The above is from the Press, and is an equivical endorsement of the act of Gov. Hendricks. It is afraid that he has made some enemies, which doubtless tickles it under the fifth rib.

After studying the matter over, six or eight days; feeling the pulse of the people, as to whether the law would be proper or not, and with many misgivings, Gov. Hendricks finally signed the temperance bill, and it is now the law of the State.—Indianian.

That is more than Gov. Baker did on the apportionment bill.

The House on Wednesday of last week, almost without debate and by an overwhelming vote, passed a bill providing that any person holding office under the [illegible] State who shall get drunk [illegible] office. The offence to be proven by the finding of a court [illegible]. The vote on the passage of the bill was seventy-four to fourteen.

The House last Monday passed Senate bill No. 10, 86 amending the act for the incorporation of cities, as to provide that lots of five acres or more situated within the corporate limits of cities shall no longer be exempt from assessment for municipal taxes.

The most despicable coward in America is Vice President Wilson. He had the unmanliness to lay the blame of his connection with the Credit Mobiler swindle upon the grave of his dead wife. It would have been more to his credit, if he had committed "pleasant perjury," like Squire Colfax. Of such is not the kingdom of Heaven, but of such is the republican party.

Grant told Congressman Warner of Philadelphia that if the bill passed [illegible] without including theirs, or other officers of the Government, he would veto it.—Therefore the self-sacrificing and patriotic Congressmen consented to receive $2,500 each, in order that they may have the privilege of giving him an extra $100,000. This magnanimity and generosity on their part is truly admirable.

We mark as a curious coincidence that Grant and [illegible] their character vindicated at the same time. The President in his [illegible] alluded to his being vindicated [illegible] complete answer to all the charges that have been made against him. On that same 4th of March Mr. Tweed was set all right in the same manner, by the Senate of New York declining to expel him from his seat. That is the way that men are vindicated in Washington and and Albany.

Senator Pomeroy's story reads well, and after a man had told it, say twenty-five or thirty times, he might begin to believe it. But the average American citizen has undergone a wonderful growth as to the cynicism of his mind during the last half a dozen years or so. Therefore it is a trifle probable that men will wonder how a man who does his banking business in such a loose way as the Senator says he does his, ever got so immensely rich as the Senator is.

[illegible] will register [illegible] purposes [illegible] both [illegible] become a law.—This bill provides for dividing the State into 38 judicial Circuits. Noble, DeKalb and Steuben counties constitute the Thirty-Sixth. It also provides for abolishing the Common Pleas Courts, and transferring their business to the Circuit Courts. Also in another bill proposed to pay the Circuit Judges three thousand dollars a year each, and to allow each county having the requisite population an extra Judge with a salary of one thousand a year, making the total expense of the State Judiciary, outside of the Supreme Court, $205,000 per annum.

The monstrous swindle was denounced in its conception by Elihu B. Washburn in Congress, so that no congressional subscriber to the Credit Mobiler can dare to plead ignorance of the nature of his investment. They simply and [illegible] robbed the people by imposing on them a highway [illegible] million dollars for each State in the Union. Not one of Ames' confreres in this gigantic fraud—not Colfax, nor Patterson, nor Bingham nor Dawes, nor Garfield, nor Kelley, nor Wilson, nor Brooks—not one of them—should not be separated from Ames himself in the final punishment. There is no escape from the plain and sober logic of "All or none." and we say in the name of public justice, all.

Ministers of the gospel will be pleased to learn that a bill for their benefit was introduced into the House last Saturday. It is bill 533, introduced by Mr. Blocher, and fixes compensations of pastors, priests, etc, for preaching funeral sermons. It allows the pastors, priests and ministers to charge a fee of from five to ten dollars which shall become a lien upon the estate of the deceased the same as other funeral expenses. In case the estate is valued one hundred thousand dollars or more, (anything in reason) may be charged. But, if the person officiating at the funeral, shall have previously received a liberal fee for marrying the deceased, he shall not charge a larger fee than is allowed in the first section. Referred to the Committee of Benevolent Institution.

GRANT'S PEACE.

BLOODSHED AT LAST.

[illegible] Telegraph.

New Orleans, March 5.—Between nine and ten o'clock to-night the McEnery militia attacked the third precinct police station. They commenced the attack by firing into the building. The firing was returned by the police. Soon after General Badge Chief of the Metropolitan police, moved down Charles Street, from the canal with about two hundred men and one piece of artilery. Quite a large crowd had collected on Jackson Square and on the streets leading thereto. When near this crowd Gen. Badger ordered them to disperse. The militia refused to [illegible] blank cartridge, and soon after, another shot was fired. This time the gun was loaded with grape. By this one man was killed, and several wounded. Another charge of grape was fired out of Stann street. Some ten or twelve are reported wounded but only one man was reported killed as far as is known. Only one policeman was wounded during the whole fight. At one time the fire ing was quite brisk, resembling somewhat a picket skirmish, for the powder expended and the fuss made. The damage was remarkably light. The grape of the Metropolitans was more than the militia had bargained for and they are reported to have weakened rapidly. Many of them are reported to have skedaddled in great disorder. The United States troops reached the scenes of conflict and the remains of the militia retired leaving them in possession. The Kelloggites are quite jubilant, the McEneryites are quite to the reverse. The United States troops now occupying Jackson Square and other points in the city, and will prevent further disorder in the city. A company of United States Cavalry passed Camp Street at one o'clock to General Emery's head quarters, but soon after returned to Jackson Square. They are held in readiness to assist the police in repeling any attack that may be made. The city is full of rumors, at this hour, ten minutes past one, the streets are almost deserted. Up to 12 o'clock the streets were crowded with people, every one inquiring the news. The latest from the seat of war, is that thousands of rumors are current, but the facts of the case have been given above.

President Thiers is said to be in a dangerous condition. He is growing weak. His principal ailment is sleeplessness.

An Indianapolis correspondent of the Chicago Inter Ocean says that the present session of the Indiana Legislature will cost the State $250,000—just $150,000 more than it took to conduct any previous legislature; and for all that vast outlay of money there are but few acts of legislation of any value to the people. Auburn, January 27, '73—2m.

The Auburn Courier.

Thursday, March 13th, 1873.

[illegible] Standard Republican paper, [illegible] is going for the large number of Radicals that voted for [illegible] of salaries, an unusual [illegible] that class of journals.

The Senate has voted increasing the per diem of township trustees from $2.50 to $3. Yeas, 27, nays, 15. The same body voted to increase county commissioners' pay to [illegible] dollars per day.

Persons living along lines of railway will be interested in knowing that the House has passed a bill which provides that in suits against railroad companies for damages for stock killed, the judgment shall include a reasonable allowance for plaintiff's attorney fees.

The Legislature.

The Senate on the 26th ult., passed a bill making it unlawful for keepers of public biliard tables to allow minors to congregate about the room, or to play. Also a bill making it a misdemeanor to employ them in the sale of liquors.

Gov. Hendricks has signed the temperance bill, and, for once in his life has taken a decided stand upon a question which is likely to make him some enemies in his own party.

The above is from the Press, and is an equivical endorsement of the act of Gov. Hendricks. It is afraid that he has made some enemies, which doubtless tickles it under the fifth rib.

After studying the matter over, six or eight days; feeling the pulse of the people, as to whether the law would be proper or not, and with many misgivings, Gov. Hendricks finally signed the temperance bill, and it is now the law of the State.—Indianian.

That is more than Gov. Baker did on the apportionment bill.

The House on Wednesday of last week, almost without debate and by an overwhelming vote, passed a bill providing that any person holding office under the laws of the State who shall get drunk shall forfeit his office. The offense to be proven, by the finding of a court [illegible]. The vote on the passage of the bill was seventy-four to fourteen.

The House last Monday passed Senate bill No. 10, so amending the act for the incorporation of cities, as to provide that lots of five acres or more situated within the corporate limits of cities shall no longer be exempt from assessment for municipal taxes.

The most despicable coward in America is Vice President Wilson. He had the unmanliness to lay the blame of his connection with the Credit Mobiler swindle upon the grave of his dead wife. It would have been more to his credit, if he had committed "pleasant purjury," like Squire Colfax. Of such is not the kingdom of Heaven, but of such is the republican party.

Grant told Congressman Warner of Philadelphia, that if the bill passed congress increasing his salary, without including theirs, or other officers of the Government, he would veto it.— Therefore the self-sacrificing and patriotic Congressmen consented to receive $2,500 each, in order that they may have the privilege of giving him an extra $100,000. This magnanimity and generosity on their part is truly admirable.

We mark as a curious coincidence that Grant and Boss Tweed had their character vindicated at the same time. The President in his Inaugural alluded to his being reelected as a complete answer to all the charges that have been made against him. On that same 4th of March Mr. Tweed was set all right in the same manner, by the Senate of New York declining to expel him from his seat. That is the way that men are vindicated in Washington and and Albany.

Senator Pomeroy's story reads well, and after a man had told it, say twenty-five or thirty times, he might begin to believe it. But the average American citizen has undergone a wonderful growth as to the cynicism of his mind during the last half a dozen years or so. Therefore it is a trifle probable that men will wonder how a man who does his banking business in such a loose way as the Senator says he does his, ever got so immensely rich as the Senator is.

[illegible] will restrict [illegible] purposes, [illegible] the signature [illegible] become a law.— This bill provides for dividing the State into 38 judicial circuits. Noble, DeKalb and Steuben counties constitute the Thirty-Sixth. [illegible] provides for abolishing the Common Pleas Courts, and transferring their business to the Circuit Courts. Also in another bill proposed to pay the Circuit Judges three thousand dollars a year each, and to allow each county having the requisite population a prosecutor with a salary of one thousand a year, making the total expense of the State Judiciary, outside of the Supreme Court, $206,000 [illegible].

The monstrous swindle was denounced in its conception by Elihu B. Washburn in Congress, so that no congressional subscriber to the Credit Mobiler can dare to plead ignorance of the nature of his investment. They simply and with their eyes open, robbed the people by imposing on them a highway [illegible] million dollars for each State in the Union. Not one of Ames' confreres in this gigantic fraud—not Colfax, nor Patterson, nor Bingham nor Dawes, nor Garfield, nor Kelley, nor Wilson, nor Brooks—not one of them—should not be separated from Ames himself in the final punishment. There is no escape from the plain and sober logic of "All or none." and we say in the name of public justice, all.

Ministers of the gospel well be pleased to learn that a bill for their benefit was introduced into the House last Saturday. It is bill 533, introduced by Mr. Blocher, and fixes compensations of pastors, priests, etc, for preaching funeral sermons. It allowes the pastors, priests and ministers to charge a fee of from five to ten dollars which shall become a lien upon the estate of the deceased the same as other funeral expenses. In case the estate is valued at one hundred thousand dollars or more, (anything in reason) may be charged. But, if the person officiating at the funeral, shall have previously received a liberal fee for marrying the deceased, he shall not charge a larger fee than is allowed in the first section. Referred to the Committee of Benevolent Institution.

GRANT'S PEACE.

BLOODSHED AT LAST.

[illegible] Telegraph.]

New Orleans, March 5.—Between nine and ten o'clock to-night the McEnery millitia attacked the third precinct police station. They commenced the attack by firing into the building The firing was returned by the police. Soon after General Badge Chief of the Metropolitan police, moved down Charles Street, from the canal with about two hundred men and one piece of artillery. Quite a large crowd had collected on Jackson Square and on the streets leading thereto. When near this crowd Gen. Badger ordered them to disperse. The militia refused to give way [illegible] fired a blank cartridge, and soon after, another shot was fired. This time the gun was loaded with grape. By this, one man was killed, and several wounded. Another charge of grape was fired out of Stann street. Some ten or twelve are reported wounded but only one man was reported killed as far as is known. Only one policeman was wounded during the whole fight. At one time, the firing was quite brisk, resembling somewhat a picket skirmish, for the powder expended and the fuss made. The damage was remarkably light. The grape of the Metropolitans was more than the militia had bargained for and they are reported to have weakened rapidly. Many of them are reported to have skedaddled in great disorder. The United States troops reached the scenes of conflict and the remains of the militia retired, leaving them in possession. The Kelloggites are quite jubilant, the McEneryites are quite to the reverse. The United States troops now occupying Jackson Square and other points in the city, and will prevent further disorder in the city. A company of United States Cavalry passed Camp Street at one o'clock to General Emery's head quarters, but soon after returned to Jackson Square. They are held in readiness to assist the police in repeling any attack that may be made. The city is full of rumors, at this hour, ten minutes past one, the streets are almost deserted. Up to 12 o'clock the streets were crowded with people, every one inquiring the news. The latest from the seat of war, is that thousands of rumors are current, but the facts of the case have been given above.

President Thiers is said to be in a [illegible] condition. He is [illegible] week. His principal ailment is sleeplessness.

An Indianapolis correspondent of the Chicago Inter-Ocean says that the present session of the Indiana Legislature will cost the State $250,000—just $150,000 more than it took to conduct any previous legislature; and for all that was outlaw of money there are but few acts of legislation of any value to the people. No one [illegible] Indiana [illegible] the people last fall and with [illegible] election thereof, every citizen will be able to make his own comments, and draw his own conclusions, on the facts contained in the statement, of the paper.

A very pleasant party came off at the Lent House last Friday evening. Though the weather was quite inclement the attendance was good, and all enjoyed the occasion. Mr. Cowles knows how to conduct these affairs to the benefit of all.

Club Dance.

On Friday, March 21st, 1873, the Auburn Social Dance Club will give i's first hop at the Rainier Hall. Each member is requested to be present as important business will be transacted. The ladies have a cordial invitation.

The Old Folks' Hop, at Cass's Hall last Tuesday evening, was a most enjoyable affair, conducted with a view to the pleasure and comfort of all. The supper at the Swineford House, was a magnificent affair and the jolly host and his aimable lady were highly complimented.

Prof. Leitels' orchestra band of Fort Wayne gave the greatest satisfaction in the excellent music it produced, and all are anxious to have them return again at no distant day.

The citizens of South Whitley were very much horrified on last Friday evening by the self-destruction of Mrs C. D. Moe, who committed suicide about 4 o'clock in the evening on the day above mentioned, by shooting herself through the head with a revolver. It is supposed she discharged five shots before the deed was accomplished. The ball entered the temple and passing upward lodged just under the scalp. Death was almost instantaneous. Temporary insanity is assigned as the cause of her rash act. She was about 22 years of age. Her husband and frends have the sympathy of the community.—Whitley Com.

[illegible] has certainly been misinformed or else have done a bad job of guessing.

The surest and most direct mode of removing or counteracting kidney, bladder and glandular diseases, mental and physical debility, diabetes, [illegible] female weakness and uterine complaints, is to [illegible] partake of Smolander's Buchu. This vegetable medicine may be relied on as being a tonic, diuretic solvent and alterative, and the best preparation of Buchu.

To stimulate the nervous system and invigorate it when prostrated by such distressing maladies as kidney, bladder and glandular diseases, mental and physical debility, diabetes, gravel, female irregularities, loss of vigor, and complaints of the urine genital organs and general debility, there is no medicine equal to or which acts so promptly as Smolander's Buchu. It strikes at the root of such diseases and a perfect cure is the result.

Grand Concert.

Everybody should remember that a grand concert will be given at the M. E. Church next Tuesday evening, March 18, by the singing class now under instructions from Prof. Bennett. These concerts are rare occurrences and our citizens should not be slow to appreciate them.—Prof. Bennett has been making good progress with his class, and the public may expect to hear some fine music by our best home talent. Solos, duetts quartetts and choruses will be presented and a good evening's entertainment may be anticipated and realized.

The way to make a town, is to do all you can to make the business of your neighbor a success. Advertise your merchants by speaking a good for them wherever you go. Always be on the alert to induce new branches of industry to locate in your midst. Judiciously aid every enterprise that promises to add facilities to your town as a depot of supplies. Support a local newspaper by taking and paying for it, and feeling an interest in its welfare. If you know of any item of news which would interest the public, take some pains to let the editor know it. Dont hold your vacant lots at a price too high don't ask too much for rents, and don't hold a penny so near your eyes as to hide a dollar at arms length.

BALTIMORE & OHIO R. R.

Defiance, Ohio, March 10, 1873.

T. C. Mays, Editor Courier—

Yours in reference to the proposed Chicago extension of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad was duly received. I am glad to be able to inform you that work on this road here and easterly is not abandoned, but is progressing finely, and that the road will be built, and in operation from their Lake Erie Division to this place by October next, in all human probability.

I trust the contracts will be let in a very short time for its continuation from our place westerly through Indiana.

Yours very respectfully,
Wm. C. Holgate.

There is one feature of the new Liquor Law which may not have been generally noticed. It is that the law does not forbid any and all persons from selling liquor, in any quantities, without any license or permit—provided it is not to be drank on the premises where sold. Subject therefore, to the risks of the buyer getting intoxicated and the penalties thereunto attached, everybody—every grocer, druggist, merchant, or person engaged in other business, may freely sell liquor by the small, without fee or license—if it is put up in shape to be carried away before being drank. This feature, caused opposition to the bill on the part of some of the strongest, life-long temperance men in the legislature.

Representative Shutt returned home last Monday. Mr. Shutt has filled the position with honor to himself and with fidelity to his constituents. His vote is recorded on the right side of all measures and though he did'nt bloviate much during the session, he was always there discharging his duty like an honest man.—When the bill to increase the pay of Representatives from 5 to 8 dollars a day came up he voted squarely against it.—Last Saturday when a motion was made to vote the Clerks and Sergeant-at-arms, and pages one hundred dollars extra besides their regular wages, he opposed it, characterized it as an outrage, but notwithstanding this a Republican Legislatives voted the people's money to them, without a bit of trouble. Take it all in all and this "the best Legislature the State ever saw," is about the greatest failure on record. Had there been no limitation to the session that eight dollars a day would have kept them in session forever.

[illegible] Spencerian Steel Pens, and after trying them more thoroughly are convinced of their superior merits. These pens are comprised in fifteen numbers, each differing in flexibility and fineness of point, so that the most fastidious penman [illegible] find among the fifteen just such a pen as suits him. The Spencerian Pens are famous for their elasticity, smoothness of point and great durability, and a near approximation to the real Swan Quill Pen than anything hitherto made.

For the convenience of those who may wish to try them, a sample card of [illegible] Spencerian Pens may be had by mail by enclosing 25 cents to Messrs. Ivison, Blakeman, Taylor & Co., 138 and 140 Grand Street, N. Y., or the pens may be bought at almost any store where pens are sold.

Poor Men Wanted.

A little spurt was made in subscription to Eel River stock the latter part of last week, and the amount now remaining to be subscribed is not far from $8,000.—Some of our citizens have subscribed liberally, others are too mean to do their part. We know a prominent machinist that won't subscribe a cent, because he may die in a year or two and then he will be that much poorer. There are others that beg and beg to be left off, and many that enter weak excuses, and argue until they are whipped out, upon every issue, who sneak out and have not the manhood to help in an enterprise that they know will benefit them. But take this class, and as a general thing, they would spell Columbus with a "K."

What we want is about 2,000 more poor men, those who work hard and earn their living by the sweat of their brow, that whole-souled, liberal class that are the main supporters of all public enterprises. When we get a few of these moss covered fogies out of our way, and their places filled by this class, then there will be no trouble to raise a subscription, when the public good demands it. But there are a number yet that have not subscribed, who will on application. Let another effort be made and we see know reason that this small balance cannot be secured.

The miserable condition of our streets, drains, crossings and sidewalks was never more apparent than it is now. We do not think it is the fault of the Marshal, but our town officers are certainly responsible to some extent. The fact is the condition of things in our town organization is alarming because there is no order or official discipline in any part of it. There has been no report made of receipts and expenditures of moneys for several years. Our citizens had better look into this matter, and see how things stand to-day.—Last spring we were in favor of putting the best men in office without regard to their politics, but no the Republicans must have their regular ticket, and the consequence is that little or nothing has been done.—We presume the same programme will be made for the present year, and thus we go on from year to year without the advancement in the improvement of our town that is needed. Other towns much larger than this, can lay aside their political prejudice for the good of their town, and vote for good men; but Auburn must have her her political ticket whether good, bad or indifferent.

We trust, however, that there are a few left who believe in improving the town, and making a proper and correct official report of everthing. Personally it makes but little difference to any one of our citizens, who hold office in a political sense, so that every thing is carried on in an economical and straightforward manner. There is a disposition upon the part of many to eschew politics for once, and nominate a ticket of good men, and elect them, and try and obtain a better condition of things in the future. We believe in creating an office of Street Commissioner, relieving the Marshal from that department, with the right man to fill it, advance this much needed improvement in our place.

Does it Pay?—A great many business men do not advertise because they think it 'don't pay.'

John V. Farwell says: 'Without advertising I should be a poor man to-day.' A. T. Stewart says, 'He who invests one dollar in business should invest one dollar in advertising.' Robert Bonner said, 'My success is owing to my liberality in advertising.' Amos Lawrence said, 'Advertising has furnished me with a competence.' Stephen Girard said, 'Constant and persistent advertising is the sure road to wealth.' Nicholas Longworth, 'I advertised my productions and made money.'

Here is the evidence of the most successful business men in America, of the present and the past. It is a well know fact that Barnum can make a fortune every three years by the judicious use of printers' ink. There are merchants in all places who could increase their sales $10 000 a year, at least, by expending $200 in advertising. 'I don't think he amounts to much; he don't advertise,' is a very common remark among farmers, mechanics, and laboring men of all classes. It is a well known fact, not only in this but in all other communities, that the men who do the largest amount of business are those who advertise their wares. True, men may advertise foolishly and fail to receive returns; but a judicious use of printers' ink brings a rich return for every dollar invested.

A Flourishing Institution.—The Mt Union College, located at Mt. Union, O. near Alliance, is perhaps the most flourishing of all educational institutions in that State. The attendance is very large and so extensive has been the demand that large improvements and additions are being made, and will be made in the future to accommodate all. All persons contemplating a collegiate course will find greater facilities at this place than another. One superior advantage is given from the fact that those who depend upon teaching to defray expenses, can teach fall, winter and spring terms, and attend the regular terms of this college at the same time. Our friends in this section cannot do better than to give it their earnest consideration. For catalogue and particulars, address,

The widow of James Fisk, Jr., has sued the Credit Mobilier for 20,000 shares of its stock. ....The Supply sailed from New York for Trieste, the other day, having on board a cargo of every variety of American products and machinery for the Vienna Exposition. The Guard is now being loaded at Brooklyn, and will sail in a few days. No American locomotives, billiard tables or light carriages will be sent to the Exposition. America will appear to the greatest advantage in the department of fine arts.

A committee of the Constitutional Commission of New York charged with the duty of investigating the city, county and town debts in the State have reported that these local debts reach the enormous sum of $214,000,000, exclusive of the State debt proper.

It is believed the enterprise will prove a success.....A brutal prize-fight at Collier's Station, W. Va., the other day, between the bruisers Hicken and Campbell, was broken up in a row, after 32 rounds had been fought. Several pistol-shots were fired, but unfortunately none of the brutes were hit by the flying balls.

At the annual meeting of the stockholders of the Union Pacific railroad, at New York, the following Board of Directors was elected: Horace F. Clark, John Duff, Augustus Schell, Oakes Ames, Oliver Ames, Sidney Dillon, C. S. Bushnell, Elisha Atkins, Royall E. Robbins, F. Gordon Dexter, E. H. Baker, Joseph Richardson, George S. The election in Arkansas has resulted in the ratification of the constitutional amendment doing away with disfranchisement.

The political troubles in Louisiana have finally culminated in bloodshed. The McEnery militia, a few nights ago, attacked the Third Precinct Police Station, in New Orleans. They commenced an indiscriminate firing into the building, which was returned by the police. Gen. Badger, Chief of Police, with 200 Metropolitans and one piece of artillery, executed a flank movement on the militia. He peppered them lively with grape-shot, scattering them in every direction. He proposes to sue the Speaker and Sergeant-at-Arms of the House for false imprisonment, and thus bring the question of the power of Congress before the Supreme Court....The President has appointed Charles W. Mr. Ringgold, we believe, is a native-born citizen of New Orleans....The Secretary of the Treasury has issued a call for $50,000,000 of 1862 bonds, second and third series, and registered bonds. Forty-five millions are coupon bonds, and $5,000,000 registered bonds.

The Senate committee to investigate the charges against Pomeroy report that none of the charges of bribery have been sustained. Senator Thurman dissents from the report.

The inauguration ceremonies appear to have been a grand success, from beginning to end, being marred only by the extreme cold which prevailed throughout the day. The procession, both in its military and civic divisions, far surpassed that of any preceding inauguration, and, with the exception of the grand review in 1865, made the most brilliant display ever witnessed at the capital. The ball was the grand feature of the evening. The attendance was immense, and everything passed off pleasantly. The scene in the ball-room is described as one of dazzling splendor, far surpassing anything of the kind ever witnessed in the country. The President's inaugural address is printed in full in another place.... Hereafter the Congressional Globe will be issued from the public printing office in quarto form....The bill passed by Congress providing for an equestrian statue of Gen. Thomas at Washington donates eighty-eight condemned cannon for that purpose. The statue is to be erected under the direction of the Society of the Army of the Cumberland.

Not a single bill containing a subsidy or a land grant of any description passed during the late session of Congress....A Washington correspondent writes that there is much canvassing there as to the Presidential policy to be pursued with regard to Federal appointments. On this point the authorities are conflicting. Some friends of the President claim that he will make numerous changes throughout the country, especially among postmasters and collectors; while others are confident that, with but few exceptions, the present incumbents will be reappointed for a second term....It is asserted that there will not be a single Cabinet change, with the exception, possibly, of Mr. Boutwell....Levi P. Lucky, of Illinois, is henceforth to perform the functions of Private Secretary of the President.

Castelar, the Spanish Minister of Foreign Affairs, asks all nations which have not yet recognized the Spanish Republic to do so at once....At Huanuco, Peru, recently, Cols. Garrinda and Ceballos, exiled revolutionists, were shot dead while escaping. An armed mob forced its way into the halls of Congress, accused the Government of complicity in the assassination of these men, and demanded a change in the Ministry. A change seems imminent, and a revolution is feared....The Grand Trunk railway, of Canada, has determined to abandon its six-feet gauge, and re-adopt the ordinary narrow one, for economical reasons.

A reward of £1,000 has been offered for his apprehension.

The discovery of immense frauds on the Bank of England causes the greatest excitement in London financial circles. The bank cautions the public against the negotiation of certain 5-20 and 10-40 United States bonds, aggregating $220,000. It is thought that the forgeries, which amount to fully $1,000,000, were prepared by a ring of American swindlers. The frauds were discovered by the Rotchschilds noticing in the same bills a difference in the color of the ink used. The reward offered for the arrest of the swindlers has been increased to $12,500.....The recent election in Quebec, Canada, was attended by another disgraceful riot. The roughs in the interest of the Government candidate charged several election precincts, seized the polling books and tore them up. The cavalry charged the mob, who made a slight resistance and scattered, the troops striking all in the way with the flat of their sabers, laying a few cheeks open. The city was placed under martial law, and the soldiers held possession of the streets all day.

It is reported that the frauds on the Bank of England amount to $2,000,000, and that of this amount $350,000 was drawn upon Jay Cooke, McCullough & Co.; $200,000 upon the Rothschilds, and a large amount, the exact figures unknown, upon the Barings....Gen. President Grant's Inaugural Address.

Fellow Citizens: Under Providence, I have been called a second time to act as Executive over this great nation. It has been my endeavor in the past to maintain all the laws, and, so far as lay in my power, to act for the best interests of the whole people. My best efforts will be given in the same direction in the future, aided, I trust, by my four years' experience in the office. When my first term of the office of Chief Executive began, the country had not recovered from the effects of a great internal revolution, and three of the former States of the Union had not been restored to their federal relations. It seemed to me wise that no new question should be raised as that condition of affairs existed; therefore, in the past four years, so far as I could control events, I have endeavored to restore harmony and advance the public credit, commerce and all the arts of peace and progress.

It is my firm conviction that the civilized world is tending toward republicanism, or the government by the people through their chosen representatives, and our own great Republic is destined to be the guiding star to all others. Under our Republic we support an army less than that of any European power of any standing, and a navy less than that of at least five of them. There could be no extension of territory on this continent which would call for an increase of this force, but rather might such an extension enable us to diminish it. The theory of government changes with general progress. Now, that the telegraph is made available for communicating thought, together with rapid transit by steam, all parts of the continent are made contiguous for all purposes of the Government, and communication between the extreme limits of the country made easier than it was through the old thirteen States at the beginning of our national existence.

The effects of the late civil strife have been to free the slave and make him a citizen; yet he is not possessed of the civil rights which citizenship should carry with it. This is wrong, and should be corrected. To this correction I stand committed, so far as executive influence can avail. Social equality is not a subject to be legislated upon, nor shall I ask that anything be done to advance the social status of the colored man, except to give him a chance to develop what there is good in him. Give him access to schools, and when he travels let him feel assured that his conduct will regulate the treatment and fare that he will receive.

The States lately at war with the General Government are now happily rehabilitated, and no executive control is exercised in any one of them that would not be exercised in any other State under like circumstances.

In the first year of the past Administration the proposition came up for the admission of Santo Domingo as a territory of the Union. It was not a question of my seeking, but was a proposition from the people of Santo Domingo, and which I entertained. I believe now, as I did then, that it was for the best interests of this country, for the people of Santo Domingo and all concerned, that the proposition should be received favorably. It was, however, rejected as unconstitutional, and therefore the subject was never brought up again by me. In future, while I hold my present office, the subject of the acquisition of territory must have the support of the people before I will recommend any proposition looking to such an acquisition. I say here, however, that I do not share in the apprehension held by many as to the danger of a government becoming weakened and destroyed by reason of their extension of territory. Commerce, education and the rapid transit of thought and matter by telegraph and steam have changed this belief, or, rather, this disbelief that our Great Maker is preparing the world in His own good time to become one nation, speaking one language, and when armies and navies will be no longer required.

My efforts in the future will be directed to the restoration of good feeling between the different sections of our common country; to the restoration of our currency to a fixed value, as compared with the world's standard of values, gold, and, if possible, to a par with it; to the construction of cheap routes of transit throughout the land, to the end that the products of all sections may find a market and leave a living remuneration to the producer; to the maintenance of friendly relations with all our neighbors and with distant nations; to the establishment of our commerce and a share in carrying trade upon the ocean; to the encouragement of such manufacturing industries as can be economically pursued in this country, to the end that the exports of home products and industries may pay for our imports; to the only sure method of returning to and permanently maintaining a specie basis; to the elevation of labor, and by a humane course to bring the aborigines of the country under the benign influences of education and civilization. It is either this or war of extermination. Wars of extermination, engaged in by people pursuing commerce and all industrial pursuits, are expensive even against the weakest people, and are demoralizing and wicked. Our superiority of strength and the advantages of civilization should make us lenient toward the Indian. The wrong already inflicted upon him should be taken into account and the balance placed to his credit. The moral view of the question should be considered, and the question asked: Cannot the Indian be made a useful and productive member of society by proper teaching and treatment? When the effort is made in good faith we will stand approved before the civilized nations of the earth, and in our own consciousness, for having made it. All these things are not to be accomplished by one individual, but they will receive support and such recommendation to Congress as will in my judgment best serve to carry them into effect. I beg your support and encouragement.

It has been, and is, my earnest desire to correct abuses that have grown up in the civil service of the country. To secure this reformation, rules and regulations, methods of appointment and promotion were established and have been traced. My efforts for such reformation shall be continued. To the best of my judgment the spirit of the rules adopted will be maintained.

I acknowledge, before this assemblage, representing, as it does, every section of our country, the obligations I am under to my countrymen for the great honor they have conferred on me by returning me to the highest office within their land, and the further obligation resting on me to render them the best services within my power. This I promise, looking forward with the greatest anxiety to the day when I shall be released from responsibilities that at times are almost overwhelming, and from which I have scarcely had a respite from the eventful firing upon Fort Sumter in April, 1862, to the present day. My services were then tendered and accepted under the first call for troops growing out of that event. I did not ask for place or position, and was entirely without influence or acquaintance of persons of influence, but was resolved to perform my part in a struggle threatening the very existence of the nation. I performed a conscious duty without asking promotion or command, and without a revengeful feeling toward any section or any individual. Notwithstanding this, throughout the war and from my candidacy for my present office in 1868 to the close of the last Presidential campaign, I have been the subject of abuse and slander scarcely ever equaled in political history, which to-day I feel that I can afford to disregard, in view of your verdict, which I gracefully accept as my vindication.

THE PLOT THICKENS.

Startling Revelations Concerning the Angel of South Bend—More Evidence of his Guilt in the Nesbitt Matter.

[From the Chicago Times.]

Ample proof, if any were needed, of the venality of the Seraph of South Bend is furnished in the records of the Postoffice Department, a report of which is contained in the Times, Washington special, published elsewhere this morning. From this it appears that the strange affection entertained by the New York stationer for the coming Vice-President was fully reciprocated. Indeed, the generous Schuyler, after his incumbency to the Vice-Presidency, went to the extreme of filing an argument in the archives of the Postoffice, where it still remains in black and white, in behalf of the continuance of Nesbitt's stamped-envelope contract. Although committing an indictable offence, he proved a successful advocate, and the contract was continued without the little formality of advertising for the lowest bids, as the law required. It is presumed this time that Mr. Colfax will not rise to explain; and this damning evidence, proving conclusively that to his constant sycophancy, demagoguism, and venality he added actual criminality, should be sufficient to convince the last adherent who has pinned his faith to him.

"A most astounding revelation has just been made against Vice-President Colfax, that rivets fast upon him the long line of deception and falsehood that he has gradually developed from his South Bend speech to the present hour. It will be remembered that in his very latest explanation, he insisted that Geo. F. Nesbitt, of New York, had given him the $4,000 at odd times, in the summer of 1863, as voluntary contributions out of friendship, though a total stranger, and that all the favor that was ever returned were a few tickets to the inauguration ceremonies in the spring of 1869. Now it has just come to light, from the official records of the Postoffice Department, that Mr. Colfax was the attorney and lobbyist of Nesbitt, and that he filed an argument in reply to one made by the Attorney-General for the extension of the stamped envelope contract, then in the hands of this very same Mr. Nesbitt. It is there indorsed as submitted by him. The history of the transaction is simply this: When Postmaster Gen. Randall retired from the department he allowed Nesbitt's contract to continue, without advertising, for another year. When Postmaster Gen. Creswell came in, he thought this was irregular, and called on the Attorney-Generrl for an opinion, which was soon forthcoming, and adverse to Mr. Randall's course. It was to this that Mr. Colfax filed a reply, and on this Nesbitt's contract was allowed to run until some time after, when bids were invited. In order that no injustice may be done Mr. Colfax, it should be stated that while the 20 pages of argument in Nesbitt's behalf are not in his handwriting, his letter indorsing it and transmitting it is there. It may have been copied for him, or it may have come from Nesbitt's lawyer, but Mr. Colfax alone appears on the record as making appeal for Nesbitt in violation of the act of 1862, making such an offense from the Vice-President or a Senator or member the subject of criminal indictment. It is not believed that Mr. Colfax will rise to explain any more."

The Report on the Case of Colfax.

The report of the Judiciary Committee of the House of Representatives, constructs a broad causeway for the escape of the disgraced Vice-President from the punishment he deserves. The substance of the report is, that, inasmuch as Mr. Colfax's acceptance of Oakes Ames' bribes was prior to his election as Vice-President, he is entitled to go scot-free. Even if the principle were conceded that a public officer is not impeachable for infamous crimes committed before the beginning of his term of office, the question would still remain, whether Mr. Colfax's egregious lying and perjury, which are of very recent date, do not subject him to impeachment. Does the Judiciary Committee mean to be understood that perjury is not a high crime and misdemeanor, and therefore not an impeachable offense? His acceptance of the bribe from Oakes Ames was, indeed, previous to his election as Vice-President; but the perjury by which he attempted to screen that crime is not two months old. The Judiciary Committee have virtually decided that perjury is not an impeachable offense!

The strange report of this committee justifies an allusion to the bias of its prominent members. Its chairman, Mr. Bingham, is one of the incriminated members of the House, who deserves expulsion if Mr. Colfax deserves impeachment. He was so sensible of the scandal of a report from him exempting Colfax, that he waived his right, and the preparation of the report was devolved upon Butler. But not even Bingham was more disqualified than Butler for making an impartial report. Butler is, so to speak, the retained counsel of Oakes Ames. It is well understood that he is to be Ames' chief defender against the recommendation of the Poland committee for his expulsion. Now, as Colfax and Ames are in the same boat, it is too evident that a man who has undertaken to clear Ames is unfit to pronounce a candid judgment on the case of Colfax. We accordingly find that, in his report, Butler has adroitly contrived to exempt Colfax from impeachment on grounds which equally exempt Ames from the penalty of expulsion. The arguement is, that a public officer can be deposed only for crimes committed after the commencement of his term. It hence follows that if Colfax cannot be impeached for accepting a bribe before he became Vice-President, Oakes Ames cannot be expelled for offering bribes before his last election to Congress. Gen. Butler, with his usual unscrupulous dexterity, has attempted, in his report on Colfax's case, to establish a principal which would equally protect his client Oakes Ames. Such a report, from such a source, cannot escape scrutiny and criticism.

The first point to be made against Gen. Butler's report is, that the action of the committee does not conform to the instructions of the House. The committee were required to form a judgment as to the sufficiency of testimony; and, shirking this duty, they have presented an elaborated argument on a question of law. If their opinion on the legal question is correct, the testimony is of no sort of consequence. The committee hold that a public officer is not impeachable for infamous crimes or misdemeanors perpetrated before the commencement of his term of office. If this be sound legal doctrine, no proofs of villainy, however damning, could have the weight of a feather in determining their recommendation. But what was referred to the committee was not a question of law, but a question of evidence; and they have violated their duty in reporting on a different subject from the one committed to them. The resolution of the House was to this effect: "That the testimony taken by the select committee of which Mr. Poland is chairman, be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, with instructions to inquire whether there is ANYTHING IN SAID TESTIMONY that warrants the impeachment of any officer of the United States not a member of the House."

The committee have manifestly evaded the only subject-matter referred to them, and gone off into the discussion of a legal question on which their opinion was not asked. If their judgment on the legal question be correct, all consideration of the testimony is irrelevant, inasmuch as no testimony establishing the guilt of an officer before the beginning of his term can have any bearing on the question of his impeachment, if he can be impeached only for things done arter' he was sworn in. What the Judiciary Committee were required to report upon was simply whether the facts against Mr. Colfax amounted to an impeachable offense. Instead of this, they have discussed a question of jurisdiction on which their opinion was not asked. It was not for them, it is not even for the House, to decide whether the date of the crimes is a bar to conviction. This is a question for the court that tries the impeachment. Had Mr. Colfax been impeached, he, or his counsel, could have pleaded before the Senate that the date of the crime was a bar to conviction; and if the plea is valid, the case would have been dismissed. But the sole authority to determine this point is vested in the Senate. The Judiciary Committee have not only disregarded their instructions, but have usurped a prerogative of the court for the trial of impeachments, in assuming to decide that Mr. Colfax is not answerable for bribes taken before he entered on his present office. It was the duty of the committee, under their instructions, to say whether the facts amounted to an impeachable offense, and to leave the point of law to the only tribunal competent to decide it, namely, the Senate acting as a court of impeachment.

The reasoning of Gen. Butler's report would have been in place in an argument by Mr. Colfax's counsel on his trial before the Senate. Until the court for the trial of impeachments decides that the antedating of the crime is a bar to conviction, the House (much less a committee of the House to whom the question was not referred) has no right to assume that this point of law is settled. It is the duty of the House to present an indictment founded on the facts; if the early date of the crime is to be offered as a bar to conviction, that is the appropriate duty of the counsel for the defense when the case comes to trial. What Mr. Butler has done in his report is to assume the role of Mr. Colfax's counsel before the court of impeachment, which can alone decide the question which he discusses.

The public press might excuse itself from refuting an argument which is so irrelevant; but it can be disposed of within so brief a compass that we will point out its fallacy. It is not necessary to seek any other premises for our reasoning than the language of the Constitution. We rely upon this provision: "Judgment in cases of impeachment shall not extend further than removal from office, and disqualification to hold and enjoy any office of honor, trust or profit under the United States." The scope and spirit of impeachment jurisdiction is very clearly exhibited in the clause which we have printed in italics, which bears so closely on the limitation of punishment by the date of the crime. The framers of the Constitution thought the public interest might require that an officer who had committed an impeachable offense should forever be excluded from holding any office. This proves, most conclusively, that, in their opinion, an impeachable crime taints the whole subsequent life of the perpetrators, and may operate as a perpetual disqualification. Now, what is the essence of this disqualification? Not the date of the crime, but the crime itself. As the taint and its consequences do not cease with the termination of the office, so they do not begin with its commencement. It is the crime which disqualifies; and the penalty ordained by the Constitution establishes the principle that it ought not to be condoned by any lapse of time. It is the purpose of Gen. Butler's report to prove that lapse of time does condone an impeachable offense. It holds that an infamous crime committed by Mr. Colfax in 1868 does not render him liable to impeachment, whereas if it had been committed subsequent to the 4th of March 1869, he would not be exempt. But if a crime, once committed, may disqualify him from forever holding office again, why should the mere date of its commission protect him from the penalty? The ground of perpetual exclusion from office for a previous crime, is not technical, but moral. The object is to secure purity and integrity in positions of public trust. And if, as the Constitution declares, crime may perpetually disqualify, it is a strange doctrine indeed that the date of its commission may operate as a bar to the penalty. According to Gen. Butler's theory, if it should come to light that a Vice-President had committed sodomy or highway robbery previous to his election, impeachment would have no hold on him, and the Government could not relieve itself from the disgrace of having such an officer. Such a doctrine is as revolting to sound morals as it is contrary to the Constitution, which does not limit impeachment to crimes committed previous to the beginning of a term of office, and expressly recognizes the abiding, ineffaceable dispqualification of guilt by putting no limit to the duration of punishment. Nothing can be clearer than that, in the purview of the Constitution, it is the crime, and not the mere date of it, which renders a man unfit to hold offices of honor and trust. Even if this point could be considered as doubtful, it is the province of the Senate, and not of a committee of the House to whom it was not referred, to decide it.—New York World.

A Man Without Muscles.

A faro-dealer in this city about four years ago was compelled to relinquish his profession by a paralysis of his right fore-finger. The nerve cell (in the spinal column) which supplied the joint had died from overwork, and the muscle of the finger gradually passed away through disuse—atrophied, the doctors call it. The dead cell in the spinal marrow in some way, in contact or sympathy, destroyed its neighbor, which controlled the same finger on the left hand. The atrophy extended over both hands, up the arms, to the chest, shoulders and neck. At the present time there is not a muscle in those portions of the man's body. The arms hang useless and absolutely fleshless—mere skin and bone. The intercostal muscles are gone, and the man can make no respiratory movements requiring their action; the neck is œsophagus, trachea, and spinal column clad in skin, and that is all—the processes of the latter standing out as plainly as in a skeleton. The head, unsupported, hangs down on the chest, as if it were merely tied on. By a movement of the loins the man can throw his head over so that it will fall resting on his shoulders and back, but otherwise than thus, mechanically, he cannot control its motion. What parts the disease will next attack is a question with the physicians at Bellevue, where the case was shown yesterday, but the result is hardly doubtful. Breathing is done wholly now by the diaphragm, and must cease if that be attacked.—New York World.

Historical Parallel to Monte Cristo.

The London Times publishes an extraordinary story of an escape of six Communists from the Fortress of Port Louis, between Brest and La Rochelle. The writer says that he and five companions discovered a way from their dormitory to a cellar under it, and determined to make a road from the cellar to the sea. They sunk a shaft in the earth thirteen feet deep, and excavated a tunnel forty-six feet deep, till they reached the wall of the rampart. All this had been done with nails torn out of the woodwork, but when the rampart wall was reached the nails were useless. It is constructed of enormous blocks of granite, joined by Roman cement, and is sixteen feet thick. The prisoners, however, tore a bar out of a window, and by indescribable labor excavated a hole through which they could creep out on the rocks, whence they escaped to England. The Times heads the story "An Historical Parallel to Monte Cristo."

FARM AND GARDEN.

Feeding Straw.

A correspondent of the New York Times writes: As I look back at my first lessons in the care of cattle, I can see that the poor dumb brute has better care than in years past. The stabling was not thought of. They must be content with the outside of the barn and the soft side of a snow-bank. And when we wished to feed them straw we must starve them to it. They must not even have a taste of other food (except a little corn in the ear) for fear they would not eat straw. But I soon learned that that was not the proper way; they liked a variety of food as well as man. For instance, you take a man, confine him to one kind of food, say meat or bread, and see how long he will relish it; he will soon be so disgusted with it that he cannot bear the sight of it. I think it is somewhat so with the dumb beasts. You give them nothing but straw every day, they become sick and tired of it; they eat with no relish, and it is so with corn-stalks, or even hay, and we all know they prefer this above all other winter food, and you confine them to this for some time, and then give them a feed of good straw, and they will go at it with an avidity that will astonish you. It is like a man who has been kept on some preferable diet for a long time, and you place a piece of corn bread, or some other plain food before him, and he will take it in preference. From experimenting I have arrived at this conclusion—to feed straw and feed it profitably you must feed it mostly in cold weather, and but once per day, and let the other foddering be hay or corn-stalks, as I believe in feeding but twice per day. I do not believe in feeding corn-stalks in extreme cold weather, for they are dry and brittle, and they waste them, while in milder weather they are not as hard and brittle, and they eat them with a greater relish and there is less waste; therefore, I would advise feeding hay once per day in extreme cold weather. When you are feeding straw, it is a very good plan—when you do not salt your cattle otherwise—to make a weak brine and sprinkle your straw with it. You must not think, because it is cold weather, that your stock don't need salt; if you do, the poor dumb brutes will suffer for the want of it, and you will be the loser in the end.

Training a Heifer.

A writer in the Rural Home says: Cows usually become addicted to kicking when heifers, from being milked by abusive milkers. I have never seen an old cow become a kicker unless abused. Instead of cows being averse to being milked when giving a large quantity, I have found it to be the reverse. When pasturage is good, and cows come home at night with udders distended with milk, they seem grateful to have it removed. Milking a heifer for the first time requires patience, for they will almost invariably kick. In such a case put a broad strap around her body, just in front of the udder, and buckle it up moderately tight, and as soon as she gets quiet (for she may kick around a little at first) take your pail, sit down and go to milking, for she is as helpless as a kitten. Do not attempt to use a rope instead of a strap, for it will not answer. This is a much better method than tying the legs, etc., as it does not hurt the animal in the least. A few applications of the strap, with plenty of patience and kindness, will cure the most obstinate case.

Exterminating Weeds.

A correspondent of the Rural Home writes: Annual or biennial plants, such as the daisy or ox eye, May weed, the rag weed, red-root, etc., are more difficult to extirpate, when they once get possession of the land, as their seeds will sometimes remain in the soil several years before germination. Careful weeding after thorough cultivation is the best way and perhaps the only way to clean the land when they once take possession—but in this, as with most other evils, "an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure." Farmers do not seem to realize the damage their crops suffer from these injurious weeds. If a neighbor's cattle break into their crops and trample, the damage is perceptible, but a growth of weeds and thistles may choke and rob the plant of food and moisture, so that it cannot mature its grain, and they take little note of it. Better, oftentimes, that half the land be left unseeded, and the balance well cultivated and clean of weeds.

Draught Horses.

No opinion could be more incorrect than the too generally received one that a horse draws by virtue of, or in proportion to, his weight and size. If this were the case the largest and heaviest animals could always draw the most, and his weight on the scale would be the best test of his capabilities. But facts in abundance prove it otherwise. Draught does not depend altogether upon weight and size. It is in great measure the result of a vital power. Although weight can render some assistance, the power of draught is chiefly owing to muscular action and nervous energy, which, again, are intimately connected with, and greatly dependent on, the temperament of the animal. The jennet, mule, ass, and blood horse have a much more energetic temperament than the carter, and, consequently, possess more muscular power than the latter in proportion to their weight and size. Their leverage, however, is not nearly so well suited for draught, and in that respect, when compared with the ordinary cart horse, they labor under a decided disadvantage.

Phosphate of Lime.

The Toronto Globe says: "Among other minerals, this most valuable manure occurs in Canada in immense deposits. All through the townships of Burgess and Crosby, as well as a considerable portion of the counties of Leeds, Lanark, and Frontenac, are found large and very valuable beds of the mineral. Near Brockville there have been established sulphuric acid works, and considerable quantities of acid have been manufactured. Some English companies have lately had their attention turned to utilizing the phosphate mines, and capitalists or their representatives were plentiful enough during last autumn, inspecting localities and testing mines. Large quantities of phosphate, averaging from 80 to 90 per cent. of pure mineral, are often met with, and some thousands of tons were shipped last year and the year before, to England, Scotland and Germany."

Court Plaster.

To make court-plaster, soak isinglass in a little warm water for twenty-four hours; then evaporate nearly all of the water by a gentle heat, dissolve the residue in a little proof spirits of wine, and strain the whole through a piece of open linen. The strained mass should be a stiff jelly when cooled. Now, extend a piece of silk on a wooden frame and fix it tight with tacks and woolen thread. Melt the jelly and apply it to the silk thinly and evenly with a hair brush. A second coating is applied when the first is dried. When the whole is dry, cover the surface with two or three coatings of balsam of Peru, applied in the same way. Plaster thus made is very pliable, and never breaks.

H. J. Raymond as a Reporter.

Although not a short-hand writer, the late Henry J. Raymond was an accomplished reporter, and unquestionably the most rapid writer connected with the press. He held his own with such stenographers as Robert Sutton and James A. Houston, two of the best short-hand reporters in the country at that period. With marvelous rapidity in writing, Mr. Raymond displayed great tact. One one occasion, when Daniel Webster was to speak in Boston, several reporters were sent from New York to report his speech, and Mr. Raymond attended for the Tribune. On his return, instead of losing time, he engaged a state-room on the Sound steamboat, where he wrote his long-hand notes. While the reporters were in Boston, types, cases and printers had been quietly placed on board the steamer, and as rapidly as Mr. Raymond wrote out the speech the printers "set it up." On their arrival at New York the speech was in type and ready for the press, and appeared the same morning in a late edition of the Tribune, much to the mortification of the other reporters and the surprise of other journalists.

One of the most striking instances of Mr. Raymond's accuracy and rapidity as a reporter occurred while he was representing the Courier and Enquirer at Washington. Mr. Webster was to make an important speech in the Senate. Mr. Raymond was present, and all the other papers were represented. Looking at the clock, it occurred to him that the Senator would finish about the hour of the closing of the mail. He therefore prepared himself. Webster began his speech. Raymond took every word down in long-hand—the other reporters, of course, in short-hand. Webster, it is true, was a slow, deliberate speaker, but as the average speed of an orator's tongue is six uttered to one carefully written word, our readers can imagine the rapidity of Raymond's writing. Webster finished. It was nearly mail time. It would be utterly impossible to write out the speech for that mail, and that was the mail to carry the speech. Raymond looked at his notes, and again at the clock. Rolling all up in an envelope, inclosing a private note to the foreman of the Courier and Enquirer, he dropped the parcel into the editors' bag. It reached the office in Wall street, the copy was distributed among the compositors, and the whole speech appeared in the next edition of the Courier and Enquirer, to the dismay of the other papers and the chagrin of the reporters. Its accuracy received the fullest indorsement of Mr. Webster.

How a Prominent Business Man Went to Ruin.

It is but a few years since, says the Chicago Journal, that the house of Bennett Pieters & Co., wholesale liquor dealers, and proprietors of the "Red Jacket Bitters," stood high among our best known, most enterprising and responsible firms. In almost every paper of the country their advertisements were to be seen. Mr. Pieters was a man of fine abilities, and besides being shrewd and successful in business, he was possessed of superior scholarly attainments. His home was among the most elegant and refined in the city, adorned in the most chaste and beautiful manner, and gracefully presided over by his wife, an estimable, accomplished lady. While in the full tide of prosperity, with wealth pouring in upon him, Pieters fell. He could not resist the temptation offered by the demon concealed beneath the rosy hue of the wine cup, and his imagination was heightened and his brain exhilerated by the sparkling champagne or his own bitters. The high reputation of his firm began to feel the effects of his downward course, and finally came the crash. Pieters was ruined; he struggled vainly for a time, but the power of the fiend with which he had so long tampered was too great and nerveless, and unresistingly he was hurried to the consummation of his career. His elegant home soon followed his business house; rich and valuable presents made to his family were swallowed up in the general ruin, or went to gratify still more his unceasing thirst for drink, until at last he and they were homeless and well nigh friendless. A few months since he enlisted in the United States service as a private soldier, and is now with his regiment somewhere on the great plains of the West. His broken-hearted wife has filed a petition for a legal separation from him, alleging that she has been reduced to utter poverty and misery through her husband's love of intoxicating drink. The story of her misfortunes is indeed heart-rending, and if anything were yet needed to urge on the friends of temperance and reform it would be found in the terrible fate of Pieters and his innocent family.

A LADY had to be conveyed out of the room at a recent bal masque in Paris in a complete state of prostration, which turned out to have been caused by the poisonous particles emanating from a green robe she wore.

The Paw Paw Railroad.

Mr. Ralph E. Hoyt contributes to the Chicago Mail the following amusing paper on the shortest railroad in the world:

Michigan can boast of possessing the shortest railroad on the American continent, and Paw Paw is its name. It runs from the town of the same name to Lawton, a small village, only four miles distant, on the main line of the Michigan Central.

Paw Paw is the county seat of Van Buren county, finely located on the Paw Paw river, which furnishes excellent water power for the manufacture of public sentiment in favor of saw-mills and grist-mills. The town derived its name from the river, I presume, or else the river was named in honor of the town. There are numerous interesting features of this place well worthy of mention, but I have time and space now to particularize only with reference to the railroad. Before this railroad was built, passengers were conveyed to and from Lawton by a Wheelbarrow Express line, which did a tearing business for three or four years; but the company became so rich and lazy that the line was laid up. Subsequently the Paw Paw railroad was built, and that is now the popular mode of transit between P. P. and the little village where the famous Lawton blackberry was invented. The "train" which runs regularly over this elaborate road consists of a locomotive and one second-class car. On the down trip, from Paw Paw to Lawton, the locomotive draws the passenger car; on the return trip the passenger car goes ahead, drawing the locomotive. The speed at which this train runs is simply terrific—to persons accustomed to traveling by canal boat or ox teams. A few years ago the company put on a sleeping car to run with the night train which left Paw Paw at 6 p. m., but the conductor and engineer "played it" on their employers in a way that spoke volumes in favor of total depravity. Soon after leaving Paw Paw, the engineer (who was his own fireman) would fire up lively, open his throttle-valve wide, and, being sure that there was steam enough in the boiler to run the concern through the night, he and the conductor would get into the best berths of the "sleeper," which the conductor was careful to reserve, and there sleep undisturbed until morning, while the train sped on, utterly unconscious of any such sharp practice. A few minutes before reaching Lawton, the conductor and his "pal" would crawl out of their nests to their posts and prepare for breakfast. This sly game was kept up nightly for nearly six months, when the Superintendent discovered it, and, dismissing both employes, ran the train himself.

A few months ago a terrible and fatal collision occurred on this remarkable railroad. The train was running from Lawton to Paw Paw one morning, when suddenly the engineer discovered a hog on the track about fifty yards ahead. Unfortunately the hog was running in an opposite direction from that pursued by the train. Had he been traveling the same way there would have been no collision. Quickly appreciating the danger, the engineer whistled down brakes. The hog did the same thing, and both engines were reversed. But it was too late; the impetus of two such ponderous bodies could not be checked within so short a space. The whistles were blown at fifteen minutes past 10 o'clock, and at 11 o'clock the collision occurred. The crash was a terrible one, proving instantly fatal to the hog, and almost so to the locomotive. The locomotive telescoped into the vitals of that unfortunate porker in a most extinguishing manner. His upper works were carried away, and he speedily sank to rise no more, having only time sufficient to squeal forth his regrets at not having his life insured. The engineer managed to save himself by swimming ashore on the broken smoke-stack. Not one of the 500 passengers was injured, though all were badly frightened. One of the number, a shrewd old Yankee, on reaching Paw Paw by Walker's line, immediately purchased an accident ticket, and had it dated at 9 o'clock that morning, to cover the collision. He afterwards claimed damages from the insurance company, on the ground that the accident had broken a nap which he was taking when the accident occurred. He never could be coaxed into riding on the Paw Paw railroad after that awful smash. Whenever he has occasion to travel over the road, he buys a ticket and then walks along the track in front of the train, keeping a sharp lookout for hogs and things.

Serious Comedy.

Children have of late years been playing a good deal at the serious comedy of suicide. Something goes wrong with them in the household; they are punished; they are denied some pleasure; they do not like the kind of work they have to do, and they apply to a pistol, or a rope or a knife, as most convenient for relief, and that's the end of them. Easton, Pa., furnishes the last case of infantile suicide. Clarence Cole was fifteen years of age when he was found dead hanging in the loft of his father's house. The coroner's jury declared by their verdict that the boy came to his death by accident; that is, he was playing "hanging" with a rope round his neck, and was accidentally hung in earnest. The family and the neighbors know better. The boy was required to do the washing on Mondays and the ironing on Saturdays, and wash dishes and make the beds, and sweep and cook and scrub every day between whiles. He felt his degradation to woman's sphere, and put an end to his career of house drudge. After his last day's washing he carried his clothes to the garret and hung them up to dry. He then cut a piece from one of the clothes-lines and put it over a rafter and hung himself up to die. The people who are aware of the boy's mode of life, and his distaste for it, refuse to believe that there was any accident about the firm intention of his hanging up. Boys will be boys, and you can't make housemaids of them. They have heard too many women talk about their oppressed condition and menial duties to allow themselves to be as degraded when there is a rope and a rafter within reach.

Newspaper Characters—Gems from a Printing Office.

THE GARRULOUS PRINTER.

Best known in every office to every one, from the managing editor to the boy, is the garrulous printer, who is not always a man of full of accurate information. Indeed, he is very frequently an individual possessing no information at all worth listening to. But to talk, and to talk loudly, is apparently the chief end of his existence. So he clatters away from the moment he enters the office till he leaves it. He chatters while he distributes; he fluently rolls up sentences while setting up; he discourses at the copy-hook; he prates over the galleys; and becomes bewilderingly eloquent when the welcome announcement is made that there is a fat take on the hook. The garrulous printer is invariably a good-natured man; he talks, as the bird sings, from innate force of his nature. He has no opinions to advance, no doctrines to defend, no notions to urge. He does not even care whether any one listens to him. So that his tongue has its full amount of daily needed exercise he is happy.

THE CAPTIOUS PRINTER.

This individual is, perhaps, the unhappiest of his class; surrounding himself, as he does at all times and on al occasions, with an atmosphere of misery, bending all his energies to the task of rendering himself, and, as far as possible, all those about him, extremely uncomfortable. Handwritings are his pet grievencies. No copy gives him satisfaction. If it is bold and round he pronounces it a school-boy's scrawl; if neat and lady-like, a pert miss' scrawl; if staid and formal, he deprecates it as a collection of pot-hooks and hangers; if scratchy and illegible—as most of the copy furnished to the compositors on the dailies unfortunately is—he swears loud, deep, and often. He is never satisfied with the policy of the paper. True, it is no concern of his, but then it furnishes him with a plea for fault-finding. His foremen are, by a singular concidence, one and all, the most unmitigated donkeys that ever lived. The composing-room is either too hot or too cold, too wide or too narrow, too deep or too shallow. The foundry from whence his type came, he feels quite certain, can cast nothing properly but pig lead. His stand was botched by a bungler, and his cases are but so many cunning devices to bother him in his work.

THE INCOMPETENT PRINTER.

This unhappy waif on the typographical sea, like most other of the unlucky dogs of this world, has mistaken his vocation. He should have been anything on earth but a printer; and this bungler among the typos is by all his bretheren styled a shoemaker. The incompetent makes his debut in all offices as a "sub," and in a wonderfully short space of time—say about long enough to set three takes—his true standing in the craft is discovered. This poor wight has been known to set up the frequently recurring word "Washington" as "wash-tub;" "bulls and bears" he has been known to render "quods and slugs." Once upon a time one of these incompetents, when hands were scarce, was given by a foreman, who knew his capacity from bitter experience, a piece of printed copy. It was set up so thickly strewn with errors that it required twice the time to correct that it did to compose it. On being rated soundly for his dirty work, he rejoined with the air of an injured innocent: "Sir, I am not a reprint hand!" That foreman elevated his eyebrows, clasped his hands, and was silent. He was an irascible man, and could swear soundly on most occasions; but afterwards confessed that he had no knowledge of any oaths that could do justice to the man so very unaccustomed to setting up printed matter.

A "shoemaker" in the composing-room of the New York dailies recently had the following lines printed in bold letters, and placed over his case by a heartless wag:

> I am the slow, the beautiful slow,
> Setting less type than the rest, I know;
> Setting it dirtier—shoemaker style—
> But setting it steady, and saving a pile.
> Talking,
> Botching,
> Crushing away,
> Picking up much fewer type every day.

A Note of English Journalism.

London seems once more like itself. Parliament is again in session, and Parliament brings a vast accession of life to the West End, not to speak of its influence on the morning newspapers; an influence so great that merely in respect to space and the distribution of topics they undergo a complete transformation. Everybody who ever sees an English journal is familiar with the portentous aspect of their broad columns during the session, crammed, as they are, with reports, in solid type, of debates sometimes still more solid. Perhaps the great provincial papers are still more striking. The leading organs of Manchester, Leeds, Birmingham, Dublin, Glasgow and many another great towns publish every morning much fuller reports of Parliamentary doings than the New York papers publish of proceedings in Congress. Perhaps the Scotsman, of Edinburgh, outdoes them all. Like many others, it has long had an office in London, and a special wire for its own news from London to Edinburg. In a recent impression it announces that its offices in London and Edinburgh have now been connected by a second special, the two wires being used exclusively for itself. The distance is some 400 miles. It has also a telegraph wire from the houses of Parliament to its London office, exclusively for Parliamentary reports. It has its own staff of reporters in Parliament, relying no longer on a news association report supplied in common to a great number of journals. Practically, it can put Parliamentary reports in type about as rapidly as if they took place next door. All this, it is true, is done very cheaply, thanks to the care the press took to secure its own telegraphic interests when the Government monopoly came into operation.—London Letter.

"WHAT'S the matter with Augustus?" asked one friend of another. "He's gone insane!" "Bless me! how happened that?" Origin of the Names of States.

There is much that is interesting in the study of the origin of the names of the States of the Union, as they are derived from a variety of sources. To begin in the geographical order, we first have Maine, which takes its name from the Province of Maine, in France, and was so called in compliment to the Queen of Charles I., Henrietta, its owner.

New Hampshire—first called Laconia—from Hampshire, England.

Vermont, from the Green Mountains (French verd mont).

Massachusetts, from the Indian language, signifying, "The country about the great hill."

Rhode Island gets its name from the fancied resemblance of the island to that of Rhodes and the ancient Levant.

Connecticut's name was Mohegon, spelled originally Quon-eh-ta-cut, signifying, "A long river."

New York was so named as a compliment to the Duke of York, whose brother, Charles II., granted him that territory.

New Jersey was named by one of its original proprietors, Sir George Carterer, after the Island of Jersey, in the British channel, of which he was Governor.

Pennsylvania, as is generally known, takes its name from William Penn, the word "sylvania" meaning woods.

Delaware derives its name from Thomas West, Lord De la Ware, Governor of Virginia.

Maryland received its name from the Queen of Charles I., Henrietta Maria.

Virginia got its name from Queen Elizabeth, the unmarried or virgin queen.

The Carolinas were named in honor of Charles I., and Georgia in honor of Charles II.

Florida gets its name from Kasquas de Flores, or "Feast of the Flowers."

Alabama comes from a Greek word signifying "the land of rest."

Louisiana was so named in honor of Louis XIV.

Mississippi derives its name from that of the great river, which is, in the Natchez tongue, "The Father of Waters."

Arkansas is derived from the Indian word Kansas, "smoky water," with the Frenck prefix of ark, "a bow."

Tennessee is an Indian name, meaning, "The river with the big bend."

Kentucky, also, is an Indian name, "Kain-tuck-ee," signifying, "At the head of the river."

Ohio is the Shawnee name for the "beautiful river."

Michigan's name was derived from the lake, the Indian name for a fish weir, or trap, which the shape of the lake suggested.

Indiana's name came from that of the Indians.

Illinois' name is derived from the Indian word "illini," men, the French affix "ois" making it "Tribe of men."

Wisconsin's name is said to be the Indian one for a wild, rushing channel.

Missouri is also an Indian name for muddy, having reference to the muddiness of the Missouri river.

Kansas is an Indian word for smoky water.

The derivation of the names of Nebraska and Nevada is unknown.

Iowa signifies in the Indian language "The drowsy ones," and Minnesota "Cloudy water."

The origin of the name of California is unknown.

Oregon, according to some, comes from Oregana, the Indian name of a wild marjoram which grows abundantly on the Pacific coast; and, according to others, from Oregon, "The river of the West," in allusion to the Columbia river.

Success of a Miners' Relief Fund.

Shortly after the Avondale disaster, the workmen employed by the Wilkesbarre Coal and Iron Company held a meeitng and resolved to give one day's wages for the relief of the Avondale sufferers and the establishment of a permanent benefit fund. The 27th of September, 1869, was the day fixed upon, and the sum realized was $6,000. Of this $1,000 were appropriated to the sufferers by the Avondale horror. The remainder was placed in the hands of the Wilkesbarre Coal and Iron Company, to be held in trust and at interest for their workmen.

Trustees are elected in each division, who report all accidents to the President of the Company. The money for the benefit of persons accidentally injured, or of their families in case of death, is drawn on the order of the trustee and foreman of the division to which the workmen belonged. No workman is entitled to the benefits of this fund until he has contributed one day's wages to its capital. The recently-published report of the management of this fund shows that from Oct. 1, 1868, to Nov. 1, 1872, $26,253.65 were earned by the labor of the men and the interest on the amount in the hands of the Wilkesbarre Company; $15,950.81 were expended in the support of disabled workmen, the burial of dead workmen, and the support of their widows and orphans. The balance is $11,092.94. This mode of dealing with impoverishment resulting from the oft-recurring mine disasters is very commendable, and the balance in Mr. Parish's hands shows that the way of increasing the fund, viz.: by the wages of one day's labor per man every year, is very successful.

TANNING SHEEP-SKINS.—About every six weeks we have an inquiry as to the best method of tanning sheep-skins with the wool on, for use as door-mats, rugs, etc. Here are the directions: Take the skin upon a board with the flesh side out, and then scrape with a blunt knife; next rub it over hard with pulverized chalk until it will absorb no more. Then take the skin from the board, and cover it with pulverized alum; double half-way over with the flesh side in contact; then roll tight together and keep dry for three days, after which unfold it and stretch it again on a board or door and dry in the air, and it will be ready for use.—American Artisan.

Thurlow Weed's First Interview with Horace Greeley.

In the March number of the Galaxy Thurlow Weed has an interesting paper, entitled "Recollections of Horace Greeley," in which he gives some highly interesting reminiscences of the great journalist. He relates the way in which he first made the acquaintance of Mr. Greeley:

The exciting Presidential campaign of 1840 was inaugurated by Congress in 1837. The questions in issue affected, or were supposed to affect, the general welfare most vitally. Prominent among these issues were the tariff and United States bank questions. The discussion of these and other policies of the State and National Governments rendered the publication of a weekly campaign journal expedient, and the Whig State Committee devolved upon me the duty of selecting an editor. I had for several months been favorably impressed with the New Yorker, a weekly journal published in the city of New York, distinguished not only by its judicious and interesting selections, but remarkable for the extent and accuracy of its political statistics. Although non-partisan, its leanings and sympathies could not be misunderstood. Impressed with the idea that an editor who imparted so much interest to the columns of the New Yorker should, if practicable, be induced to take charge of our new campaign paper, I went to New York, accompanied by Mr. Lewis Benedict, Chairman of the State Committee, with that intent. Repairing to the office of the New Yorker in Ann street, I found a young man with light hair and eyes, fair but fresh complexion, working at a case, who in reply to my inquiry informed me that he was editor of the New Yorker. Giving him my name, I made some inquiries in relation to the patronage and prospects of his paper, and then briefly explained the object of my visit. During the conversation, which lasted ten minutes, Horace Greeley stood leaning on his case, holding the composing-stick in his hand. I invited him to dine with Mr. Benedict and myself at the City Hotel, leaving him an interval of several hours to think over the proposition.

While seated at the dinner table, the arrangements for publishing the campaign paper were completed. It was, at Mr. Greeley's suggestion, to be called the Jeffersonian. He was to pass one or two days of each week at Albany. In reply to my inquiry if he had a family, he said, "I have a wife, but she keeps school, and is no hindrance to the enterprise." On being asked what compensation he desired, he replied that he should be satisfied with whatever the committee thought his services were worth, and that the amount could be fixed at some future time. He seemed equally surprised and gratified to have been thought of for the duty, upon which he entered with alacrity; for the first number of the Jeffersonian appeared very soon after the idea was first broached to him. It did not, of course, interfere with the regular publication of his New Yorker.

During the continuance of the Jeffersonian Mr. Greeley, while in Albany, was our guest, and always a welcome one. I became during that period equally interested and attached to him. He would come up the river by the night boat, and usually reached the house before sunrise, with the pockets of his white overcoat stuffed with newspapers and periodicals. This gave him an hour or two before breakfast for reading and writing. On the occasion of his first visit, knowing that Mr. Greeley was an advocate for Graham bread and vegetable diet, our first surprise was to find him making a hearty breakfast of very substantial food. And thenceforward we had no occasion to provide peculiar dishes for our visitor. Mr. Greeley, as novelists say, was a "good trencherman," eating with apparent unconsciousness and indifference whatever was provided. But neither then nor in after years was he ever, so far as my observation or information went, induced to touch or taste any stimulating beverage. Liquors, wines, ales, cider, etc., were all and always quietly declined. He would pass them, if he could, without making a remark or drawing attention; and, as far as I know or believe, his examples in reference to temperance were ever in harmony with his precepts.

When Mr. Greeley first entered the Evening Journal office, instead of seating himself at the table which had been prepared for him, he improvised a sort of shelf, to which he transferred his writing materials, where he stood with his arm raised almost as high as his head; and in this apparently inconvenient and uncomfortable attitude he worked all day.

Although up to this period Mr. Greeley had published a neutral journal, he fell very rapidly into line as a Whig, espousing the principles of the party with much zeal. He was especially gratified with the opportunity of advocating the protective tariff policy.

American and English Newspapers Compared.

A single copy of a New York paper gives more news than will be found in a week's file of the London Times. At the time of the English expedition to Abyssinia, the London papers were indebted to the courtesy of the Herald correspondent for the latest and fullest intelligence from the field; and during the Franco-German war the most interesting and accurate accounts of the grand achievements of the German armies published in the English papers were given in the dispatches to the Tribune, but for which the English people would have been compelled to await the arrival of letters by post for more than the meager telegraphic announcement of victories which involved the fate of an empire. The English have scarcely begun to learn the use of the telegraph for transmitting news. They affect a contempt for the American system, and plume themselves on the more solid and scholarly character of their newspapers; but, while this view may have been once correct, an impartial comparison of American and English journals of the present day would show that, in addition to an amount of news which would supply London newspapers for a week, the leading articles, literary reviews, and correspondence in every issue of one of our first-class papers are as thoughtful and as carefully considered as the articles which appear in the columns of the London Times.

How Nast's Efforts Became Paralyzed.

There has been earnest inquiry lately as to the whereabouts of Mr. Thomas Nast, a gentleman who boasts that he did the main part of the work, in slaughtering Mr. Greeley. Readers of Harper have missed the evidences of his free and unquestionably skillful pencil. He has made no caricatures of the Credit Mobilier rogues, a theme where his friends were expecting some of his best work, and now comes out the dire cause of the caricaturist's delinquency. Mr. George William Curtis was in Chicago and to him a reporter applied for information, but getting none there, another noted literature supplied the missing link. The author is a warm friend of Nast's, and the story stands well vouched. Harper's Weekly is worth nothing if not Geo. W. Curtis or Thomas Nast. Without either of these gentlemen, it would not be worth the white paper on which it is printed. This fact is appreciated by none better than these gentlemen themselves, and hence there is a stout rivalry as to whom which is most. Mr. Curtis thinks he is Harper's Weekly, and Nast thinks the same and between the two, the duce is to pay. With the proprietors, Mr. Curtis evidently has the inside track, but Nast is an awkward customer to keep within the bounds of dictation. He knows that he can do about as he pleases, and he is determined to do just as he pleases. During the recent political campaign Mr. Curtis was inclined to espouse the case of Horace Greeley but Nast would none of it. Said he, "There is no field for a cartooner on that side, the flag always wins.

Curtis would frequently say after some particular diabolical side-splitting cartoon on the old philosopher, "Mr. Nast this won't do. Mr. Greeley is a gentleman; he is too well beloved by the people to be so ridiculed. You must hereafter submit your cartoons for inspection." But Nast never did, or would not submit as he was told. On the contrary he warmed with the fight and neither Curtis or the Messrs Harper ever saw the political sketches until after they appeared in print. After the election, Mr. Curtis was quite willing to accept the honors and receive the compliments, which the partisans of the Administration believed were due to the journal which he represented. Several months ago, so the story goes, the rivals had an occasion to visit Washington city together.—They both put up in the same hotel, and while Mr. Curtis did the honors of the White House, and was cheek by jowl with Senators and Cabinet officers poor Nast minded his room, and nobody knew that the great cartoonist was in the city. Meanwhile Curtis took frequent occasions to tell Nast that on the next day, and after that again on the next day, he would introduce him to the President, but he always failed to come to time. It so happened one day, that one of the President's private secretaries dropped into the hotel and seeing Nast's name on the register, and sent up his card On meeting the great pencilist, he expressed his surprise that he had not called at the White House, and continued by saying: "Come right along, my carriage is at the door, and I'll drive you over; I know the President will be glad to see you." Nast tried to excuse himself, but the Secretary would none of it, and so they drove to the White House, where the cartoonist was received with marked attention, and invited to dinner. In fact the President made quite a lion of him. Towards dark he was again driven back to his hotel. An hour or two later Mr. Curtis called upon him, and again remarked that he would present him at the White House on the following day.—Mr. Nast informed him that he had been there. "When?" asked Mr. Curtis. "this afternoon," said Mr. Nast. "Indeed," said the pompous editor, very much astonished. "The President's Secretary called for me." "Ah, eh em, Mr. Nast," rejoined Mr. Curtis "I am sorry you went you should not have gone; consider your position without a formal introduction, and in that dress too; indeed, indeed, you should not have gone." But as he had been there, there was an end of it.—The point made against Nast by the Harpers and Curtis, is that he is getting to be bigger than the paper. The point is no doubt well taken. Harper's Weekly without Nast would not be what the people look for. His employers are forced to acknowledge his power, but find it extremely irksome, and they would give the world to be rid of him without doing irreparable damage to the paper. But whether or no it will do injury to the paper to have him leave it, they have about determined to put him in the back ground, and readers of the Weekly will remember that they have seen but very little from his pencil during the past month or two. They will probably see less before they see more. There is talk of Nast starting a paper on his own account, and there is also rumors of his associating himself with Frank Leslie's News. Whether anything will come of all this talk remains yet to be seen. Probably this present unpleasantness will be smoothed over, and Thomas Nast's bold imprint may appear for many years to come in the Weekly. But this much is certain, that there is not much love lost between Mr. Curtis and Mr. Nast at the present time.

Take the COURIER—you, Mister.

Oakes Ames.

(From the Washington Capitol.)

This man has to be searched to be seen. He is not remarkable in appearance when found. He impresses one as a man with a dull dead nature of an animal. He reminds us of a boar grunting, rooting and sleeping in the midst of the noblest and most exciting scenes.

He is a fair specimen of his sort of man, so unfortunately common among us. We mean the so-called self made, who have grown rich through their instincts, sustained by self-love, and meanness, and intense stupidity. As a hog gathers a bed before a viewless storm, such a man will make money.—All that he touches turns to cash. A man of brains may accomplish the same result through mental process.—A wild goose will fly a thousand miles directed by its instincts. Science teaches a man to follow the same course directed by a compass. But instinct is the best because the easier.

To punish such a man, there is but one way and that is to take his money. Oakes Ames is calm and self-possessed in a trial, where even an innocent man such as Garfield, suffers, because he laughs at disgrace. What to him is expulsion, if in that expulsion he carries with him his beloved millions? He said to Roessle, of the Arlington one day:

"I have some friends coming to consult with me; can I not have some place to meet them where there is a fire?"

"Certainly," responded the polite Roessle, "I will have you a fire in a private parlor at once."

"No," he responded, "that will be an extra expense. I will see them in one of these public rooms." And he did.

The action of the Senate in adding $6,000,000 to the appropriations passed by the House drew forth some very plain talk from Mr. Beck. According to that gentleman, when it is desired to get through Congress some swindle of a particular outrageous kind, it is kept out of the House and carried to the Senate which he calls 'that disreputable body,' and by it is added as an amendment to the Apportionment bill. These amendment do not return to the House, but are submitted to a conference committee. In this way the most corrupt schemes elude the honest vigilence of the Lower House. He estimated that by this procedure, at least $33,000,000 would be taken without proper Congressional scrutiny, out of the taxpayers' pockets by the pending bill. One result of such action is that neither the tariff or the internal taxes can not be reduced since the appropriations exceed the wildest estimates by at least $9,000,000. Mr. Beck ended with the assertion that the assertion that the House is a more honest body than the Senate, a remark that does not define the rank of either—Chicago Tribune.

PINE TREE
Tar Cordial,
NATURE'S GREAT REMEDY
FOR
Throat and Lungs.
It is gratifying to us to inform the public that Dr. L. Q. C. Wishart's Pine Tree Tar Cordial, for Throat and Lungs diseases, has gained an enviable reputation from the Atlantic to the Pacific coast, and from thence to some of the first families of Europe, not through the press alone, but by persons throughout the States actually benefited and cured at his office. While he publishes less, so say our reporters, he is unable to supply the demand. It gains and holds its reputation—
First. Not by stopping cough, but by loosening and assisting nature to throw off the unhealthy matter collected about the throat and bronchial tubes, which causes irritation.
Second. It removes the cause of irritation, (the mucous membrane and bronchial tubes,) assists the lungs to act and throw off the unhealthy secretions, and purifies the blood.
Third. It is free from squills, lobelia, ipecac and opium, of which most throat and lung remedies are composed, which allay cough only, and disorganize the stomach. It has a soothing effect on the stomach, acts on the liver and kidneys, and lymphatic and nervous regions, thus reaching to every part of the system, and in its invigorating and purifying effects it has gained a reputation which it must hold above all others in the market.

The Old Man in the Model Church.

BY JOHN H. YATES.

I

Well, wife, I've found the model Church! I worshiped there to-day!
It made me think of good old times before my hair was gray.
The meetin'-house was fixed up more than they were years ago,
But then I felt when I went in it wasn't built for show.

II

The sexton didn't seat me away back by the door;
He knew that I was old and deaf, as well as old and poor;
He must have been a Christian, for he led me through
The long aisle of that crowded church to find a place and pew.

III

I wish you'd heard that singin'; it had the old-time ring;
The preacher said with trumpet voice, "Let all the people sing!"
The tune was Coronation, and the music upward rolled,
Till I thought I heard the angels striking all their harps of gold.

IV

My deafness seemed to melt away; my spirit caught the fire;
I joined my feeble, trembling voice with that melodious choir,
And sang as in my youthful days, "Let angels prostrate fall;
Bring forth the royal diadem, and crown him Lord of all."

I tell you, wife, it did me good to sing that hymn once more;
I felt like some wrecked mariner who gets a glimpse of shore;
I almost wanted to lay down this weather-beaten form,
And anchor in the blessed port forever from the storm.

VI

The preachin'? Well, I can't just tell all that the preacher said;
I know it wasn't written; I know it wasn't read.
He hadn't time to read it, for the lightnin' of his eye
Went flashing 'long from pew to pew, nor passed a sinner by.

VII

The preacher made sin hideous in Gentiles and in Jews;
He shot the golden sentences down in the finest pews;
And—though I can't see very well—I saw the falling tear
That told me hell was someways off, and heaven very near.

VIII

How swift the golden moments fled within that holy place;
How brightly beamed the light of heaven from every happy face.
Again I long for that sweet time when friend shall meet with friend,
Where congregations ne'er break up, and Sabbaths have no end."

IX

I hope to meet that minister—that congregation too—
In that dear home beyond the stars that shine from heaven's blue;
I doubt not I'll remember, beyond life's evening gray,
The happy hour of worship in that model church to-day.

X

Dear wife, the fight will soon be fought—the victory be won;
The shinin' goal is just ahead; the race is nearly run.
O'er the river we are nearin' they are thronging to the shore
To shout our safe arrival where the weary weep no more.

The Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company propose to extend their line to Chicago by a route which, leaving their main line at Havana, Ohio, will follow a course about midway between the Michigan Southern and Lake Shore and the Pittsburg and Fort Wayne roads. Already eighty nine miles of the extension are graded west of Havana, and it is expected that the remaining distance to Chicago, about 175 miles, will be graded the present season, and will be put in operation as soon thereafter as possible, thus connecting Lake Michigan and Chesapeake Bay by a continuious line of railway under one management.

A young lady writing from Europe, finds there some very odd, but agreeable things. For instance she says:—As a general rule, waiters and chamber "maids" are men. In one hotel, where I stopped for three weeks, the only domestic I ever saw was a man.—He did everything; swept, and brushed, and cleaned my saloon, made my bed, cared for my dressing room, served my breakfast, and always at night, about eight o'clock, he would enter with clean towels, open my bed as a mother does for her children, lay out my nightdress, and bow himself out with a "Good night, mademoiselle."—One becomes accustomed to odd things and now I much prefer a man to a woman servant. The young lady should be credited with frankness and unquestionable cincerity.

For once the leading republicans of this county are at a loss to find excuses for the general mal-administration of the party in power. they give up the contest.

Massachusetts will have none of the woman heresy in suffrage and civil office. A resolution to engraft provisions for women to vote and hold office, was bluffed in the legislature yesterday, by a vote of 142 against 83. The Radical clubs that anathemize Jehovah and strip Jesus Christ of divinity, are both tolerated and cherished, but Massachusetts is not yet radical enough to unsex woman and clothe her with the prerogatives of man, hurling insult in the face of dame nature.

If a congressman can not live respectably in Washington for $5,000 a year, then Washington life must be more extravagant and corrupt than life in New York, Paris, or London. The great majority of the constituents whom the members of the Forty-Second Congress have misrepresented live on much less that $5,000 a year. Let them elect in place of thieves men who will represent that frugality and honesty, which are still the prevailing characteristics of American household, however corrupt, or however extravagant fashionable and frivolous society may have become in the capitol city of the nation.

In one respect Paron Brownlow is the most remarkable man of the country. He won't die. It is becoming doubtful if he ever will. He hangs on tenacious as a bull dog. As long as he stood on his pins he hurled defiance at his foes, courting their fury. Four years ago he was carried on his bed to the Senate, shaking in every limb with a sort of nearvous palsy, and supposed to be on the verge of death. But he now appears as Chairman of the Committee on Revolutionary Claims. The person may die some time, but he will fill his six years in the Senate, that can be relied upon.

It is a question of heads or tails whether the Spanish Republic will realize handsomely on the investment or not. In one dispatch the situation is represented as perfectly tranquil, and the Government ahead while the next, perhaps, gives the details of a Carlist [illegible]. The Carlists [illegible] decisive victories yesterday. The bill to dissolve the Spanish Assembly and convoke a constituent Cortes has passed, and immediately President Martas resigned. The Ministry propose to postpone the election for one month.—If this offer is not accepted, they will resign, and then war will commence in earnest. A crisis is undoubtedly impending.

A delightful contributor of the Rural New Yorker, evidently a woman, tells all about the dining room, in a style both practical and philosophical. Here is the opening picture; after all, the great portion of our pleasure in life is found in the dining room. It is a fact of which we need not be ashamed of; rather let us exalt it, and let it bear for us, all the fair fruit of happiness it can. In most households, the table is the center of family life—around it is held the family re-union, the father comes from his labors, or business, the mother lays down her household affairs, the children are home from school, and the family circle is complete. Here, if ever, do we realize what home means. sitting about the steaming urn in loving familiar intercourse.

The Homestead Law.

By the amended Homestead Acts of July 1870, and March 1872, any person who served at least ninety days, in the United States Army or Navy, during the late war, is entitled to enter as homestead, one hundred and sixty acres on the alternate reservative of public lands within railroad limits, which extend twenty miles on each side of the track. Any one who has not served in the Army or Navy, can enter only eighty acres within these limits while outside all homestead settlers, are entitled to one hundred and sixty acres. Six months is allowed after making the entry in which to commence living upon and improving the homestead. Soldiers' homestead may be entered by an Agent, while a citizen must go in person to the United States Land Office department of the District, in which the land he wants is located, and file the application and affidavit in accordance with the legal forms, which will be furnished him by the Land Officer in charge.

The fees to be paid at the Land Office are as follows: Making entry of citizens' homestead $14,000; making entry of soldiers' homestead, $18,00.

The franking privilege recently abolished by congress flourished to the green old age of ninety years, having been enacted in the year 1782, during Washington's first administration.

Five years actual residence are required to secure title to land. At the expiration of this time, or two years thereafter, on making proof at the Land Office, by two competent witnesses that he has complied with the requirements of the law, and paying an additional fee of $4,00 he will receive a complete title to land from the Government, or, after a residence of six months upon the land, he may commute the same by paying the Government price, $2.50 per acre within, or $1.50 per acre, outside of Railroad limits, and receive his patents therefor.

A soldier or sailor is credited with the time served in the Army or Navy, or if he was discharged on account of wounds received or disability incurred in the line of duty, the term of enlistment is deducted from the time he is required to live upon and cultivate his homestead, provided, however, that he must live upon and cultivate the same for a period of at least one year before he can acquire a title.

A soldiers widow (if unmarried) and the orphan children are entitled to the benefits of the Act.

A soldier who has heretofore taken a homestead of less than one hundred and sixty acres is entitled to enter such an additional track as will with his previous entry not exceed one hundred and sixty acres. No one can secure a soldier's homestead on the discharge of another person, nor are any rights acquired by purchasing the discharge papers of another person. A soldier having two or more discharges is not thereby entitled to more than one homestead, of one hundred and sixty acres.

Soldiers desiring to locate through an Agent can do so by making the following affidavit: I, ——— of ——— do solemnly swear that I am ——— of the age of twenty one years, and a citizen of the United States; that I served for ninety days in company ———, ——— Regiment, United States Volunteers; that I was mustered into the United States Military service on the ——— day of ———, [illegible] honorably discharged [illegible] from, on the ——— day of ———, that I have since borne true allegiance to the Government; and that I have made my application No. ——— to enter a track of land under the provisions of the Act of June 8th, 1872, giving homesteads to honorably discharged soldiers and sailors, and their widows and orphan children that I have made said application in good faith, and that I take said homestead for the purpose of actual settlement and cultivation and for my own exclusive use and benefit, and for no other person or persons whomsoever. And that I have not heretofore acquired a title to a track of land under this or the original homestead law approved May 20th, 1862, or the amendments thereto, or voluntarily relinquished or abandoned an entry heretofore made under said acts—So help me god.

Sworn and subscribed to before me, ——— this ——— day of ———, 187—

This affidavit with the power of Attorney is forwarded to the agent who selects the land, makes out the proper papers, and forwards them to the Land Office.

The receiver of the U. S. Land Office then issues the receipt, for the fee which is returned to the Agent—and then forwarded to the principal—who has six months from the date thereof in which to commence settlement and cultivation.

The Black List.

(From the New York Sun.)

Let honest men throughout the Union who respect and cherish integrity in public life, surround the following names all of Democratic members of Congress, with a scroll of infamy, and hand them down to their children as traitors to public duty, and faithless to honor.

George W. Adams, Kentucky.
James B. Beck, Kentucky.
Abram Comingo, Missouri.
John Conner, Texas.
Charles A. Eldridge, Wisconsin.
Abram Garrett, Tennessee.
Edward I. Golaway, Tennessee.
Henry D. McHenry, Kentucky.
Joseph S. Sloss, Alabama.
Daniel W. Voorhees, Indiana.
William Williams, New York.

These men voted not to condemn the conduct of either Ames or Brooks.

One of the oldest houses in Litchfield county Ct. is that of Mr. Elam Fenn, on Town Hill, half of a mile southwest of Terryville. It was built at leaset 160 years ago, and contains enough timber to build a whole village of modern houses.

YOUNG GRIMES.

BY MRS. PARTINGTON.

Old Grimes is dead—that good old man
We ne'er shall see him more;
But he has left a son who bears
The name that old Grimes bore.

He wears a coat of the latest cut,
His hair is new and gay;
He can not bear to view distress,
So he turns from it away.

His pants are gaiters—fitting snug
O'er patent leather shoes;
His hair is by a barber curled—
He smokes cigars and chews.

A chain of massive gold is borne
Above his flashy vest;
His clothes are better every day
Than were old Grimes' best.

In fashion's court he constant walks,
Where his delight doth dwell;
His hands are white and very soft,
But softer is his head.

He's six feet tall—no post more straight—
His teeth are pearly white;
In habits he is sometimes loose,
And sometimes very tight.

His manners are of sweetest grace,
His voice of sweetest tone;
His diamond pin's the very one
That old Grimes used to own.

His mustache adorns his face,
His neck a scarf of blue;
He sometimes goes to church for change,
And sleeps in Grimes' pew.

He sports the fastest "cab" in town,
Is always quick to bet;
He never knows who's President,
But thinks "Old Tip's in yet."

He has drank wines of every kind,
And liquors cold and hot;
Young Grimes, in short, is just that sort
Of man—Old Grimes was not.

SANDY HIGGINS AND THE WIDOW.

One day Sandy Higgins came into my office and sat down without a word. For some minutes he sat still, watching me intently, as if trying to make out by the sound of my pen what I was writing.

"Squire," he said at length, "did I ever tell you about my scrape with the widow Horry up here on the river?"

"Never did," said I, laying down my pen; "let's have it."

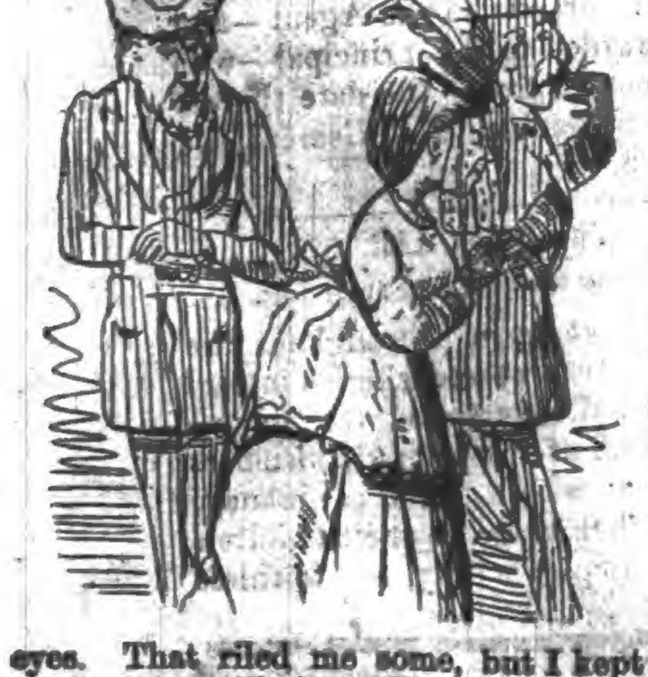
"They're curious creatures, widows is," said he in a meditative tone, "and the more you study about 'em the more you don't know anything about 'em. What was this thing I've read about in Egypt, or some other country, that nobody could unriddle."

"The Sphinx, probably," I replied.

"Well," continued he, "that was a widow as sure as you ever had a granny. Everything else in the earth has been found out but them, and they're as much mystery to-day as the length of the North Pole. You may read the history of the world from Genesis to Revelations, and you'll find that widows have been the bottom or top of five-quarters of all the devilment that has been cut up. Was you ever in love with one?"

"Lots of them," said I.

"You're a great gander—that's what you are," said he. "A man that loves one and gets over it won't never get bit by another, if he's got as much sense as a ground hog. I don't consider that I've got any sense at all, but I'm a little too smart to let another of them get all the trumps on me. The widow Horry that I was speaking of is a little the handsomest women, I reckon, that ever looked a man into fits, and I ought to be a judge, for I've seen lots of pretty women in my day. She was about twenty-five years when I went up there to work, just in the bloom of her beauty, and as full of devilry as a three-year old mule colt. There was a ball over at Jenkins' and of course I went, for I always go where there's any fun going on, and generally act the fool before I get away. Of course the widow was there dressed as fine as Solomon's lilies, and flying around as frisky as a young lamb in a rye patch. I got introduced to her and asked her to dance with me, and when she flashed her eyes at me and said 'yes,' I jumped up like I had set down on a hot griddle. You may talk about sensation, but when she took hold of my hand and I sorter squeezed it, I felt a sensation as big as a load of wood, and it kept running up and down my back like a squirrel with a hawk after him. I'm very fond of dancing, but I'll be hanged if I knew whether I enjoyed it that night or not, for every time she took hold of my hand I'd commence feeling curious behind my ears and up and down my back again, and then I wouldn't know whether I was on earth or in a balloon, or on a comet, anything about it. It was undoubtedly a case of love at first sight, and a powerful bad case at that. For a wonder I got through the frolic without making conspicuous or cutting up any extras, as I am in the habit of doing when I go into public. I'd set my pegs to go home with the widow after the ball, but just as I was fixing my mouth to ask her, up steps a big, long, leather-faced doctor named Mabry, and walked her off before my eyes. That riled me some, but I kept my tongue still, inwardly swearing to break his bones the very first opportunity that presented itself. I saw there was no use in saying anything, so I went home and went to bed, and all the rest of the night I was dreaming about rainbows, angels, butterflies, fiddles, widows and doctors, mixed up worse than a Dutchman's dinner.

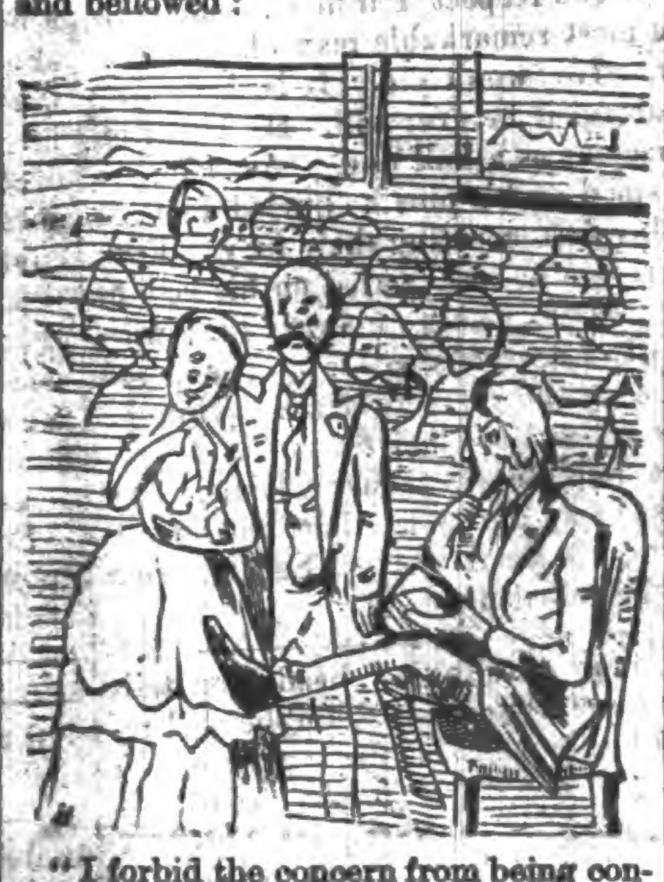


"Well, Squire, to make a short story of it, I made up my mind to have the widow, or kill myself or somebody else.

"So I made it convenient to be on hand where she was, upon all occasions. I couldn't eat nor sleep nor work, and if the thing had held on, I would't have sense enough left to skin a rabbit. But I was determined it shouldn't last long, for I'd been fooled so often by women that I thought I wouldn't give her time to think of anything but me. She appeared to take me right sharply, and the doctor seemed to mix in with me, but I didn't consider him no more than a brush fence, for I was so far gone I thought she could see nobody [illegible] but me. Well, Squire, things went on so for about a month, and on Sunday I screwed up my spunk and put the question to her. She sorter laughed and sorter looked one sided, and finally told me she couldn't give me an answer just then, but if I'd call at her house next Thursday evening she'd give me a final answer. Thinks I, you're mine just as sure as there's a fiddler below. Whenever a woman takes time to study she'll say yes, Squire. Don't the poets say something about the calculation of men and rats going crooked?"

"Mice, and men, Burns says," I answered.

"Well, mice and rats is all one, and so is men and fools sometimes, as I have found out in my travels. I was so sure she would have me that I went off and spent all my money for fine clothes, thinking I would have them ready for the wedding—and I did! Confound that widow, I say! Confound all widows! Thursday evening came at last, although it was a long time about it, and over I went, dressed into fits and feeling as big as Josh Raymor did when he was elected Coroner. I got there about dark and found a right smart crowd collected, which was not on the bills, but I felt as big and as good as the rest of 'em. So I marched in like a blind mule into a potato patch, and took a seat by the fire. I didn't see anything of the widow, but I kept looking for her to come in and send for me, and passed away the time cussin' the crowd to myself, thinking they had no business there, and I would not get to talk to my woman a bit. Presently the door opened and in walked Polly and the dad-burned doctor and a whole team of boys and girls fixed up savagely, I tell you. I looked around for a fiddler, thinking they were about to have a ball, but I wondered what they all kept so still for, and was about proposin' a reel, when up gets a little preacher, and before you could swallow a live oyster he had Polly and the doctor married faster than a Mexican greaser could tie a bull's horns. I was so completely flummuxed that I sat there with my mouth open like I was going to swallow the whole crowd, and my eyes looked like billiard balls till the ceremony was over, when I jumped up and bellowed:



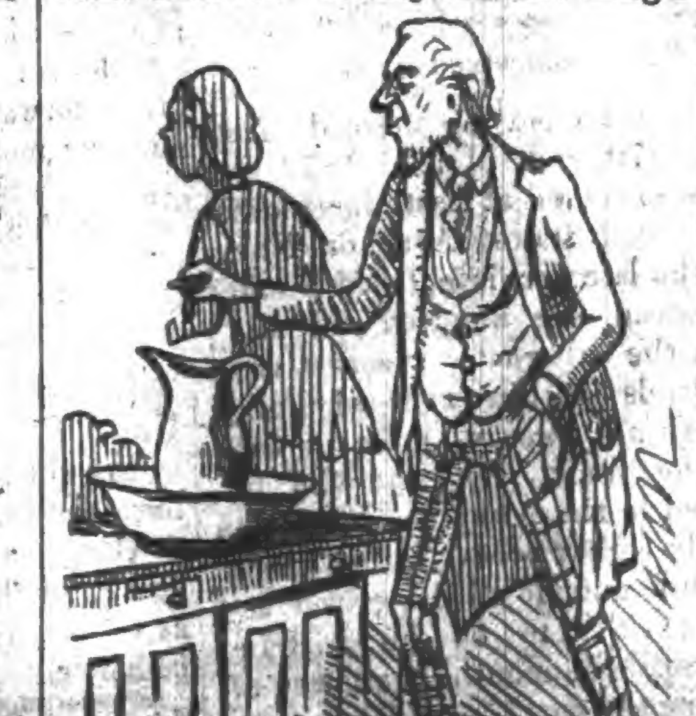
"I forbid the concern from being constituted!"

"You are a little too late, my friend," says the preacher, and they all commenced laughing like they had seen something funny.

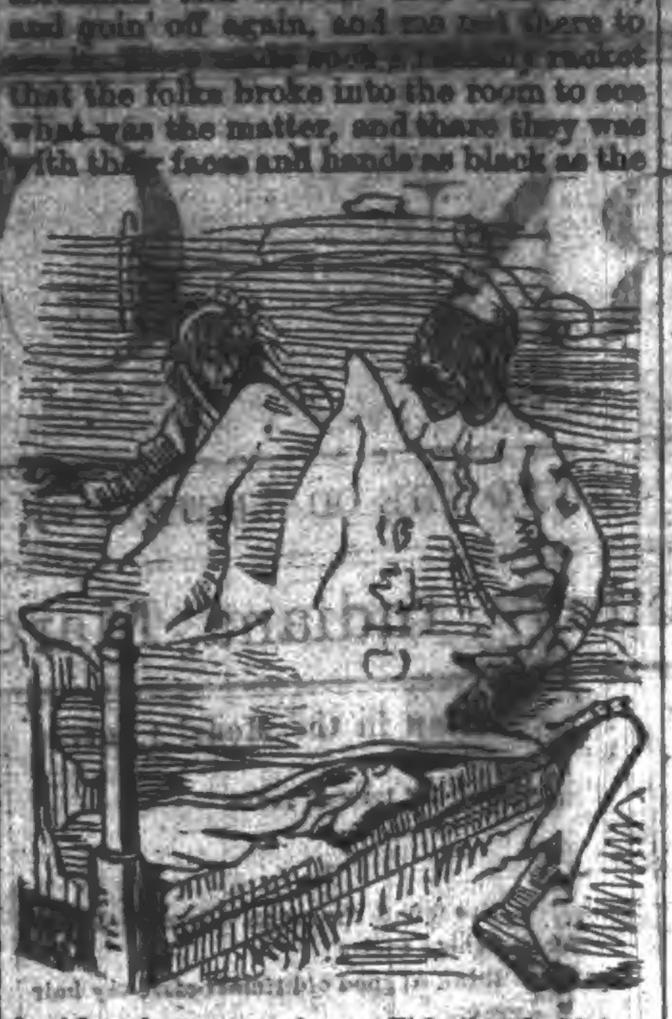
"I'll be darned swizzled if I don't be soon enough for somebody yet," said I, "for I was mad, 'Squire, and no mistake in the ticket. I do believe I could have eat up that doctor quicker than a hungry dog could swallow a squirrel skin, if I could have had a fair chance at him. It was too bad, after I had fixed up to marry her myself, for her to walk right out under my eyes and marry that great baboon."

"It was bad, that is a fact," said I.

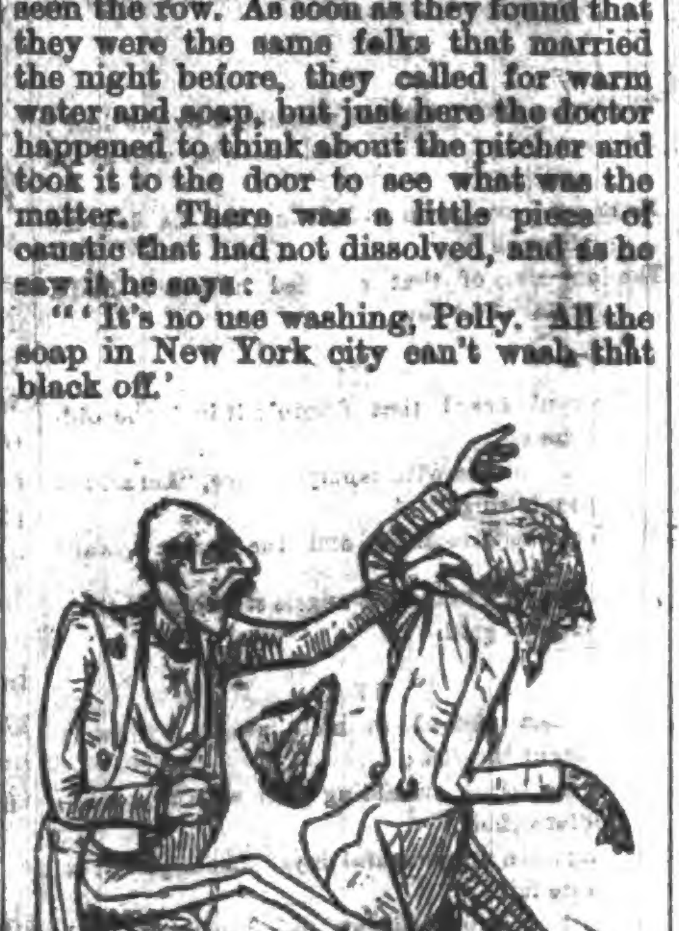
"Bad!" cried he. "It was meaner than eating fried coon. I first thought I'd go straight home, but then I concluded that wouldn't spite nobody, so I concluded to stay and see if I could not get satisfaction out of somebody. You know I'm the d——l to get myself or somebody else into a scrape when I take a notion, and I'd taken one that night that went all over me like a third day chill, so I commenced a study'n out some plan. I recollected hearin' the doctor say that where he come from, but the Lord only knows where that was, the bride and groom always washed their faces together before they went to bed, as a charm against infidelity or imbecility, or some other long word. While I was studyin' about that, I spied the doctor's saddle-bags setting in the corner, so I waited till they went in to supper, and then I got the bags and looked to see what I could discover. Nearly the first thing I saw was a stick of lunar caustic. I slipped it into my pocket, for I had my plan as soon as I saw it. Well, I watched around till I saw one of the girls go to the pail with the pitcher, so I went out and asked her what she was going to do with it. She said she was going to carry it to the room for the doctor and Polly to wash their faces in. I kept talking to her while she was filling the pitcher, and when she turned her head I dropped the caustic into it. It was then about bed-time, and I got my hat and put out, but I couldn't help laughing all the way home, whenever I'd think about it next morning.



"Well, 'Squire, they do say that when that couple waked up the next morning they both had the hardest kinds of fits, each one thinking they had been sleeping with a nigger. 'Oh, it was rich! He a cussin' and tearin' up things, and she a screamin' and faintin' and comin' to, and goin' off again, and me not there to see it. They made such a [illegible] racket that the folks broke into the room to see what was the matter, and there they was with their faces and hands as black as the inside of a stovepipe. I'd give half my interest in t'other world just to have been at some safe place where I could have seen the row. As soon as they found that they were the same folks that married the night before, they called for warm water and soap, but just here the doctor happened to think about the pitcher and took it to the door to see what was the matter. There was a little piece of caustic that had not dissolved, and as he saw it he says:



"'It's no use washing, Polly. All the soap in New York city can't wash that black off.'



"That was the truth, 'Squire. Soap and water had no more effect than it would on a native born African, and all the chance was to wait and let it wear off. How long it took them to get white again I never found out, but one thing I do know," he concluded, getting up to go out, "the next time I saw the doctor I had the hardest fight, and came the nighest getting whaled that I ever did in all my born days."

How Drinking Causes Apoplexy.

It is the essential nature of all wines and spirits to send an increased amount of blood to the brain. The first effect of taking a glass of wine or stronger form of alcohol, is to send the blood there faster than common, hence the circulation that gives the red face. It increases the activity of the brain, and it works faster, and so does the tongue. But the blood goes to the brain faster than common, it returns faster, and no special harm results. But suppose a man keeps on drinking, the blood is sent to the brain so fast, in such large quantities, that in order to make room for it the arteries have to enlarge themselves; they increase in size, and in doing so they press against the more yielding and flaccid veins which carry the blood out of the brain and thus diminish their size, their pores, the result being that the blood is not only carried to the arteries of the brain faster than is natural or healthful, but it is prevented from leaving it as fast as usual; hence a double set of causes of death are in operation. A man may drink enough brandy or other spirits in a few hours, or even minutes, to bring on a fatal attack of apoplexy.

Extent of the Public Lands.

In the first 40 odd years of the existence of the United States, the total cost of all public lands, whether bought from State or foreign countries, and inclusive of the cost of their management and sale, was about $48,000,000. In the same period of time the sales amounted to $37,000,000. At that time (1832) the Indians held the title to one-third of the public domain within the States and Territories, which was more than 340,000,000 acres. Our whole public domain was then 1,090,871,753 acres.

In 1859, Charles James Faulkner, in an exhaustive speech to his constituents, showed the whole public domain was 1,564,000,000 acres, which had cost the Government in money $195,361,000, or thirteen times the late Alabama treaty award. To extinguish the Indian titles had cost $106,000,000; to pay Mexico, $25,000,000; to buy Louisiana, $23,600,000 (principal and interest); Florida, do, $6,500,000; Texas, $10,000,000; Georgia, $3,000,000; release claims, $6,000,000; expenses of Land Office, surveying and explorations, $15,000,000.

By 1872 the figures stood as follows: The public domain, unsold and unappropriated, 1,376,529,562 acres. Relinquished already, 455,000,000 acres. Yet the sales of public lands in 1871 produced only $2,333,000.

THE WORLD'S RAILROADS.—The United States has a mile of railroad to every forty-three miles of its area, Great Britain a mile to every eight miles of area, Belgium a mile to every nine miles of area, the Netherlands a mile to every fifteen miles of area. Switzerland a mile to every eighteen miles of area, Germany a mile to every seventeen miles of area, France a mile to every nineteen miles of area, Italy a mile to every twenty miles of area, Denmark a mile to every thirty-four miles, and Austria a mile to every forty miles of area. The per-centage according to population is very largely in favor of the United States over all the countries of Europe.

THE Pasha of Egypt has made a present of a site for a church to the English-speaking community of Cairo.

THE quantity of tobacco paying duty and cleared for consumption in the United Kingdom averaged 13¼ oz. per head of the population of 1841. In 1851 it had increased to 1 lb. ¼ oz. per head. In 1861 it had reached 1 lb. 3¼ oz. per head. In 1871 it amounted to 1 lb. 5¼ oz. per head.

THE Bank of Venice lived over 600, and the Bank of St. George, of Genoa, about 400 years. Both were virtually blotted out of existence by the armies of the elder Napoleon. The Bank of North America still exists; and so does the Bank of England, after a remarkable life of 178 years.

The Meanest Yet.

Some gentlemen were talking about meanness, when one said he knew a man on Lexington avenue who was the meanest man in New York.

"How mean is that?" asked a friend.

"Why, he is so mean that he keeps a five-cent piece, with a string tied to it, to give to beggars, and when their backs are turned, he jerks it out of their pockets.

"Why, this man is so mean!" continued the gentleman, that he gave his children ten cents a piece the night before Fourth of July, but during the night, when they were asleep, he went up stairs, took the money out of their clothes, and then whipped them in the morning for losing it!"

"Does he do anything else?"

"Yes; the other day I dined with him, and noticed the poor little servant girl whistled gayly all the way up stairs with the dessert, and when I asked my generous friend what made her whistle so happily, he said: 'Why, I keep her whistling so she can't eat the raisins out of the cake!'"

A French Story.

A fashionable young Parisian, during his last summer's shooting, became intimate with the pretty wife of a gamekeeper and has continued to visit her. Quite recently the husband became aware of his dishonor, and contrived to be near on the occasion of these visits. He approached the house singing and whistling, and the terrified wife concealed her lover in a closet, and that closet had been prepared for his reception by the gamekeeper. Entering, he ordered his wife to light the fires and get breakfasts. She obeyed, and at the end of a few minutes a thick smoke issued from the closet. The husband had disconnected the stove funnel, which ran through it. He affected not to mind this, nor to hear the groans of the suffocating man within, and when his wife fainted at her work from fright, he cooly got breakfast himself, ate it and departed. The poor woman soon recovered and dragged her lover from his place of confinement, but the husband's revenge had been complete,—he was past human aid.

A Valuable Invention.

One Capt. Devorouze, a Frenchman, has invented a miner's knapsack which promises to prevent the future recurrence of death from choke-damp, so common in mines. Successful experiments have been made in the Paris catacombs. A glass case has been set up, into which a man goes with his knapsack and imitates a miner's actions. His knapsack is of tin, and is filled with a supply of vital air, a reserve fund of which is kept in a cylinder near by. When the man stoops over, his nostrils are closed by means of a spring, and he takes in the air through a gutta-percha tube with a bone mouth-piece, which he holds constantly in his mouth. The apparatus interferes in no way with the usual work of the miner, and, in the experimental glass-case, a man goes on with his work in an atmosphere of carbolic acid, which almost instantly kills a rabbit and a chicken that were placed in the same case, but without the saving knapsack.

SEVEN CHILDREN AT THREE BIRTHS.—There is a family living in the neighborhood north of Brookfield which has events occurring at intervals worthy of newspaper mention. Mr. J. F. Kelly and his wife, Margaret J. Kelly, are respectable and well-to-do people, living on a farm near Bear Branch. About seven years ago Mrs. K. presented her husband a pair of twins, one of whom is still living, the other having died when about a year old. Four years ago the family was astonished by the arrival of triplets, all of whom are living and are fine, healthy children. On Tuesday last, Mrs. Kelly again gave birth to a pair of twins, one of whom was, however, born dead. Thus have this prolific pair been blessed (?) with seven children at three births. We should add to the above that both Mr. and Mrs. K. are doing well.—Brookfield (Mo.) Gazette.

A Jury That Was Out Eleven Days.

The staid city of Philadelphia has just revealed to us the ways and means by which "twelve good men and true," when shut up to deliberate upon the guilt of the wicked, arrive at their conclusion. Two gamblers, Siner and Kass, had been indicted for the practice of their nefarious profession, and after their guilt had been pretty clearly shown the case was given to the jury, and they kept it the unprecedented time of eleven days. The manner in which the juror of the period spends the weary hours of his incarceration is amusingly shown by the revelations of one who was made the victim of an interviewing reporter. Three of the twelve were "straight-laced, hard-shell old fellows—one a Methodist, another a Presbyterian and the third a Quaker"—who, from the first, were squarely for conviction; three more were for acquittal, and the remaining six were sublimely indifferent. After fifteen minutes of a "regular jumbled mass of ideas from all at once," it was evident that they stood nine for conviction to three for acquittal. The interviewed juror was of the opinion that the accused was "guilty to a slight extent," but did not deserve much punishment, so he voted—with two others—for acquittal. The more they argued the more they couldn't agree, and, after an hour or two, they relapsed into sullen silence. In the evening they cheered up a little, and, somebody having produced a pack of cards, they played euchre. And so things went on for ten days; the foreman would call a meeting twice a day, take a vote; and, as no compromise could be effected, the euchre men would resume their game. One of the "stiff-backs" at length got hold of the cards and burned them up, and for the righteous act he suffered the martyrdom of being called "thief and incendiary" until he threatened a suit for slander. All this was "fun for the boys," but confinement was irksome, and they began to consider seriously how they should regain their liberty and relieve the agonizing suspense of the prisoners. Two of the three for acquittal at length went over to the enemy, leaving one against eleven; but he was dogged and unyielding, and they were forced to find sources of amusement again. Somebody extemporized another pack of cards from some stiff writing paper, and the wicked game went on, while the "stiff-backs" read from one copy of the Scriptures, and others danced the "Boston dip" and sang hymns! But to be forever shut in by four walls, even with such a range and variety of amusements, was so dreary a prospect that it at length steeled the one stubborn juror against the prisoners, and he agreed to call them guilty—but only on one of the four counts. He didn't believe they were "very guilty," but to "get out of the jail" he was willing to "agree" that they were on the fourth count, to which, he supposed, some light penalty was attached. To this the others agreed, and they relieved the waiting court with such a verdict. Then came the richest part of the performance, for, while a verdict of guilty on any of the three counts would have sent the accused to prison for not more than one year, the actual finding on the fourth count sent them to prison for two years and a half, with a fine of $500 each. That is what the intelligent juror does when he wants to "let a man off easy!" Truly it is a hardened wretch who can refrain from suicide eleven days, while such a "jury of his peers" dance, sing and play cards, with his fate in their hands.

Bonaparte's Love Letters.

The great Napoleon, when absent on his campaigns, used to write the most tender love letters to his wife, Josephine. Here is one of his short war notes:

"I write very often to you, my dear love, but very seldom hear from you. You are a fickle, ugly, wicked creature. Perfidious! to deceive a poor husband and ardent lover! Must he forfeit his rights because he is far away, burdened with difficulties, cares and fatigue? Without his Josephine, without the assurance of her love, what remains for him on earth! What can he do? A thousand loving kisses.—BONAPARTE." The next is curiously tender: "I don't love you a bit; on the contrary, I detest you. You are an ugly, stupid, wicked hussey. You never write to me, and you do not love your husband. You know the delight your letters afford me, and yet you send me only half a dozen hurried lines. Pray, Madam, what do you do with yourself all day? What important business is it that prevents you writing to your fond lover? What affection stifles and puts aside the love, the tender and constant love, you promised me? Who can this new wonder be—this new lover who absorbs all your time, tyrannizes over your days, and prevents you from thinking of your husband? Take care, Josephine, some fine night, the doors closed, and I'll surprise you. But seriously, I am very uneasy, my dear love, at receiving no news of you; write me four pages immediately, full of those charming things that fill my heart with tenderness and delight. I hope to embrace you before long; then I shall cover you with a million burning kisses.—BONAPARTE."

John Smith.

John Smith—plain John Smith—is not very high sounding; it does not suggest aristocracy, it is not the name of any hero in die-away novels; and yet it is good, strong and honest. Transferred to other languages, it seems to climb the ladder of respectability. Thus, in Latin it is Johannes Smithus; the Italians smooth it off into Giovanni Smithi; the Spaniards render it Juan Smithus; the Dutchman adopts it as Hans Schmidt; the French flatten it out into Jean Smeet; and the Russian sneezes and barks Jonloff Smittowski. When John Smith gets into the tea trade in Canton he becomes Jovan Shimmit; if he clambers about Moun, the icelanders say he is Johne Smithson; if he trades among the Tuscaroras he becomes Ton Qua Smittia; in Poland he is known as Ivan Schmittitiweiski; should he wander among the Welsh mountains, they talk of Jihon Schmidd; when he goes to Mexico he is booked as Jont Smitti; and if he is of a classic turn and lingers among the Greek ruins, he turns to Jon Smikton; and in Turkey he is utterly disguised as Yoe Seet.

"THAT's my impression," as the printer said when he kissed his sweetheart.

WHAT THE CHOIR SANG ABOUT THE NEW BONNET.

A foolish little maiden bought a foolish little bonnet,
With a ribbon and a feather and a bit of lace upon it;
And, that the other maidens of the little town might know it,
She thought she'd go to meeting the next Sunday, just to show it.

But, though the little bonnet was scarce larger than a dime,
The getting of it settled proved to be a work of time;
So when 'twas fairly tied, all the bells had stopped their ringing,
And when she came to meeting, sure enough, the folks were singing.

So this foolish little maiden stood and waited at the door,
And she shook her ruffles out behind and smoothed them down before.
"Halleluja! halleluja!" sang the choir above her head.
'Hardly know you! hardly know you!' were the words she thought they said.

This made the little maiden feel so very, very cross
That she gave her little mouth a twist, her little head a toss;
For she thought the very hymn they sang was all about her bonnet,
With the ribbon and the feather and the bit of lace upon it.

And she would not wait to listen to the sermon or the prayer,
But pattered down the silent street and hurried up the stair,
Till she reached her little bureau, and in a band-box on it
Had hidden safe from critic's eye her foolish little bonnet.

Which proves, my little maidens, that each of you will find
In every Sabbath service but an echo of your mind:
And that little head, that's filled with silly little airs,
Will never get a blessing from sermon or from prayers.

THE TUB.

BY KATE J. HILL.

If there's a rub,
'Tis in a tub,
That sets a maiden sighing,
When full of clothes,
'Tis full of woes,
And sets the maiden crying.

But let her scrub,
And let her rub,
Not spend her time in sleeping,
If this is woe,
Then be it so!
In spite of daughters' weeping.

Yes, let her work,
Though bones do ache,
As long as she is able,
Then there's no slight,
She's earned the right
To eat at papa's table.

Then no cheeks pale
By daily ail,
No curvature has bent her;
She has no grace
Upon her face,
Save that which Nature lent her.

A SOW at Mayfield, Ky., got into the best room of her owner's house, the other day, pulled all the bed-clothes off the best bed, made herself a comfortable pallet on the floor and slept the night through in perfect comfort and quiet. New Facts for Vegetarians.

A treatise on medicine, published in the 16th century, treats at some length of the alleged antipathy existing between certain vegetables. It says that the oak and olive hate each other so earnestly, the one or both will die when they are planted near together; and that the same is true of the cabbage and the vine. "And thus," proceeds the author, "it is no marvel that the cabbage is very useful to sober topers, and that the Germans eat it commonly in a compost, to safeguard themselves from their wine." The passage contains hints for both classes of the enemies of drunkenness. The friends of temperance can learn from it to encourage a popular taste for sauerkraut; and the friends of abstinence will be inspired to "sow tares among wheat," or wheat among tares, by scattering the surreptitious cabbage-seed in our vineyards, and so killing the vines and cutting off the wine supply, to the great advantage of the dealers in whisky.

FUNERAL RITES OF FRONTIERSMEN.—Bishop Vail, of Kansas, tells a little tale that forcibly illustrates the free-and-easy way of life of the frontiersman, and the scant ceremony with which his funeral services are conducted. "In one little grave-yard where I happened to be walking," said the Bishop, "there were twenty-seven graves, and my informant, who discharged the office of undertaker, told me that the occupants of twenty-six of them were killed in affrays, or, as he pithily expressed it, died and were buried with their boots on." The twenty-seventh grave was that of a child.

The amended act not only allows these States exemptions, but allows them as against all liens, no matter how or where acquired, as well as all debts contracted before its passage, the decision of any court to the contrary notwithstanding. The exemptions are not only not uniform in the several States, but they are so large in many of them that if bankrupts take advantage of them it will be a heavy blow to the creditor class. These exemptions, particularly as they will be administered, will cover all the property of a very large proportion of the people in the country, most of whom are small farmers or small merchants, mechanics and professional men.

Early Marrying.

Morally, mentally, physically, premature marriage is a mistake among women; and yet every day we see this mistake sanctioned by the offices of religion, blessed by the consent of friends, and entered into with all the eclat which should be reserved for a triumph rather than a trial.

"Morally," it is a mistake, because few women are fit, at an age when they should be "under authority," to rule a household prudently; since no atmosphere is so dangerous for an undeveloped soul as that of the almost absolute power which is generally delegated to the young wife. She may now do whatever is pleasing in her own eyes. She has been freed from parental restraint, and any other has a circumference so undefined that it is narrowed and enlarged according to the will and moral sense of her who draws it. Angels might fear to walk in such a broad freedom as is given by love and sufferance to the majority of our young married women—women by courtesy, children in the regard of both law and wisdom.

"Mentally," it is a mistake, because with marriage all mental growth is suspended in the large majority of women Education, being regarded as simply a means toward an end, is abandoned as soon as the end is obtained. It may be argued that all education from such a motive is a mistake to begin with. True, but then it is the one which keeps the culprit in the society of wisdom, and it is just possible the mind, under such influence, might arrive at a juster conception of its worth and value.

"Physically," it is a mistake, because at the early age at which many marriages are made the human form has not arrived at perfected strength; and duties and responsibilities are laid upon it for which nature has made no adequate provision. Vitality is destroyed quicker than it is generated, and early and rapid decay of both mind and body are the results. Then the woman is said to die "by the visitation of God," though in nine cases out of ten it is only the simple and inevitable result of laws of nature pitilessly and persistently broken.

Getting Even with a Truckman.

John writes from New Orleans to the New York Sun:

The truckmen here are just as bad about running over or splashing mud on you as they are in New York. There is only one body of men in the world that can beat 'em at it, and that is the 'longshore cavalrymen that cross Fulton ferry every morning. One of these fellows, just because he is on top of a horse, puts on more airs than a French roof.

I saw a truckman catch it once. I was with Bill Smith, and Bill was all dressed up, going to see his beloved, who had hair the color of sunlight. Bill and I were crossing Broadway. It was awful juicy walking, and a truckman drove his horse right on to us, splashing Bill all over with mud in spots as big as butter plates. The truckman fairly roared with laughter and yelled out, "How do you like it?"

Bill said nothing, and the truckman drove on.

Bill let him get about a block, when he ran up behind, and grabbing two hands full of the most perfectly formed mud I ever saw, he jumped on the truck, and throwing both arms around that truckman's neck he quietly laid a dab of mud as large as a pumpkin pie in each eye; then scraping what was left down the back of his neck he whispered in his ear, "How do you like it?"

When the truckman recovered his sight he couldn't find Bill, but he drove around the corner, and for half an hour he used some very expressive language. There wasn't a word in it as refined as the word peppermint.

Silent Eloquence.—O'Connell was amazingly powerful at times; but one of his effective displays was a silent reply to a youthful member, who had made an attack upon him that was quite unique. The almost breathless assailant was so much frightened at his assiduity, that, after a few stammering sentences, he broke down, and making various wild and voiceless gestures, tumbled on his seat amid a chaos of sounds. The shouting having subsided, the great Agitator rose and looked at the greatly agitated with so comic a smile that uproarous laughter was the immediate result; then shaking his head as much as to say, "The poor fellow has quite enough," he turned quietly to the Speaker and began to talk about something. Better acting was never seen on any stage.

An Atrocious Habit.

There is a habit peculiar to many walkers, which Punch, some years ago, touched upon satirically, but which seems to have survived the jester's ridicule. It is that custom of stopping friends in the street, to whom we have nothing whatever to communicate, but whom we embarrass for no other purpose than simply to show our friendship. Jones meets his friend Smith, whom he has met in nearly the same locality but a few hours before. During that interval, it is highly probable that no event of any importance to Smith, nor indeed to Jones, which, by a friendly construction, Jones could imagine Smith to be interested in, has occurred, or is likely to occur. Yet both gentlemen stop and shake hands earnestly. "Well, how goes it?" remarks Smith, with a vague hope that something may have happened. "So, so," replies the eloquent Jones, feeling intuitively the deep vacuity of his friend answering to his own. A pause ensues, in which both gentlemen regard each other with an imbecile smile and a fervent pressure of the hand. Smith draws a long breath and looks up the street; Jones sighs heavily and gazes down the street. Another pause, in which both gentlemen disengage their respective hands and glance anxiously around for some conventional avenue of escape. Finally Smith (with a sudden assumption of having forgotten an important engagement) ejaculates, "Well, I must be off,"—a remark instantly echoed by the voluble Jones, and these gentlemen separate, only to repeat their miserable formula next day. In the above example I have compassionately shortened the usual leave taking, which, in skillful hands, may be protracted to a length which I shudder to recall. I have sometimes, when an active participant in these atrocious transactions, lingered in the hope of saying something natural to my friend (feeling that he, too, was groping in the many labyrinths of his mind for a like expression) until I have felt that we ought to have been separated by a policeman. It is astonishing how far the most wretched joke will go in these emergencies, and how it will, as it were, convulsively detach the two cohering particles. I have laughed (albeit hysterically) at some witticism under cover of which I escaped, that five minutes afterward I could not perceive possessed a grain of humor. I would advise any person who may fall into this pitiable strait that, next to getting in the way of a passing dray, and being forcibly disconnected, a joke is the most efficacious. A foreign phrase often may be tried with success; I have sometimes known au revoir pronounced "o-reveer" to have the effect (as it ought) of severing friends.—Bret Harte.

Adding Poison to Poison.—There is no disease in which the blood is not more or less impregnated with unwholesome matter, and the direct, inevitable effect of all preparations containing spirituous excitants is to increase the volume of poison in the veins, and thereby aggravate and prolong the malady. Hence it is that dyspepsia, bilious fever, cholera-morbus, lung-complaints, gout, dropsy, rheumatism, nervous disorders, and cases of general and local debility, originally mild in type, are frequently rendered chronic and dangerous by dosing the sufferers with the alcoholic bitters advertised as medicinal stimulants. As a counterblast to the canards put forth by the proprietors of those pernicious compounds, the plain, honest, philosophical statements of Dr. Joseph Walker, relative to the nature and effects of his California Vinegar Bitters, are doing a world of good. He has opened the eyes of the public to the important fact that a pure vegetable tonic and alterative, unpolluted by alcohol, if not an absolute specific for every variety of disease, is the nearest approach to it yet attained. His Vinegar Bitters are unquestionably working such wonders in affections of the stomach, bowels, nervous and muscular systems, and the glands and respiratory organs.—[Com.

Dr. R. V. Pierce, of Buffalo, N. Y., first advocated constitutional as well as local treatment as being necessary for the cure of Catarrh, and so successful has his Golden Medical Discovery proven as a constitutional treatment, when accompanied with the use of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy, applied locally by means of Dr. Pierce's Nasal Douche (the only method of reaching the upper and back chambers of the head), that he has long offered $500 reward for a case that he cannot cure. Both medicines with instrument for $2, by all Druggists. 630

What Next?—The March number just received is an excellent one, as, indeed, are all the numbers we have seen. In evidence of its popularity among the young folks, the publisher tells us he has received the goodly number of 7,039 subscriptions during the month of February just past. Terms, 30 cents a year, with a $1.00 Chromo to every subscriber, by first mail. Specimen, 3 cents. John B. Alden, Publisher, Chicago.—[Com.

Gov.-Gen. Dufferin, of Canada, has informed the Dominion Parliament that work may be begun at once on the enlargement of the Welland canal, and the construction of the Baie Verin canal. Ground will be broken on the St. Lawrence canal next spring, and these three great works will thus be completed at the same time.

It is a rare thing that physicians give any countenance to a medicine, the manufacture of which is a secret. About the only exception we know of is Johnson's Anodyne Liniment. This, we believe, all indorse, and many of them use it in their practice with great success.—[Com.

For Loss of Appetite, Dyspepsia, Indigestion, Depression of Spirits and General Debility, in their various forms, Ferro-Phosphorated Elixir of Calisaya made by Caswell, Hazard & Co., New York, and sold by all druggists, is the best tonic. As a stimulant tonic for patients recovering from fever or other sickness, it has no equal. If taken during the season it prevents fever and ague and other intermittent fevers.—[Com.

Ex-Gov. Horatio Seymour is traveling in the Southern States.

Persons requiring purgatives or pills should be careful what they buy. Some pills not only cause griping pains, but leave the bowels in a torpid, costive state. Parsons' Purgative Pills will relieve the bowels and cleanse the blood without injury to the system.—[Com.

Old men, young men, but not maidens, should wear the Elmwood Collar. The men will look well and the maidens will see they do.—[Com.

Use Dooley's Yeast Powder if you relish light, sweet, wholesome Biscuits, Rolls, Pastry, &c. Your grocer sells it. Full weight and strength.—[Com.

Honorable Competition.

One of the largest and most thriving interests in Chicago is the wholesale boot and shoe trade, whose managers are noted for commercial integrity and enterprise. And conspicuous among them, for thrift, fair dealing, sterling business habits, and large and increasing sales, is the house of Phelps, Dodge & Palmer, 48 and 50 Wabash avenue. Manufacturing largely with the latest improved machinery, and always buying for cash, they offer the trade a very large stock of seasonable goods, and invite a comparison of quality and prices. Their patent glove-fitting boot is unequaled.—Chicago Tribune.

King of the Blood.

Scrofulous Sores. Gen.—I was for several months unable to walk without crutches in consequence of Scrofulous Sores upon my ankle. They were indolent ulcers of a very bad character. I was recommended to try King of the Blood, and I used several bottles as directed. I am now entirely recovered from my lameness, although my ankle is badly scarred.

Sore Throat, Cough, Cold, and similar troubles, if suffered to progress, result in serious pulmonary affections, oftentimes incurable. "Brown's Bronchial Troches" reach directly the seat of the disease, and give almost instant relief.—[Com.

The Citadel of Health.

Debility opens the door to disease. Nor is this all. When the door has been opened and the terrible intruder has entered, physical prostration renders its progress to the citadel of life comparatively easy. Therefore bar the door, and if possible keep it barred; or, if the enemy has already secured a foothold, rally the strength of the system and assist nature to drive out the foe of health and life. The means of doing this is within every one's reach. Brace up the physique with Hostetter's Stomach Bitters when there are elements in the air you breathe or the water you drink that are morbid and unwholesome. This is barring the door. Epidemics and endemics will assail in vain the living fortress that is thus protected. It may "laugh a siege to scorn." But if this precautionary measure has been neglected, the seeds of disease can be ejected by the same potent vegetable agent that would, if taken earlier, have prevented their obtaining an entrance into the system. The stimulating, invigorating, regulating and purifying properties of this vital elixir render it a most formidable antagonist of all debilitating disorders. The rapidity and certainty with which it vanquishes fever and ague, rheumatism, bilious colic, indigestion and nervous complaints, is due in no small degree to the strength it imparts to the muscular fiber, the nerves and the membranes which line the stomach and the bowels. It may be safely said that a course of the Bitters commenced now will be a sure protection against most of the complaints incident to the season.

While Waiting for a Cough "to go as it came," you are often sowing the seeds of Consumption. Better try at once Dr. Jayne's Expectorant, a sure cure for all Coughs and Colds.

Has made the most astonishing Cures; so quick, so rapid are the changes the Body undergoes, under the influence of this truly Wonderful Medicine, that Every Day an Increase in Flesh and Weight is Seen and Felt.

THE GREAT BLOOD PURIFIER.

Every drop of the SARSAPARILLIAN RESOLVENT communicates through the blood, Sweat, Urine, and other fluids and juices of the system the vigor of life, for it repairs the wastes of the body with new and sound material. Scrofula, Syphilis, Consumption, Glandular disease, Ulcers in the throat, Mouth, Tumors, Nodes in the Glands and other parts of the system, Sore Eyes, Strumorous discharges from the Ears, and the worst forms of Skin diseases, Eruptions, Fever Sores, Scald Head, Ring Worm, Salt Rheum, Erysipelas, Acne, Black Spots, Worms in the Flesh, Tumors, Cancers in the Womb, and all weakening and painful discharges, Night Sweats, Loss of Sperm and all wastes of the life principle, are within the curative range of this wonder of Modern Chemistry, and a few days' use will prove to any person using it for either of these forms of disease its potent power to cure them.

If the patient, daily becoming reduced by the wastes and decomposition that is continually progressing, succeeds in arresting these wastes, and repairs the same with new material made from healthy blood—and this the SARSAPARILLIAN will and does secure—a cure is certain; for when once this remedy commences its work of purification, and succeeds in diminishing the loss of wastes, its repairs will be rapid, and every day the patient will feel himself growing better and stronger, the food digesting better, appetite improving, and flesh and weight increasing.

VEGETINE

THE GREAT BLOOD PURIFIER

What is Needed.

Boston, Feb. 13, 1871.

Henry R. Stevens, Esq.:

Dear Sir—About one year since I found myself in a feeble condition from General Debility. Vegetine was strongly recommended to me by a friend who had been much benefitted by its use. I procured the article, and, after using several bottles, was restored to health, and discontinued its use. I feel quite confident that there is no medicine superior to it for those complaints for which it is especially prepared, and would cheerfully recommend it to those who feel that they need something to restore them to perfect health.

Respectfully yours,
U. L. PETTINGILL,
Firm of S. M. Pettingill & Co.,
No. 10 State street, Boston.

Gives Health, Strength and Appetite.

My daughter has received great benefit from the use of the Vegetine. Her declining health was a source of great anxiety to all her friends. A few bottles of the Vegetine restored her health, strength and appetite.

Mr. Stevens:

Dear Sir—I have taken several bottles of your Vegetine, and am convinced it is a valuable remedy for Dyspepsia, Kidney Complaint, and general debility of the system.

I can heartily recommend it to all suffering from the above complaints.

Yours respectfully,
Mrs. Munroe Parker, 386 Athens St.

The Auburn Courier

Thursday, March 20th, 187

The probability is that Gov. Straw, of New Hampshire, is re-elected, and that the Democrats have elected their Congressmen.

The town of Lawrenceburg, Kentucky, was almost swept away, with a loss of over $200,000. Many families are rendered homeless.

All will remember the terrible wind last Saturday night. During the gale which seems to have been general; Elyria, Ohio, east of Cleveland was nearly consumed, the total loss amounting to $270,000.

A NOBLE CHARITY.—J. S. Hopkins of Baltimore, has given $2,000,000 for the maintenance of an hospital for the sick and indigent orphans, to which he sometime ago deeded thirteen acres of land in that city. The buildings will be built next year.

It is charged that the people have been cheated outright to the tune of $42,000,000 through the Credit Mobiler. The amount has been taken out of the people's pockets in direct taxation, and has gone into the pockets of members of congress, Senators, and their confederates in crime, including the Vice President.

The Legislature further disgraced itself by a failure to make further provisions for the care of the Insane people of the State. This we regard as one of the most important things which the body could have accomplished. It is a disgrace to the State to allow our insane people to suffer for the want of proper care.

Bingham has a full well congressman rotunded Ciceronian style of eloquence, but sometimes he drops into Saxon in a friendly way, and shows his familiarity with the unadorned vernacular.—The most compact and pointed address he ever delivered in Congress was in reply to Ritchie in one of the last days of the session. Ritchie quoted poetry to the old man, and the silver tongued orator remarked with emphasis, "You are a d——d fool."

Plain Propositions.

Suppose that in the month of September last, that the Republican managers had announced that if they should succeed in the approaching Presidential election one of the measures which they would enact would be to raise the salary of President Grant to $50,000 a year.

Suppose it had also been believed by the people that the republican majority in Congress, after having been paid the stipulated salary for their services, would vote themselves $5,000 each out of the Treasury.

Or suppose that these two propositions had been incorporated in the Republican platform adopted by the Philadelphia convention by which President grant was nominated for re-election.

How many states would General Grant have carried? How many Republican congressmen would have been re elected? Is it not evident that Grant could not have got a single State, and that every republican candidate for congress, running on such a platform, would surely have been defeated.

All this being true, is it not the insanity of public robbery which has led Grant to loby for the passage of a bill through congress raising his own salary to $50,000 a year, and which has led Republican congressmen to pass that bill? If they dared not to announce this enormous act of robbery as a part of their plan before the election, how do they expect the people to regard it after election.

Caldwell the individual who paid $75,000 for a seat in the United States senate, as a Senator from Kansas, is to be whitewashed—purged, not exactly with hysop but by Morton, of all intentional wickedness, and retained. The purchase is proven. The money was paid for the votes, at so much per head but the neat point is, in the language of a similar inculpated individual, the senator from Nevada, that "money is inevitable" in the bargaining and sale of a United States Senatorship, and that its use is no moral or political crime. It was Morton that worked out this conclusion and made Caldwell happy.

George S. Boutwell was elected United States Senator in convention of the two Houses of the Massachusetts Legislature. The whole number of votes cast was 276, of which Mr. Boutwell [illegible] B. Loring 2, J. H. Tucker 3; William Whiting 2, and E. G Greene 2.

The Washington Chronicle is not satisfied with Colfax's Scuyler-coppheker speech and says that the gentle smiler might have separated clever [illegible] more satisfactorily and saved trouble by telling the truth from the start. It criticises severely his mixing up with a badly decomposed corpse, when there were so many Radical congressman lying around loose as willing for such jobs as they were to vote themselves public thieves. The Chronicle further says: "If anything were needed to further convict Colfax, it would be the fact that another letter has been discovered in the Postoffice Department from him, urging that the stamp contract be continued in Nesbitts hands and yet he positively swore on February 19th that he had never rendered any such service directly or indirectly, for the Nesbitts. There are now on file in the department two letters and one argument from Colfax asking that the contract be continued, and protesting against a reduction of its rates. All this is subsequent to the $4,000 which Nesbitt has paid to Colfax.

OAKES AMES.

OLD MOBILER'S WELCOME HOME.

NORTH EASTON DISCOUNTS SOUTH BEND.

A Nice Chunk of "Gold From the Crucible."

Latest Edition of the "Noblest Works of God."

The Knave of Spades Mildly Reproves certain Christain Statesmen.

North Easton Mass. March 19.—A complimentary reception and dinner was given to Hon. Oakes Ames, by his townsmen and their ladies, to the number of three hundred and fifty, in the Ames school house, this evening. Dr George B. Goswell presided, and when the cloth was removed welcomed him to his home, with a brief speech highly laudatory of his course, and expressive of continued confidence in his honor and integrity. He announced that the demonstration was made irrespective of party, and he felt that he expressed the sentiment of all when he said that while others sought to cast a stigma on their Representative's fair name and reputation, his constituents have always looked upon him as that "noblest work of God an honest man." He closed with the sentiment: "The Hon. Oakes Ames—like gold from the crucible, he has passed through the fiery ordeal and came out brighter and purer."

Ames responded as follows:

'My friends and neighbors; I should be less than human not to be grateful and happy at this great gathering of my constituents to show their faith in my honor truth and integrity. I am not in the habit of speech making as you all well know. I have as you are aware been the principal subject of abuse for the last six months. The press of the country has been full of what is called the "Credit Mobiler scandal."—The whole offense, if offense it might be called is in selling $16,000 in stock to eleven members of congress at the same price I paid for it. But from the fact of their denial, the public suspected that there was something criminal in the transaction; and to find out what the crime was, Congress appointed a committee to inquire if Oakes Ames had not bribed any of the members of congress. The result was the appointment of the notorious Poland Committee. That committee were engaged for three months, and the result of their labors was to badly damage the character of some men high in office for truth and veracity; but the object of the committee to see if Oakes Ames had bribed any member, was admited not proven. But that I was guilty of selling stock for less than it was worth, but the parties buying the stock and keeping it, were very innocent and that I had extraordinary ability to give men a bribe without their knowing it, and to do they did not know what!'

This short speech was received with applause and cheers. Congratulatory speeches followed until eleven o'clock, when the reception ended.

The city of Lafayette promises to furnish to the world as near a counterpart of the "Seventh Day," when the Lord ceased from his labors and rested, as it is possible for a city of living beings to present. A town ordinance embodying the [illegible] Sunday law, has been enacted by the Common Council and an example of "how the old thing works" was furnished to the astonished people of that city, on last Monday morning. Bakers, milkmen, cigar venders, printers, editors and livery stable men, who were found to have transacted any of the ordinary every day avocations, were marched to the Mayor's office and made to pay a small fine for a violation of the law.—The saloon men had been notified that any infraction of the ordinance would be punished and discreetly kept their places of business closed. It is contemplated to sweep down upon the ministers and sextons of the churches next Sunday and absolutely to enforce the law to the extre mest extent. No little excitement prevails over the determination of the Mayor to treat all parts of the community alike. Saints must "remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy." Sinners must not work their men servants nor their maid servants nor their oxen nor their asses. And they who preach for hire must take week days for it. The Mayor of Lafayette is a "seccond Daniel," verily.—Huntington Democrat.

Boss Tweed will soon have a letter of condolence from Grant similar to that sent to Colfax. One is as much entitled to it as the other, as both did all they could for Mr. Grant's re-election.

OFFICIAL PAPER of the COUNTY

Local and Miscellaneous.

An excellent bell has been placed in belfry of the Baptist church.

Masons are to work erecting a new brick residence in the west end.

[illegible] cigars to be found only at [illegible] drug store.

We have several fine "horse pictures" and are ready to print bills to order.

Judge Randall, of Avilla, gave us a call last week, looking well and hearty in his ripe old age.

The North Indiana M. E. Conference meets at Logansport on the 11th of April. Bishop Merrill will preside.

The next meeting of the Board of Directors of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad will be at this place April 9th. See notice.

The funeral obsequies of the late Chief of Fire Department at Indianapolis, were very imposing last Friday, witnessed by a large concourse of people.

A woman by the name of Mrs. Hiram Baxton went to a protracted meeting at Bushy Prairie a few days ago, and warming at the stove when she suddenly fell and died in a short time.

About twenty persons cheered Colfax as he went by, where once thousands were went to greet him; and when the train moved out 'twas amidst the most profound silence. Alas! and has it come to this!—Laporte Argus.

Our citizens everywhere will do well to keep a bright look-out for burglars, horse thieves, and others of that ilk, as there are evidently plenty of them around. Our exchanges are full of accounts of robberies, and there is no telling whom they next may visit.

The Indiana Conservatory of Music is having quite a large attendance, and it is rapidly becoming the favorite place for all connoisseurs of the art. It is ably and efficiently managed, and we advise all desiring a thorough musical education to attend it.

The Huntington Democrat says all the saloons of this place are closed at the virtuous hour of 9 o'clock, by the clock in the steeple, and the occupation of the little girl, who sings "Father, dear father come home with me now," is clean gone. The old man is in bed and asleep.

That little squib about the Steuben Republican has stirred the editors of that highly interesting sheet up a little, and the consequence is a much [illegible]. We hope it will be lasting, because we cannot afford to do this very often in the way of a donation. Our price is ten cents a line.

Our young legal friend, W. B. McConnell, Esq., of Angola has been appointed by Gov. Hendricks, Prosecuting Attorney for the new judicial district composed of the counties of Noble, Steuben and DeKalb. This is an appointment that will meet with endorsement throughout the circuit, and we have that confidence in his integrity and ability as to assure a faithful discharge of his duties.

Corunna is to have a new school house. That place has the poorest, most delapidated, structure of this kind we know of in the county.

The enthusiasm that prevails in that place among the members of the Methodist church ought to turn the hardest heart from worldly sin to glory; but it has had little impression as yet.

New Grocery.—Messrs Eldridge & Rainier, are bringing on a large stock of Groceries and will open next week, in the room occupied by Mr. Eldridge. We are glad to learn of the enterprise, as these gentlemen are eminently qualified to conduct business of this kind to the credit of our place and with benefit to themselves. We wish them success.

We received a note informing us of the startling fact that Ernest somebody is engaged in the laudable enterprise of making sugar up at Mr. Mader's. But the worst of it is to come. One night while the Superintendent of this sugar plantation was away, perhaps, enjoying the sweet repose of a clear conscience, some naughty person, with his little stick "stirred off," for him, ge-whillikins! he was mad enough to kick himself down three pair of stairs. He possibly could not be madd(d)er. Another evidence that roses have their thorns.

The following sections in the new Judiciary Bill relates to the holding of the Circuit Court in the 35th district composed of the counties of Noble, Steuben and DeKalb:

Sec. 14. The terms of said court in the Thirty fifth Circuit shall be held in the county of Steuben on the first Monday in February, the fourth Monday in April, the first Monday in September, and the third Monday in November of each year; in the county of DeKalb on the Mondays succeeding the courts in county of Steuben, and in the county of Noble on the Mondays succeeding the courts in the county of DeKalb. The courts in the county of Steuben shall continue two weeks, in the county of DeKalb three weeks, and in the county of Noble four weeks at each term, if the business thereof requires it.

[illegible] strange men were [illegible] towards Auburn [illegible] Sheriffs A. S. Lowe and S. J. [illegible] followed them after some delay in getting a buggy, but though they [illegible] Auburn [illegible] it was afterwards learned that four men had escaped jail at South Bend, and [illegible] were the fellows.

Mr. Fielding Potter, an old resident of Swan township, was killed instantly Tuesday, March 4th, by a fall from a load of hay, which was being driven into the barn of his brother, James Potter. The deceased was on the back part of the load, and as they were ascending the bridge leading to the floor (the barn was a bank barn) the binding pole broke, the load fell back, and Mr. Potter was precipitated to the ground, a distance of nearly 20 feet killing him instantly.

Concert.—Those who did not attend the concert last Tuesday evening missed the finest concert ever given in this place. The choruses were excellently rendered by the class, and the duets and quartettes were highly appreciated by those present. Prof. Bennett sang "Winds of the winter night" in an admirable manner to the delight of all.

Prof. Bartlett, of the Indiana Conservatory of Music, Fort Wayne, being present sang "Farewell" in his usual excellent style and afterward "Annie Laurie," which so captivated the audience that they would not listen to any refusal of an encore and he responded with that delightful little ballad, "Tapping at the garden Gate." Of course this pleased everybody and that and other things compell us to say that many of our citizens missed a rich treat. Had it been a free concert that church would have been crowded, which goes to show the influence twenty-five cents exerts in this community. As long as our citizens are penurious and niggardly, they need not expect much advancement, either individually or collectively.

SEDAN BREVITIES.

The school exhibition last Tuesday eve at this place was a success. A large number were present and seemed to enjoy the entertainment splendidly. The minstrel troupe acquitted themselves like little men. Considering the fact that the boys have done their own training they do well, and their performances were really good. One thing we noticed with pleasure the absence of all vulgar jokes and conundrums.

To-morrow evening (Friday) a grand concert will be given by Prof Bennett's singing class numbering about fifty singers. The benefits are to be applied on the church debt. Turn out friends and give [illegible] and donate at least [illegible] to the church. G. M. C.

In Memoriam.

Forest Lodge, No. 230, F. & A. M. Butler, Indiana.

Whereas, It has pleased Almighty God in his wise providence to remove from our midst our well beloved brother John Warner, who went from us to lie down in that sleep that knows no waking until the resurrection morn.

Therefore be it resolved, That in the death of Bro. John Warner the lodge has lost one of its worthy and true members and the fraternity one of its ardent admirers and that while we as a fraternity bow in submission to the fact of our superior Grand Master, yet we will ever cherish his memory in our hearts.

Resolved, That this lodge tenders its warmest sympathies to the bereaved widow and children in this affliction which has overwhelmed them with sorrow and we heartily trust that their loss is his gain, and that they may find consolation in the hope of a reunion in a better land than this where there is no sorrow and death, and where parting is no more, and may He who doeth all things well look in mercy down and teach them to put their trust in their savior who is a father to all and a friend to the lonely.

Resolved, That these resolutions be placed upon the record of this lodge and that a copy be furnished the Auburn Courier and Waterloo Press for publication, and that a copy be furnished the widow and children of the deceased.

Resolved, That the lodge be draped in morning agreeable to the ancient established usages of the fraternity.

"Prof." Irwin will not give his concert, as advertised, at Corunna. Another blessing granted that people.

The roads are in a bad condition, and our merchants will have to suffer. Advertise your business, and the farmer will remember you when he goes to do trading.

A Flourishing Institution.—The Mt Union College, located at Mt. Union, O. near Alliance, is perhaps the most flourishing of all educational institutions in that State. The attendance is very large and so extensive has been the demand that large improvements and additions are being made, and will be made in the future to accommodate all. All persons contemplating a collegiate course will find greater facilities at this place than another. One superior advantage is given from the fact that those who depend upon teaching to defray expenses, can teach fall, winter and spring terms, and attend the regular terms of the college at the same time. Our friends in this section cannot do better than to give it their earnest consideration. For catalogue and particulars, address,

OUR FREE SCHOOLS.

Editor Courier:—To those who have given the subject attention, the practical working of our Free School System is not satisfactory. There is annually a large expenditure of money and time demanded, with meager results. Teachers are often incompetent; schools thinly attended. Where is the fault: somewhere; can it be ascertained and remedied is a question of interest to all.

We have said teachers are often incompetent; but this incompetency is not often chargeable to the lack of scientific attainments. It arises much more frequently from ignorance as to the successful manner of teaching. Teachers of superior education often prove failures; they have the science but lack the art. Just at this point information must begin. Our Legislature has hit upon the remedy if it is only carried out properly. We are to have a County Superintendent whose duty it is to take a general supervision of the schools. The responsibility of selecting this officer is thrown upon the Trustees of the several townships, and in the faithful discharge of this duty much depends. An inefficient Superintendent defeats the wise provision and gives us expense without advantage. This officer must be the right man if good results are obtained. These duties indicate his qualifications. He must direct and advise the inexperienced teacher. To do this successfully he should himself be an experienced teacher, fully comprehending the science and art of his profession. We have no money to waste on experiments and hence in directing and advising teachers few mistakes should be made. He is expected to infuse new life into our languishing school system. This demands energy; that he be alive to the responsibility and dignity of his calling; able by precept and example to awaken a spirit of emulation and earnestness in every school in the county. With such a Superintendent our educational interests would rapidly advance. Schools being better taught would be better attended, and with the same expenditure of money far greater results would be attained.

In selecting a Superintendent party politics should be ignored. This no doubt was in the mind of the Legislature when the selection was referred to the Trustees. To elect by a vote of the people would necessarily drag the candidate into the arena of party politics. The Trustees are presumed to be a judicious, conservative body, with too high an appreciation of the vast interests involved to suffer party to control their choice.

My acquaintance with the Trustees of the county, although limited as to some of them, leads me to expect a wise selection. Some I know are men of experience and ripe judgment. We no doubt have the man if he is only called out. The indications in this direction are propitious. [illegible] candidates of which are in the field, both have had experience in our educational matters, both, so far as I know, are good men for the position. I speak of Mr. Barns, of Waterloo and Mr. McIntosh, of Auburn. Of the former I cannot speak from personal knowledge as my acquaintance with him is limited, but presume he is all his friends claim. With the last named I am personally acquainted, and hope not to be charged with favoritism if I say that to my mind he has some qualifications for the office. As a teacher he has been eminently successful, his energy and earnestness in the cause of education cannot be questioned. But in saying this for Mr. McIntosh, I would not be understood as claiming for him pre-eminence; others may possess equal or perhaps superior qualifications. I wish simply to call out investigation and scrutiny before the selection is made.—Let us have the best man regardless of party or locality. Our duty to ourselves and to posterity demand this. Yearly a vast outlay of money is made to educate the masses. Hitherto success has been but partial. The cause of failure is apparent: Poorly managed and thinly attended schools. Shall we now apply the remedy? Money is not wanted until we use what we have more efficiently. Good results can be doubled without another dollar. We want a revival of interest in schools. Somebody must give time and talent to this end. Let not the present opportunity pass unimproved. W.

The Club Dance gives its first hop to-morrow night, Friday. A good time is expected.

Jack, Shack-Nasty Jim, Scar-Faced Charlie, and others of the Modocs, who have made their country so hot for the white settlers, and the result has not proved satisfactory. The Indians having rejected the proffered terms, the commanding officer has expressed his determination to accept no terms but unconditional surrender....Gen. Cary H. Fry, Chief Paymaster of the Military Division of the Pacific, died at San Francisco recently. ....A terrible encounter occurred in the notorious quarter of Chicago known as Bridgeport, last week, between two policemen and six villainous roughs, which resulted in the killing of two of the latter, and the serious wounding of one of the policemen.

IN Trumbull county, Ohio, the other day, a party of young rowdies, who were engaged in the disreputable business of serenading an aged couple, just married, with tin pans, were treated to a shower of sulphuric acid by the irate bride. Half a dozen eyes were permanently extinguished, several suits of clothes ruined, and a number of hitherto good-looking faces disfigured for life....Mr. Colfax was accorded an enthusiastic reception by his old friends of South Bend, who turned out in large numbers to welcome him home. They cannot persuade themselves that he is not an innocent and much abused man....The Modoc war may be regarded as at an end. Capt. Jack sent word to Gen. F. Narter, of Newark, N. J., was recently robbed at the Matteson House, in Chicago, of a satchel containing $5,000 worth of jewelry.

Smith. Mrs. Smith was burned to death, and her husband was so badly burned while trying to save his wife that it is feared that he will always be blind, and his hands are permanently crippled. THE President has appointed James T. Lane United States District Attorney for Iowa.... According to the latest advices the Modoc war, instead of being concluded, as the public was led to believe, is but just commenced. When the Peace Commissioners, according to agreement, went to the Point of Rocks to meet the lamb-like savages, and lead them captive to headquarters, they found the Indians had fled. It is believed they have succeeded in getting into one of the cracks of the mountain region, east of their lava beds, where for a hundred miles no cavalry can penetrate, and that they will reach the Pilot river country, which is full of cattle. In answer to a formal inquiry from Gov. McEnery, Gen. THE loss by the burglarizing of the Falls City Tobacco Bank, of Louisville, turns out to have been much larger than was at first supposed. All the Jeffersonville railroad bonds, the Short Line railroad bonds, and the New Albany city bonds are missing, amounting, probably, to over $100,000....The last rail on the Texas Central railroad, connecting it with the Missouri, Kansas and Texas road, at Denison, Texas, has been laid, and there is now unbroken railway connection between New York and Galveston.

CONGRESS IN BRIEF.

SENATE—EXTRA SESSION.

THURSDAY, March 6.—The Senate assembled at noon, all the Senators being present. Jones (Nev.), Ferry (Ct.), and Wadleigh (N.H.) were sworn in and took their seats. Spencer (Ala.) also offered himself to be sworn in. Bayard objected, and a long debate ensued, but no action was reached in the matter....Morton offered a resolution to the effect that Caldwell was not legally elected Senator from Kansas, which went over under the rules.

FRIDAY, March 7.—The Rev. Mr. Newman was re-elected Chaplain....The Senate, by a vote of 24 to 32, refused to postpone the case of Spencer (Ala.) He was admitted and sworn in.... West presented the credentials of McMillan (La.) They were ordered to lie upon the table and be printed....An ineffectual attempt was made to take up the case of Caldwell (Kansas).

MONDAY, March 10.—The Senate Committee on Elections were directed to examine and report at the next session the best and most practicable method of electing the President and Vice-President of the United States, together with a plan for the organization of a tribunal to determine all contested questions connected therewith, and that the committee have leave to sit during the recess of the Senate.... The case of Caldwell was taken up, but nothing was done further than to hear an argument by Morton against the validity of the election, and a written defense of Caldwell by himself, who rested his case on the plea that the Senate cannot go behind his majority to consider the means by which it was obtained.

TUESDAY, March 11.—A resolution directing the Secretary of War to report as to the expediency of setting off a part of Mackinac island for a public park, was passed....The Caldwell case was taken up, and Carpenter, of Wisconsin, addressed the Senate against the resolutions declaring Caldwell's election illegal....Gordon (Ga.) was sworn in....Wright introduced a resolution that the charges against Clayton (Ark.) had not been sustained, and asking the discharge of the committee.

A Forgotten History.

The Chicago Journal says that Mrs. Elizabeth Huddleston, the grandmother of Mrs. Gov. Beveridge, and widow of the Sheriff of Ransaelaer county, N. Y., who was killed by the anti-renters, at the breaking out of the "anti-rent war" there, between thirty and forty years ago, died at Evanston on Sunday. She was one of the oldest inhabitants of Cook county.

The foregoing is not quite correct. Sheriff Huddleston was killed nearly fifty years ago, by John Van Alstyne, on whose property Huddleston had levied an execution. The anti-renters had nothing to do with it. The body was found buried in a field, where Van Alstyne had harrowed over it to conceal the spot. The murderer was hanged after making a confession, which was printed for circulation on the day of the execution, with the picture of the gallows and swinging victim on the title-page, to make it sell. Murder was a rarer thing then, and the children who saw that frightful wood-cut never forgot it.—Springfield Journal.

ON TO CONGRESS!

On to Congress! hasten all men!
  Whatsoever be your position—
On to Congress! great and small men,
  To change or better your condition.
'Tis the mart, the hall of commerce,
  House of call and bench for traders;
Cursed be he that takes it from us,
  Cursed all privilege invaders.

Mines, and mills, and coal and iron,
  Railroads, land, canals, and steamers—
Sweeter than the song of siren
  Are the jobs of Congress schemers.
Repeal a tax, increase a tax,
  And subsidize, or loan on bonds,
All the Senatorial hacks
  Closely shut their eyes, or wink 'em.

As the lobby gives the law, sir,
  And a bargain is a bargain—
Conscience rules the man of straw, sir,
  Truth or honesty's a jargon.
Colfax leaving, Wilson coming,
  Ames, the stout, leads on the crew,
See! Judge Sherman boldly drumming
  At New York [illegible] to do.

Patterson, devout and learned,
  Harlan, bounteous friend to all,
Sure they'll keep what they have earned,
  Kelley's receipt will prevail,
Bully Butler can exculpate
  Violence, or fraud, or wrong,
Beat it into each numbskull pate;
  Who'll out wag a lawyer's tongue?

If denials are of service
  To appease the public ire,
Colfax rising, slightly nervous,
  Will give all that you require.
Point to "character long standing,"
  Show that "calumny don't pay"—
Moral trumpets are the band in
  Which this gent is used to play.

How to screen 'em, how to clean 'em,
  Blindfold over curious eyes,
Hatch up lies, and never deem 'em
  To be known as downright lies.
Rally all the moral party!
  Summon sympathetic aids—
Preach forgiveness, whole and hearty;
  A party's crime the party shades.

Be the sin the very evil
  You have roared and raved at oft,
Party spirit courts the devil,
  Speaks him fair, and speaks him soft.
Honest men are antiquated,
  Crotchet-fed, and dreamers vain,
Politics are not created
  For the set whose ways are plain.

Party tactics bring us plunder—
  Each man has his honest price—
Self-negation is a blunder—
  Virtue does not pay like vice.
So on to Congress, hasten all men
  Whatsoever be your position—
On to Congress! great and small men,
  To change or better your condition!

The Volunteer Apologists of Corruption.

The more closely we scan the report of the special committee of the House of Representatives on the Credit Mobilier corruptions the more lame and impotent does that scandalous conclusion of a great national scandal appear in our eyes. These inquisitors have absolutely turned themselves into absurd apologists for all the parties implicated in these corruptions except two, one of whom is a Republican and the other a Democrat. The absurdity of the apologies invented by the committee for the purpose of screening some of these Republican criminals from the just condemnation of their guilt may be seen in the fact that the extenuations of the committee actually exceed all that Ames' victims had the audacity to invent for themselves. In illustration of this gratuitous whitewashing we need cite only the following paragraph:

> "It ought also to be observed that those gentlemen who surrendered their stock to Mr. Ames before there was any public excitement upon the subject do not profess to have done so upon any idea of impropriety in holding it, but for reasons affecting the value and security of the investment. But the committee believe that they must have felt that there was something so out the ordinary course of business in the extraordinary dividends they were receiving as to render the investment itself suspicious, and that this was one of the motives of their action."

That is, this committee is determined to protect these criminals from the damaging effect of their own brazen confessions! Some of them, it seems, did not pretend to have virtue enough to see any impropriety in holding stock given to them under auspices so corrupt that the man who assigned it is deemed worthy of expulsion from the House. And yet it is in behalf of such self-confessed miscreants that the committee proceed to express a "belief" which is not only unauthorized by anything in the words or actions of these parties, but which is expressly negatived by their deliberate utterances in the face of the country. If the committee had been the hired attorney engaged by these culprits to plead their cause before Congress it would have been impossible to display a more superservicable zeal in the premises. Here is a set of men who disavow the pretension of having been governed by any sense of honor in seeking to escape from the predicament in which they had placed themselves by accepting the favors of Oakes Ames, and now comes this committee and benevolently throws its shield over those self-confessed convicts by volunteering to make in their favor a plea which, degraded as they are, they had too much remaining candor and honesty to make for themselves.

As if to set their own obtuseness on even a higher pedestal than that of the parties for whose criminal insensibility they invent this suppositious plea, the members of the committee proceed to argue as follows:

> "The committee do not find that either of the above-named gentlemen in contracting with Mr. Ames had any corrupt motive or purpose himself, or was aware that Mr. Ames had any, nor did either of them suppose he was guilty of any impropriety, or even indelicacy, in becoming a purchaser of this stock. Had it appeared that these gentlemen were aware of the enormous dividends upon this stock, and how they were to be earned, we could not then acquit them."

What miserable paltering is this! Was it not the love of "enormous dividends" which tempted these men to nibble at the baits of Oakes Ames? Does this committee suppose that the smart politicians who accepted this stock were so incredulous as to make no inquiries concerning the amount of these fat dividends and how they were to be realized? Is this the kind of men who are placed at the head of committees in Congress? Must Dawes, the leader of the House, be pronounced an idiot in the matter of making investments for himself, but held wise enough to devise ways and means for the whole republic? Did Garfield make "appropriations" for his own benefit in this senseless manner, while deemed sagacious enough to preside over all the appropriations annually made for the support of the Government? Is Bingham such an ignoramus that he must be supposed to have shut his eyes when he opened his mouth to swallow Ames' sugar plums, and yet shall he be counted expert enough to stand at the head of the Judiciary Committee? Has Scofield wit enough to direct the proceedings of the Naval Committee in the House, but not wit enough to know how the Credit Mobilier bonds were to be "floated?" Has "pig-iron" Kelley intelligence enough to protect "American industry," but not enough to protect his own honor! All this the committee ask us to "believe" in behalf of these Republican pundits, and to believe it not only without any evidence, but in direct opposition to the confessions made by some of these parties when testifying in their own behalf! Could the force of partisanship and of favoritism go any further than this?

With the report of the committee before them, the "plain people" of the United States will be tempted to believe that in our lowest deep of national disgrace the investigating committee has plumbed a still lower depth. A majority of its members have voluntarily turned themselves into swift witnesses for the defense of these criminals—even swifter and more thorough-going ones than the accused parties thought it safe to be in their own behalf, with all the incentives of self-preservation to stimulate the resources of their invention. That men under the stress of conscious corruption and with the shame of detection before their eyes should betray much squirming in yielding up the secrets of their bosoms was only natural; but that a committee of respectable and reputable men, appointed to make inquisition for guilt because of their supposed probity, should invent palliations and excuses for corruption, even beyond all that the corrupted parties dared to ask or think, implies a still greater dereliction from all public and private honor which should "feel a stain like a wound." Yet this is the implication which necessarily results from the shuffling report before us.

The committee has indeed barely escaped from converting these shaking reeds into giants of public virtue. After first arguing to prove that they were not knaves, but only fools, the authors of the report suddenly turn to descant on the intellectual and moral strength which kept these tempted and tried heroes from being worsted in their struggle with Oakes Ames. The report says:

> "We do not think any member ought to feel so confident of his own strength as to allow himself to be brought into this temptation. We think Mr. Ames judged shrewdly in saying that a man is much more likely to be watchful of his own interests than those of other people. But there is a broader view still which we think ought to be taken. This country is fast becoming filled with gigantic corporations wielding and controlling immense aggregations of money, and thereby commanding great influence and power. It is notorious in many State Legislatures that these influences are often controlling, so that in effect they become the ruling power of the State. Within a few years Congress has to some extent been brought within similar influences, and the knowledge of the public on that subject has brought great discredit upon the body—far more, we believe, than there were facts to justify.
> "But such is the tendency of the time, and the belief is far too general that all men can be ruled with money, and that the use of such means, to carry public measures, is legitimate and proper. No member of Congress ought to place himself in circumstances of suspicion, so that any discredit of the body shall arise on his account. It is of the highest importance that the national legislature should be free of all taint of corruption, and it is of almost equal necessity that the people should feel confident that it is so.
>
> "In a free government like our own cannot expect the people will long respect the laws if they lose respect for the law-makers.
> "For these reasons we think it behooves every man in Congress or in any public position to hold himself aloof, as far as possible, from all such influences, that he may not only be enabled to look at every public question with an eye only to the public good, but that his conduct and motives be not suspected or questioned. The only criticism the committee feel compelled to make on the action of these members in taking this stock is that they were not sufficiently careful in ascertaining what they were getting, and that in their judgment the assurance of a good investment was all the assurance they needed."

The logic of this reasoning is as follows: Oakes Ames was a shrewd tempter of weak-minded Congressmen. He brought his arts to bear on Bingham, Garfield, Kelley, Scofield, and others. They all bit at his baits, and being caught in his snares tried to worm themselves out, not because they did not like to be caught with their necks in a trap. Haning this added meanness and prevarication to their original transgression, they are now to be dismissed with some vaguely hinted criticism on their imprudence as thrifty economists, and with implied eulogies on the strength of virtue which carried them safely through the storm of temptation? In the ethics of ordinary men the receiver is as bad as the thief, and the bribed only little less guilty than the briber; but in the ethics of our Congressional censors a receiver of suspicious gratuities is to be held guiltless if only he omits to inquire what it is that he is getting, and if he commits this negligence at the instigation of avarice!

The only fault of these unfortunates was, says the committee, "that they were not sufficiently careful in ascertaining what they were getting, and that in their judgment the assurance of a good investment was all the assurance they needed." In a word, they closed their eyes to the bribes they were taking, and they did so on pure and mere calculations of self-interest. Such is the kind of conduct which is glozed over by the guardians of public virtue in Congress! And such being the low estate of our "guardians," let us be grateful that they did not try to palm off their tempted saints as so many modern Shadrachs, Meshachs, and Abednegoes, who had passed through the burning fiery furnace without so much as a smell of smoke on their garments.—New York World.

Physicians in England.

The physicians of England are always known by the simple title of "Mr.," and all efforts to revolutionize public sentiment so as to authorize the assumption of the title of "Doctor" have, to use a medical term, proved abortive. The Royal College of Physicians of London has announced that it does not recognize nor sanction the assumption of the title of "Doctor" by its licentiates. It appears, also, that neither has a licentiate of the Royal College of Physicians of Edinburg, or of the King and Queen's College of Physicians, Ireland, any right, as such, to style himself "Doctor." The British Medical College, which communicates this information, adds that a university degree alone gives this distinguishing title to graduates in medicine. An American physician of good standing lately attempted to pass as a "Doctor" in London, but he felt the stern grasp of the law, and now practices as "Mr." Blank.

A Curious Story About Lincoln, Davis, Taylor and Anderson.

A highly interesting scrap of history has recently come to light, in relation to Mr. Lincoln. Upon the authority, so we are informed, of one of the early settlers of Illinois (Mr. Dixon, the founder of the city of Dixon, Lee county), it is stated that about the year 1812, while Gen. Taylor, afterward President of the United States, was in command of the fort at Dixon's Ferry, near where Dixon now stands, Jefferson Davis, who was a Lieutenant in the United States service at the time, and serving under Gen. Taylor, administered the oath to Abraham Lincoln, then a captain in the volunteer militia of this State. It is also stated upon the same authority that Gen. Robert Anderson, of Fort Sumter fame, was a Lieutenant and present at the time. How different the lives of those two men.—Springfield (Ill.) Journal.

FARM AND GARDEN.

Feeding and Fattening Animals.

Thaer fixes thirteen pounds as the quantity of hay per day which a cow requires for her maintenance in perfect condition; and if in milk, he allows as many as twenty-two to twenty-three pounds, but the ration must vary with the weight of the animal. Mr. Perrault, another foreign writer, states twenty-seven pounds as the allowance for a milch cow weighing about 880 pounds, he having in his experience found that an animal in milk required about six and one-quarter pounds hay for every 220 pounds of living weight. A very large ox or cow, relatively to its weight, requires less food than an animal of smaller dimensions. And this circumstance is a grand argument with those breeders who are in favor of very large cattle. They say that if a large ox consumes more than a small one, still the increase in consumption is by no means in the ratio of the increase in weight. The real difference is owing to the quieter disposition of the animal, the vessels going to support the flesh or fat being larger, attained by the before-mentioned careful crossing, so that some breeds have, by such a system, attained the faculty of laying more upon their backs, and others again more in the adipose tissues within. It may be said that for every one hundred pounds, neat cattle require for plain keeping three-fourths of a pound of meadow hay; when laboring, two pounds; when in milk, three; growing rapidly, three and one-half, which ought to be given with great regularity and about three times a day, constituting as many meals, which, however, are well divided, the whole quantity for each meal not being placed before the animal at once. This precaution is particularly necessary when the allowance consists of green fodder. In fattening cattle it is, perhaps, of more importance than in general feeding, that the provender should be distributed regularly. Plenty of soft litter and the greatest attention to cleanliness aid materially in fattening.

Harrow Your Wheat.

Don't forget to run your harrow over your wheat the last of March or the first of April. If sown broad cast, harrow; if drilled, harrow with the drill. It will pull up but little, and will be equal to a hoe dressing. Try it.

We agree with our correspondent in regard to the value of harrowing in the spring. We adopted the plan last year, and feel confident that we added one-third, at least, to the amount of our crop by doing so. We harrowed one way with the A harrow, and then cross harrowed with a Thomas harrow. We left a few rods in the middle of the field without the first harrowing, as an experiment, and found that this place suffered for the neglect all the season.—Northwestern Farmer.

Aid in Advancing the Germination of Seeds.

As a means of promoting the germination of fruit and other seeds, a German horticulturist recommends the following simple preparation, as tested by his own experience. Seeds of apples, pears, etc., are placed in a tumbler or glass jar, with a sufficient quantity of rain water to cover them, and kept in a room at a temperature of from 62 and 65 degrees Fahrenheit, the water to be renewed when its odor indicates spoiling. After about a fortnight the germs appear, when the seeds should be slightly dried by spreading upon a cotton or woolen cloth, and planted immediately. Locust seeds and others having hard shells are equally benefited by such soaking.

Chicken Cholera.

The following prescription we find in the Southern Cultivator, and is said to be very efficacious in chicken cholera:

Glycerine in water, each a half ounce; carbolic acid, ten drops. When the first symptoms of the disease are apparent give five drops, and repeat at intervals of twelve hours. Usually the second dose effects a cure. A neighbor informed me that cholera was very destructive among his poultry, and at my suggestion he tried the foregoing recipe. He reports that the progress of the disease was promptly arrested, and in almost every case a cure was accomplished.

How to Cook Good Beef Steak.

Have your steak cut thick, put it on your meat-board, and with a sharp-pointed knife prick it every imaginable way to make it tender, put it on the gridiron over the fire, turning it very often. Put a lump of butter, and some salt and pepper, into a tin dish. Put your steak dish where it will get warmed. When the steak is cooked, put it into the tin dish and double it over; press out all the blood you can, and lay the steak on your plate. Set the tin dish with the blood, pepper, and salt on the stove, and as soon as it boils up and thickens pour it over your steak. You can add a can of mushrooms to the gravy. This recipe was never known to fail.

Save the Best Fowls for Breeding.

It is the worst policy to kill all the best and handsomest fowls, and save only the mean and scraggy ones to breed from. This is precisely the way to run out your stock; for like tends to breed like, and the result is, that by continually taking away the best birds, and using the eggs of the poorest, your flock will grow poorer every succeeding year.

It would seem that this was too plain to be insisted upon, but, in fact, "line upon line" is needed. It is the crying want of the poultry upon the farms the country through—this careful and intelligent selection of the best for breeding.

Nothing is lost by a little self-denial to start with. The extra pound or two of poultry flesh that you leave on the legs, instead of sending it to market, is as good seed, and it will bring forth tenfold and twenty-fold in your future breeding.—Poultry World.

Water-Proof Coating for Walls.

The following coating has proved very effective in preventing the penetration of moisture on the weather side of walls: Pitch, 50 lbs; rosin, 30 lbs; red ochre, 6 lbs; fine brick dust, 12 lbs; all boiled together, with constant stirring, and then sufficient oil of turpentine—about one-quarter the volume of the above—added to cause it to spread readily. It is to be laid on as thin as possible with a bristle brush.

To Clean Casks.

A good plan to cleanse musty or foul casks is to put in a quantity of unslacked lime, and then pour in boiling water until the same is slacked. Put in the bung and shake until the water and lime have come in contact with every part of the barrel. Let it stand six or eight hours empty, and smell the cask, and if not clean repeat the operation, and after having again emptied out the lime, burn a strip of cloth dipped in melted brimstone in the cask, fastening it by the bung, and a cask must be foul indeed that cannot be purified by this process.

Hog Cholera.

Prof. J. B. Turner, of Illinois, recommends the following for the prevention of hog cholera: One peck of wood ashes, four pounds salt, one pound each of black antimony, copperas, sulphur, one-fourth pound saltpeter; pound, mix thoroughly, and moisten enough to prevent waste. Put it in a trough in a dry place, where the hogs can at all times eat just as much as they please of it.

Remedy for Croup in One Minute.

This remedy is simply alum. Take a knife or grater, and shave or grate off in small particles about a teaspoonful of alum; mix it with about twice its quantity of sugar, to make it palatable, and administer as quick as possible. Its effects will be truly magical, as almost instantaneous relief will be afforded.

Gold Absorption.

What becomes of the $223,000,000 of the precious metals annually produced in the world, is a question, easy to ask and not difficult to answer. Of our gold and silver product, eighty per cent. is exported, four-fifths of which go to India. The exports of gold and silver from the United States during the last twenty-five years has amounted to $1,200,000,000. The Egyptians, Hindoos, Chinese, and Persians consume but little of Occidental products, while their products are in great demand by Western nations. The balance of trade in favor of these countries is $80,000,000 annually. A French writer states that the Egyptians conceal $20,000,000 annually of the precious metals; and the Emperor of Morocco has filled seventeen large chambers with gold and silver. The passion for hoarding is shared by the subjects of those princes; and this is the solution of the absorption of the precious metals. This absorption by the Eastern nations has been going on since the most remote historical period. In the time of Augustus (B. C. 63) the amount of the precious metals abstracted from the bullion of the Roman Empire by the traffic with the East was four millions of dollars per annum. A large amount of gold and silver is invested in ornaments in churches in Italy, Russia, and other countries of Europe. Silver pulpits and other sacred ornaments are by no means uncommon in churches, temples, pagodas, and tombs throughout the Eastern hemisphere. In 1857 the export of gold and silver from Great Britain to the East was thirty-four millions of pounds sterling. During twenty-nine years (1841 to 1869) the imports into India of gold and silver were twelve hundred millions of dollars. India has for years been draining Europe and the United States of bullion, there to be hoarded or converted into ornaments, never again to circulate in the countries from which it was exported.

A Three Million Failure for $3,000.

There is a curious story afloat about the great failure of James Wood & Sons, of Pittsburgh. It seems that since the death of the founder of the house, the business has been in the hands of the sons, three in number. On the day of the "crash" the two older brothers were absent and in other parts of the country, the youngest of all being left in charge. Word came to him from the cashier of the bank with which they did business that a note of $3,000 was due, and no money in the bank to meet it. The cashier would have paid it, if asked to do so, or would have been ready to place even $50,000 to the credit of the firm if they should so desire. But the young man upon whom the responsibility rested expressed no such request, and nothing was left for the cashier to do but to let the note go to protest. The fact of the firm's failure to meet this obligation soon became known among the creditors, whose paper began to pour in with uncomfortable rapidity, so that in a few days the only course left for the firm was to make an assignment, in order, if possible, to get a fresh start. Thus it was that a firm which had three and a half million assets, and only two-thirds that amount of liabilities, failed for $3,000.

Another interesting point in connection with this great failure is the statement that the creditors are said to expect to be able to make good their claim upon the estate itself, which is rumored to be worth fully $7,000,000. The claim is based upon the fact that there was no notice of dissolution of partnership after the death of James Wood, his sons having continued the business without the advertisement of any change in the organization of the firm.

Some United States Senators.

The oldest Senator will be Simon Cameron, born in 1799, and the two youngest, Mr. Dorsey, born in 1841, and Dr. Conover, 1830. Mr. Cameron is the only Senator over 70 years of age. Forty-six of the Senators are lawyers; five are interested in railroads; four are farmers; three are physicians; two are journalists; two clergymen; Mr. Sprague is a manufacturer, Mr. Chandler a merchant, Mr. Ames an army officer, Mr. Clayton a civil engineer, Mr. Jones a miner, Mr. Pinchback a waiter, and Messrs. Buckingham, Caldwell, T. W. Ferry, Gilbert and West engaged in general business. Senators Alcorn, Gordon and Ransom were Generals in the Confederate army during the war. Messrs. Alcorn, Anthony, Boreman, Brownlow, Buckingham, Clayton, Fenton, Hamlin, L. M. Morrill, Morton, Ramsey, Sprague, Oglesby and Stevenson have in the past been Governors of their respective States.

"I'LL TRY."

There is a society in London, known as the Society of Arts. Its object is the encouragement of talent in the departments of art. Prizes are awarded by the society, sometimes to the painters for their pictures, and sometimes to humbler artisans for improvements in weaving, or in the manufacture of bonnets, lace, etc.

More than half a century ago, a little fellow, named William Ross, not twelve years of age, was talking with his mother about an exhibition of paintings at the society's rooms. William was very fond of paintings, and could himself draw and color with remarkable skill. "Look you, William," said his mother, "I saw some painting in the exhibition which did not seem to me half as good as some of yours."

"Do you really think so, mother?" asked he.

"I am sure of it," she replied. "I saw some paintings inferior, both in color and drawings, to some that are hanging in your chamber."

William knew that his mother was no flatterer, and he said, "I have a mind to ask permission to hang one or two of my paintings on the walls at the next exhibition."

"Why not try for one of the prizes?" asked his mother.

"O! mother, do you think I should stand any chance of success?"

"'Nothing venture, nothing have,'" said his mother. "You can but try."

"And I will try, mother dear," said William. "I have a historical subject in my head out of which I think I can make a picture."

"What is it, William?"

"The death of Wat Tyler. You have heard him? He led a mob in the time of Richard the Second. He behaved insolently before the King at Smithfield, and was struck down by Walworth, Mayor of London, and then dispatched by the King's attendants."

"It is a bold subject, William; but I will say nothing to deter you from trying it."

"If I fail, mother, where will be the harm? I can try again."

"To be sure you can, William. So we will not be disappointed should you not succeed in winning the silver palette, offered by the society for the best historical painting."

Without more ado, little William went to work. He first acquainted himself with the various costumes of the year 1381; he learned how the King and the noblemen used to dress, and what sort of clothes were worn by the poor people and workmen, to which class Wat Tyler belonged. He also learned what sort of weapons were carried in those days.

After having given some time to the study of these things, he acquainted himself thoroughly with the historical incidents attending the death of the bold rioter. He grouped, in imagination, the persons present at the scene—the King and his attendant; Walworth the Mayor; Wat Tyler himself, and in the background some of his ruffianly companions.

The difficulty now was to select that period of the action best fitted for a picture, and to group the figures in attitudes the most natural and expressive. Many times did little William make a sketch on paper, and obliterate it, dissatisfied with his work. At times he almost despaired of accomplishing anything that should do justice to the conception in his mind. But after many failures, he completed a sketch in which he decided to transfer to canvas.

He now labored diligently at his task, and took every opportunity to improve himself in a knowledge of colors and their effects. At length the day for handing in his picture arrived. He then had to wait a month before there was any decision as to its merits. On the day appointed for the announcement of the decision, many persons of distinction were present, including ladies. The meeting was presided over by the Duke of Norfolk.

William's mother was present, of course. She sat waiting the result, with a beating heart. What a gratified mother she was, when, after the transaction of some uninteresting business, it was announced that the prize of a silver palette for the best historical picture was awarded to the painter of the piece entitled, "The Death of Wat Tyler."

When it was found that William Ross was the successful artist, the applause of the audience broke forth with enthusiasm. To see such a little fellow gain a prize over competitors of mature age was a novelty and surprise. William was summoned with his picture to the Duke's chair, and here he received such counsel and encouragement as were of great service to him in his future career. He became at length Sir William Ross, miniature painter to the Queen, having risen to fortune and to fame by carrying out with determination and perseverance his simple promise to his mother of "I will try."

"Who Put Those Screws in that Table?"

These are the very words Grandmother Hawkins said the other day when she entered the sitting-room, but they look so quiet on paper that unless you can picture to yourself a full-faced bustling little lady of sixty, with hands lifted in horror and eyes staring wildly at the "ruined" furniture, and can fancy a something between a screech and a groan equally distributed over seven very distinct words, you can have no idea at all of grandma's feelings.

What wonder the dear soul was shocked! The neatest of housekeepers and most loving of grandmothers, how could she see such dreadful proof of mischief without suspecting "those children!" Yes, there were the hammer and the screw-driver on the floor, and there was the poor table, and oh! worse and worse, "if they hadn't gone and put screws into the very well!"

It was too much!

"Children! children!" she screamed—"Come here right away!"

And we did come quick, for we were hidden behind the window-curtain, and had only to thrust our laughing, frightened faces into view. One face (mine) had a little shame in it, I knew; for I was the eldest—a great big boy, who ought to know better than to take a part in such tricks on dear good grandmother.

"Who never did any harm,
But——"

No, she didn't "kill the mice in father's barn," but she really looked for an instant as if she could kill us on the spot.

Only for an instant, though. The next, she said, sorrowfully, "O children! how could you! how could you spoil the ——" and then, seeing somehow that it was a joke, she added, half-laughing, half-scolding, "What does it all mean, you little witches?"

"Oh! it's only fun, grandma; they're nothing but imitation," we all cried in a breath. "See! you can blow them off the table."

"Yes," added Charley, "and they're only just a little stuck on the wall with water. They won't leave any mark on the paint at all; we know they won't."

"Sakes! made out of tin foil, are they!" exclaimed grandma, as she picked up one of the screw-heads off the floor. It was flat and as thin as paper.

"Yes, 'um," put in Charley; we got the foil off of the chocolate Uncle Will brought last night, and we inked little strips of paper and pasted 'em to make believe it was the place you screw 'em. Jim Scott gave us a pattern to make 'em by. Ho! but its 'jolly' though!"

"Yes, and I was the one that thought of putting the tools on the floor," shouted little Dick. "I wanted it to look as if we'd been doin' it for fair, and ——"

But grandma didn't wait to hear any more; she was already at the door, calling mother to come and see what had happened to the table!

"Run quick, children," she added hurriedly, "get behind the curtain again!"

And—do you believe?—grandma actually "caught" mother just as she had been caught herself.

Dear me! Mr. Editor, you never saw anything like it, and you ought to have heard us all shout when mother in turn went to the door and called in an alarming tone:

"Children! children!"

Robbie's Adventure With Old Frisky.

When the sheep were put in the yard at night, it was Robbie's delight to be among them, petting and feeding them—bringing an ear of corn, an armful of clover or a handful of oats. But Old Frisky, the "horned patriarch," was never a favorite of Robbie's, and was always denied a share in the dainties, though he asked for them as plainly as a sheep could. I think old Frisky has a disposition like an Indian. For he treasured up all of Robbie's ill doings and patiently waited to be revenged. And thus it came about:

Robbie has lost none of his interest in hens' nests, notwithstanding his experience with old Speck. He could find but one hole through which a hen could pass, and that was too small for a boy. So one night, having determined to get at the nest in some way, he succeeded in enlarging the opening sufficient, he thought, to crawl through. He made the attempt, and crawled part of the way through, but alas! there he was, and with all his efforts could get neither forward nor backward. He kicked and squirmed; he sent forth yells that would have distinguished a Camanche, but all in vain.

Old Frisky had been quietly watching the fence corner, where he was quietly chewing his cud. Perhaps he mistook Robbie's frantic efforts to get free for a challenge to fight. Possibly he deliberately determined to take a mean advantage of an unfortunate enemy. I cannot tell you what were his thoughts. I can only chronicle the result of his meditations. With a shake of his broad head, and a prolonged "Baa-a," he charged the enemy in the rear. The sudden shock almost pushed Robbie through, and elicited a yell that can be compared to nothing less than a score of wild cats in full voice. Again the old "patriarch" made ready, and with the remembrance of wrongs to be avenged, once more came upon the helpless foe. Another terrific yell came from beneath the granary, and the whole force of field and house—Uncle Jake, Johnnie, mother, aunt and children—came upon the scene and rushed to the rescue. With considerable difficulty, Robbie was released from his perilous position, and duly petted and soothed. But it was a good many days before he cared about sitting down. AUNT PHEBE.

The Way New York Lives.

New York, as every one knows, is a city of contrasts and contradictions; but we have never seen the facts of its life better stated than in a recent lecture delivered by the Rev. George Mingins:

"The area of the city is about twenty-two square miles, or 14,000 acres in extent. This is divided into about 140,000 lots. Two thousand houses were built in the city last year. There are within its borders about 500 squares and streets. Below Fifty-fourth street there are 59,000 houses. Its population, according to the last census, is 994,000 souls. There are in New York 154,000 children between the ages of five and fifteen years. Of these 70,000 receive very little instruction, and 30,000 are little better than vagrants. From these latter are recruited what we call the 'dangerous classes.' Yet these children are worth saving; out of them we can make real men and women. About 6,000 children are lost in the streets and restored to their parents every year, and about 100 are annually abandoned.

"The number of families in the city is about 195,000, or an average of three families to every house. Of the houses used for residence purposes, 15,000 are tenements. The Seventeenth ward contains about one-tenth of the city population. There, in 4,120 houses, are 90,000 people. In the Eleventh ward the population is one to every sixteen square yards, or 290,000 to the square mile. In one tenement in that ward, on a lot 25x100 feet, there were 307 persons, of which number 110 were children; and the speaker knew of one room where seven adults ate and slept. The cellar population of the city, he said, was about 20,000, the cellars being about 2,000 in number; of which one-half are quite two-thirds below the level of the pavement, and 400 have their ceilings below the sidewalk. Into these neither air nor light could enter save by a hole in the pavement, or through an area-way. These are the plague-spots, the dens where vice and crime have high holiday.

"Herein are to be found men, women and children huddled together like cattle. The speaker said he had seen in one of these cellars twenty-five adults sleeping in one room, and twelve in one bed. Fully one-half the population is of foreign birth. There are more Irish than in Belfast, more Germans than in Hamburg; and if any one desires to go on a mission to the Jews, he need not travel far, for there are more Jews in New York city than in all Palestine. Two-thirds of the hospitals, thirty-two in number, were sustained by contributions. There are in New York criminals of all grades and classes. About 1,500 professional thieves make New their home, and about 3,000 criminals of all kinds are daily plotting mischief. There are two 'colleges' where children are regularly educated to become adepts in vice, where they are trained to thievery, burglary, etc. About 30,000 of the population are dinnerless, daily, and about 100,000 are the recipients of charity in a greater or less degree."

Curious Story of the Late Confederacy.

The Lynchburg Virginian narrates an incident in the career of the late Confederacy which goes to show how greed may overcome patriotism. Richmond was the headquarters of the Treasury Department, and the national currency was issued there. At a time when a new issue of bonds had just been ordered, there was employed in the Treasury Department a man named Elam, who saw the way to sudden wealth through a bold move, which he, with an associate, proceeded at once to make. One night the two men entered the treasury building through a back window, and taking the plates, from $5 to $1,000, they placed them on the press, and printed, on the regular paper, $5,000,000. There was no more difficulty in printing them than in printing an ordinary business card, and there were no precautions taken to prevent such an enterprise as that undertaken by the two worthies. All that remained to be done to make the bonds fit for circulation was to have them signed. The signing at this time was done by the young ladies in the department, 100 of whom were thus employed. The men persuaded two of these to sign their bonds, and, after a division, had each $2,500,000 of bonds, worth at that time their face value in gold or silver. The discovery came in its natural way. The paper was missed. The men were flush with their money, offering hundred dollar bills in payment of small debts, and in other ways acting suspiciously. One was arrested, and, being terribly frightened, confessed his guilt and implicated the other. Both were thrown into prison, from which one afterward escaped and went North, but the other suffered the penalty of his crime on the gallows. As for the bonds, nothing was ever known of them. Whether they were concealed, destroyed, or put in surreptitious circulation is uncertain; but the former supposition is most probable.

Ten Thousand Dollars for a Dinner.

One of the greatest pieces of extravagance on record in this country is described by a New York correspondent of the Boston Transcript. It occurred in the shape of a private dinner given at Delmonico's. A wealthy German importer, who has retired from business, and was about to sail for Europe, decided, before leaving America, to invite his friends to dinner. Covers were ordered for seventy-four guests, and carte blanche was given to Delmonico for the dinner. The large banquet hall of that establishment was secured—the same hall where the dinners to Dickens and Tyndall were given, at the rate of $15 a ticket. For nearly a week the employes of Delmonico were engaged in preparing for this dinner. A table twenty-four feet wide, extending the whole length of the room, was constructed. In the center of it an artificial pond was made, with a fountain, while around the fountain live swans were floating. Of course the pond was caged over. The center of the table was banked with flowers, from the water's edge, at a cost of over $3,000. Perfume fountains were constructed in various parts of the table, and to add to the intoxication of the senses, Bernstein's full band of thirty-five pieces was engaged to furnish the music. The dinner commenced at 8 p. m., and continued for a couple of hours, after which dancing took place until midnight, when the dinner, or supper, as it was then called, was resumed for an hour or two, followed by dancing until 4 in the morning. The bill for that dinner amounted to just $10,000.

A Whipping Six Miles Long.

Among the Pullman conductors on the Missouri Pacific railway is Mr. Tom Kingsley, an old passenger conductor on the C. and H. railroad. He has been in the employ of Pullman for some three years, and on the Missouri Pacific for about one year. Night before last he left St. Louis with his car, as usual, on his westward trip. Upon the same car was one of those spies sent to watch him, who took a berth, and to all appearances was an ordinary passenger on the train. But there was something sneaking in the fellow's looks that aroused the suspicion of Mr. Kingsley, who afterward became thoroughly convinced that the man was a spy upon his actions. Feeling naturally indignant, the more he thought the matter over the more he became enraged. In the morning the detective arose near Otterville; Mr. Kingsley approached him and invited him into the baggage-car, which, after entering, he locked. He then told the spy he had discovered his character, and he proposed to treat him as his conduct, in his eyes, justly merited. Tom sailed right in, and thrashed him all the way from Otterville to Smithton. When he was through he helped him back into the passenger car, where he remained till he reached Sedalia and the Ives House. Mr. J. E. Milliman, sleeping-car detective, is now in room No. 41, undergoing repairs, and trying to reduce the size of his head to natural dimensions. Meanwhile Mr. Pullman is bereft for the time of the services of this very devoted but unfortunate spy.—Sedalia (Mo.) Bazoo.

The Vienna Exposition.

The World's Exhibition at Vienna promises not only to be a great exposition, but to be attended by a great number of kings and princes. The Prince of Wales, who is President of the English Commission, will be present at the opening, as will the Shah of Persia. The Emperor William of Germany will visit the exhibition towards the latter part of May, in company with Alexander of Russia. The King of Italy is preparing to spend some time there, and it is said the rulers of the States in the North of Africa will be present. In order to be near the Exposition building, and to be ready to do the honors of host, the Emperor Francis Joseph has erected a fine pavilion near the grand entrance. Several German Princes have also erected villas near by. The Sultan has built a magnificent building, to be occupied by himself and his rather numerous family, and has sent from Constantinople the fountain of Mohammed, to be placed in the grounds surrounding it. The Viceroy of Egypt, not to be outdone by his superior, is also building a splendid edifice, which, it is said, he will convert into a mosque at the close of the exhibition, for the benefit of the people of his faith who reside in Vienna. It is believed by many that this collection of rulers will result in important measures of a political character.

The Coal Trade.

The census of 1870 shows that the number of collieries in the United States at that time was 1,566, of which 588 (227 anthracite and 361 bituminous) were in Pennsylvania; the number of engines employed in them was 1,173, of which 896 were in Pennsylvania; the number of men employed in them was 81,514, of whom 60,508 were in Pennsylvania; the number of boys employed was 10,940, of whom 9,864 were in Pennsylvania; the capital invested was $110,008,029, of which $67,911,703 was in Pennsylvania; the amount of wages paid per annum was $44,316,491, of which $31,978,308 was paid in Pennsylvania; the number of tons produced was 32,860,690, of which 23,448,798 was produced in Pennsylvania; the value of the product was $730,524,992, of which the Pennsylvania product was $523,257,814. It is thus seen that the single State of Pennsylvania has a coal interest which is more than two-thirds of the entire coal interest in the country. Next to Pennsylvania comes Illinois, Ohio, Maryland, Missouri, West Virginia, Indiana, Iowa, Kentucky and Tennessee, in the order in which they are named.

WARMING RAILWAY CARS IN GERMANY.—A mode of more safely and effectually warming railway carriages than by stoves or hot water has, it is said, been widely adopted in Germany. The invention consists of the use of a composite fuel, which only smoulders slowly, and is incased in an iron tray, inclosed in a copper box "hermetically closed." The heat is said to last for twenty-four hours if necessary. The fuel is called the "charcoal perquettes." At $65 per ton the cost is said to be almost nominal, and the apparatus costs only $6 to each compartment.

THE population of Egypt is 5,000,000.

The increase of Salary Bill has passed both Houses of Congress. It gives to the President $50,000, for those in the Cabinet, $10,000 each, to the Supreme Court, $10,000 each and to the Chief Justice $500 in addition, and to members of Congress each, $7,500, with the usual mileage. It doubles the salary of the President, and adds fifty per cent to the salary of the others, and will in the agregate increase the civil list expenditure annually $2,500,000. In times like these when there is a distrust in the honesty of public men, (alas with many too well conceived,) low price of farm products a scarcity of money, indebtedness, of individual and public beyond anything ever known in the past, and the rising up of a new master to the people, in an unexampled combination of capitol and corporations inimical to their dearest interest, this greediness upon the part of Congress, and disregard of popular sentiment is unfortunate and to be deplored. The men who are hopeful of the future of our land is lessening daily with the frequent recurrence of speculation, fraud and corruption with those who have been entrusted with conduct of public affairs. One of the most disgraceful features to our notion, is the dating back the time of this increase two years—giving the congressmen $5,000 more on his two years than he bargained too serve for, and that too after all the service was performed.

Congress—Crowing Outrage.

With the 3d of March expired the Forty-second Congress. The session has not been one of general benefit to the people. No measure of national advantage received favorable consideration. The best that may be said is that the people have been afforded an opportunity to gain a view of the terrible corruption pervading almost department of government. The Credit Mobilier investigation has opened the eyes of even those who persistenly refused to see what has long since been apparant to casual observers of current events.

Had this investigation been followed up with a vigorous prosecution of the offending parties, we would only be too glad to bestow proper credit upon those who controlled the expired Congress. As it is, the doings of this body may be summarized in a few words: It has exonerated Senator Pomeroy from the charge of bribery, given his colleague Caldwell, convicted of corruption, a new lease of official life, whitewashed the Credit Mobilier scandal, voted to increase the salary of every Senator and member of the present Congress $5000. and fixed the future pay at 7,500 per annum. In a word, by the vote taken shortly before its adjournment it had taken $ 163,000 out of the Treasury put the amount in its own pockets, and goes home to report progress to a confiding constituency.

This abominable outrage was fastened to the legislative appropriation bill, and increases the salaries of senators and members to $7,500 per annum and to include the present Congress—It proved a most characteristic piece of that kind of legislation that is evolved from conference committees in the last hours of a session. The House by barely three majority voted to fix the salary of senators and members at $6,500 and to abolish mileage.—The Senate non concurred. A conference committee of the two Houses thereupon go to work and increase it to $7,500 with actual mileage allowed, besides applying it to the present Congress, so that every Senator and member voted $5,00 into his own pocket which he took after the hammer fell at high noon on Monday.

Of the Indiana members, Packard, Shanks, Voorhes and Billy Williams voted for the outrage. Against it were Messrs. Coburn Holman Kerr and Niblack. The vote stood 102 in favor, and 94 against. About 50 members dodged the issue bp absenting themselves, or declining to vote, thus adding cowardice to knavery.—They need not expect to thus escape the condemnation of an outraged people.

The salary bill as it has finally passed Congress fixes the salaries as follows, per annum; President $50,000; Chief Justice, $10,500; Associate Justice, $10,000; Senators and Members, $7,500 each.

Senator Cragin, of New Hampshire, read a dispatch to the Senate from the Republicans of that State predicting their defeat in the State election next week if this increase of salary bill should pass and the President should not veto it.

The Chicago Tribune denounces this action of Congress as "an outrage without paliation or excuse. The members of this Congress were elected with a full knowledge that their compensation was fixed by law. That compensation was $5,000 a year, and mileage computed at the rate of $8 for each twenty miles. The mileage of a member of Congress from Illinois, computed at 1,000 miles, would amount to $400 each way each session. The actual cost of travel is twenty dollars each way each session. The emoluments of a member of the late Congress, therefore, were; Salary two years, 10,000; mileage three sessions 2,400;—making a total of 12,400, or 6,200 each year. Congress, however, in fixing the salaries of futtre Congress, increased their own pay, and voted themselves 15,000 each for the two years,—5,000 more than they had agreed to serve for. Taking this money will be nothing more nor less than an act of robbery of from 3,000 to 5,000 for each member who pockets it.

This is an impudent raid on the Treasury for spoils to be divided among the members of an expiring congress. The advocates of this meas are gave as all excuse that their receipts did not pay their expenses,—meaning thereby their necessary expenses. It is false. Five thousand dollars a year will pay—has paid—their necessary expenses in more expensive times than these.

Let all honest men put the seal of condemnation on this most villainous of all villainous transactions.

An exchange tells about a brave little boy who found a broken rail on the railroad track, and preceiving the peril in which the train would be placed, should it come dashing along without warning, sat out on the fence for five long hours in the bitter cold winter, in order that he might carry the first news of the incident to his father who is a local editor on a paper published in the neighboring town. Such fidelity in a child is deeply affecting.

George Hitchcock of New Preston Ct. is reported to have a pair of turkeys that he has refused $1,000 for. The Gobler stands 9 feet high in his bare feet. He has feathers two feet long, and his gobble can be heard six miles when the wind blows, in the right pirection.

Beyond the Mississippi.

Thousands have already gone, and thousands more are turning their eyes towards new homes in the fertile West. To those going to Missouri, Kansas, Colorado, Utah, Wyoming, Nevada, Oregon or California, we recommend a cheap, safe, quick and direct route, via St. Louis, over the Missouri Pacific Railroad, which runs its fine Day Coaches and Pullman Sleepers from St. Louis to principal points in the West, without change. We believe that the Missouri Pacific Railroad has the best track and the finest and safest equipment of any line west of the Missippi, and its connections with roads further West are prompt and reliable. The Texas connection of this road is now completed and passengers are offered a first-class, all-rail route from St. Louis to Texas, either over the Missouri, Kansas & Texas R. R. via Sedalia, or over the Atlantic & Pacific R. R. via Vinita. For maps time tables, information as to rates, &c., we refer our readers to S. H. Thompson, Eastern Passenger Agent, Columbus, Ohio, or E. A. Ford, General Passenger Agent, St. Louis, Mo. Questions will be cheerfully and promptly answered.

PINE TREE!

Tar Cordial,

NATURE'S GREAT REMEDY

FOR

Throat and Lungs.

It is gratifying to us to inform the public that Dr. L. Q. C. Wishart's Pine Tree Tar Cordial, for Throat and Lung diseases, has gained an enviable reputation from the Atlantic to the Pacific coast, and from thence to some of the first families of Europe, not through the press alone, but by persons throughout the States actually benefited and cured at his office. While he publishes less, so say our reporters, he is unable to supply the demand. It gains and holds its reputation.

First. Not by stopping cough, but by loosening and assisting nature to throw off the unhealthy matter collected about the throat and bronchial tubes, which causes irritation.

Second. It removes the cause of irritation of the mucous membrane and bronchial tubes, assists the lungs to act and throw off the unhealthy secretions, and purifies the blood.

Third. It is free from squills, lobelia, ipecac and opium, of which most throat and lung remedies are composed, which allay cough only, and disorganize the stomach. It has a soothing effect on the stomach, acts on the liver and kidneys, and lymphatic and nervous regions, thus reaching to every part of the system, and in its invigorating and purifying effects it has gained a reputation which it must hold above all others in the market.

It is no wonder that newspaper advertisements are popular with the people and are read by them. There is a frankness and independence about it that pleases, It Seems to say: "Read me or let me alone just as you like." It is for this reason perhaps that newspaper advertisements are preferred to hand-bills, which people think are forced upon them, or to signs and posters, which stare them out of all countenance.

The whole country now appreciates one of Mr. Greeley's dying utterances. "I insist upon it that the legislation of your country, National and State needs purification, and that the leading men in yur government should be called to justice.

THE RESCUE.

Nearer and nearer and nearer and near,
Hark how the horse's hoofs ring out
On the river-bottom, loud and clear.
He waves his sombrero and utters a shout,
His long black hair floats free in the wind,
His gray-hued serape is fallen behind.
Nearer and nearer.
He has reached the river, yet does not seem
To notice the ford
Above where 'tis broad;
But straight down the shelving bank into the stream
He urges his steed like a man in a dream.
Great God! The horse's head is under!
Not so, he swims—'twas the quicksand, 'tis past—
See his broad breast cleave the waves asunder.
He comes straight onward, he's over at last—
[illegible]

Poor mustang, panting and trembling and faint!
Not another rod to-night shall ye stir.

The dusky rider springs to ground,
And looks with questioning glance around.
"Americanos! Ah! Senors,
What hand so quick to save as yours!
Por amor de Dios! Mount and ride!
Los Comanches!"—The captain cried:—
"Stranger, enough, we know the rest,
God willing, we will do our best."

Hark to the bugle's roundelay!
Boot and saddle! Up and away!
Mount and ride as ye ne'er rode before,
Spur till your horses' flanks run gore,
Ride for the sake of human lives,
Ride as ye would were your sisters and wives
Cowering under their scalping knives.
Boot and saddle! Away, away!

Never did order
Come more welcome to us on the border;
Never more promptly did we obey.
Everything dropped in dread disorder,
Supper half-finished was left on the ground;
Each man sprang to his horse's side,
Cheerily the word went around,—
Rescue! Rescue! Mount and ride!
Death to the redskins far and wide!
Then quick we galloped off into the night,
"All saddled, all bridled, all fit for a fight."

The evening sun has sunk full soon,
Tinging the west with crimson and gold;
But over each man's left shoulder the moon,
—Evil omen
As e'er foretold
To other foemen
In days of old
Danger and death,—in majesty
Silently climbs the eastern sky.
The moon behind, the stars shining o'er us,
Shadows and darkness around;
But we only know straight before us
Are twenty miles of ground.
O God! To think of the terrible fate
Awaiting that home if we come too late.
To think twenty miles and two hours hence
May make such fearful difference.
Ah! Noble steeds, do all ye know—
That twenty miles we draw not rein,
But after that ye shall rest again.

Galloping, galloping, galloping on,
Four times thirty hoofs as one.
Galloping on at a fearful pace,
In terrible race.
One by one the miles go by,
Quickly the horses and moments fly.
"Stranger, are we almost there?"
The Mexican he shook his head—
"Ten miles further on,"—he said,
Then bowed his head in muttered prayer.
Ten miles more! Will they never pass?
On and on and on we go;
We brush the dew from the buffalo-grass,
We're in the Badlands now.
Still the miles are passing by,
Still the horses and moments fly,—
"Stranger, do we near the place?"
The Mexican nods in mute reply;
Then suddenly, with ghastly face,
Points to the western sky.
Aha! What means that lurid glow?
Surely the sun set long ago.
"Pause not for your lives,"—the captain said,—
"'Tis a house in flames, five miles ahead!"

God grant that rarely on human sight
There dawn such a scene as we saw that night!
Such horrible pictures no brush could produce,
Such terrible story no pen could tell,—
As if in an instant had been let loose
A thousand fiends of hell,
A bit of timber, a patch of green,
A house in a winding sheet of flame,
Smoke and fire and ghastly glare,
The shrieks of a poor wretch tortured there,
The cries of women bemoaning their fate,
The yells of the devils incarnate,
Playing their devil's game.
This is the story filling the air,
This the terrible scene.

A painted savage, with rapid stride,
Places himself by a captive's side;
A moment toys with her beautiful hair,
Then raises his hatchet high in air.
But the threatening weapon never fell.
Something stays their horrible mirth.
What thunder is that which shakes the earth?
'Tis a thunder the redskins know full well,
Full well they know they have cause to dread
The headlong charge of our cavalry.
See what a change in their revelry!
Scalps and captives are heeded not,
Plunder and pillage are all forgot,—
Now let the fiends escape who can,
We're down upon them horse and man.
We follow them far o'er the grassy plain,
We hunt them down amid the trees;
Ah, devils, well may you come to your knees.
Ye shall never slay women and children again!

But hark, the bugle! What does it say?
Methinks the notes were the Recall.
Never less promptly did we obey.
Why should we hold our hand to slay?
The captain spoke and shamed us all:—
"'Vengeance is Mine, I will repay.'
'Twas He that brought us here to-night
In time to save—the fight is won,
Vengeance is His, let him requite!
Our work is done."

MRS. APPLEBEE'S WEDDING.

At breakfast, one morning, Mrs. Applebee seemed low-spirited, and without her usual appetite.

"Sick?" asked Mr. Applebee, sententiously, between huge swallows of coffee.

"Not sick, scart, for I've had a warning, and we are going to have trouble, as sure as my name is Mehitabel Applebee. I dreamed of my picking dandelions and daises, last night, and eating cherries, and this is the dead of winter. You know the old saying, 'Dream of fruit or flowers out of season, you are sure of trouble without reason.' Then toward morning I dreamed of my eye teeth dropping out. When I was dressing, I looked out into the kitchen to see if you put on the teakettle, and I saw you laid out on the table as plain as I ever saw anything in my life."

"Nonsense!" interrupted her husband, whose digestion, evidently, was better than that of his spouse. "I never saw any sense in signs or dreams, and I think you'd better put in and eat a hearty breakfast, any way, for if I'm going to be laid out in earnest, a full stomach is best to take trouble on."

"Now, Sam, you oughter be ashamed, making light of solemn things. I'm afraid something will happen to you right off, and I do wish we had been more particular about going to meeting. I say, Sam, did you ever wish we had staid on the old place, and worked and saved, as the old folks did?"

"No; California is the only place in the whole world where folks can live easy, and I only wish I had come years before, when gold was plentier; we wouldn't have any care now; but I've got something ahead, and if your dream comes true you won't be bad off for a widder, and will stand a good chance to marry some other man that wants a home and don't like to work for it."

Mr. Applebee laughed heartily as he went out, and laughed several times during the day, when he recounted the whole, with various embellishments; but when there came, just at dark, a low, rumbling sound, then a faint tremor of the earth, followed by an earthquake, and in a few minutes after by another, he began to think there was danger of "ma's dream" coming true, and bethought himself of his long neglected prayers.

On his way home he was hailed by the Postmaster:

"I say, Applebee, there's a letter come for you with a black rim round it; guess somebody 'nuther is dead or something, in the States. I can't make out the mark."

Applebee read the letter.

"What's the news?" inquired the Postmaster, hungry for something sensational.

"Moses is dead, and he's gone and left his gal to my care, and all his property to be divided a'tween us, and there must all been nigh on to a hundred thousand; may be more, may be double! Wonder if I'm to have half. So Moses is dead! Well, what will the old woman say to the gal and the money? She'll think 'twas her dreams; 'spose that must have been Moses she see laid out; well, it better be him than me, for he was one of them kind o' men who went as straight as a string. Glad I gave the boy notice that we should quit working Sundays unless we get in a hurry."

Mrs. Applebee had not been surprised at the earthquake, and the letter with the news of Moses' death was a natural sequence to her dream. The money was their due. Moses had more help than Sam; "but the gal, if she took a notion to come out here, what in the world would they do with her?"

"The ugly business," as Mr. Applebee styled it, involved a trip to the East. "Couldn't have happened in a better time," he said; "business is slacker than I've known it for a long spell."

Mrs. Applebee sent him off with many admonitions about being careful of himself and not eat fruit at the Isthmus; and her parting injunction was: "Sam, you'd better not let on to home 'bout working on Sunday, and—well, you know, some other things; they wouldn't understand, and 'twould seem queer. Go to meetin' while you're there, and put silver in the contribution box every time 'tis passed, especially if 'tis for the heathen. I always felt a great interest in them, and, look here, don't you bring that gal back with you on no account, for I never had any faculty with children. Get her boarded somewhere reasonable, and where they'll keep her straight; 'twill be doing our duty in the easiest way, and that's what I believe in."

Moses' daughter proved to be a young lady with a mind of her own, and her uncle found her fully set upon going to California.

Mrs. Applebee imagined everything, worked herself thinner and more dyspeptic than ever. Her dreams grew ominous and the signs numberless, all indicative of stern trials and perplexities, so that it really was a relief when Mr. Applebee arrived with his charge.

There seemed to be weighty reasons why the Applebees should desire their niece to marry before she became of age, but, anxious as they felt, they dared not move in that direction, for she, with the most charming naivete, was sure to do the opposite from what was expected of her.

When she had been there a week or two, she announced that she had only met two persons who interested her in the least, except the Indians; she thought them vastly superior to the white people.

"Tell me something," said she, "of Mr. Brayton, who seems to be the nabob of the place. Is he rich as Crœsus and wise as Solomon, and are you all unanimous in conferring every honor in your gift upon him?"

"Ben Brayton is the richest man this side of the Sierra Nevada mountains, owns more stock in our mines than any other six men, is a graduate of some of the crack schools in the East, is big at law, and free-hearted as a prince besides——"

"Oh, don't tell me anything else; I shall never want to set eyes on him again. Now what can you say for that man with the long hair and buckskin suit, who looks like a hermit?"

"Oh, that is Pluck Armstrong, the queerest man living; some say he is a little bit cracked, but I don't believe it. He's been through everything but death, and come so near that that the grave had been dug three times, but he come to, and objected to the arrangement. The Injuns say he has a charmed life. There isn't an Injun that would hurt him. His long red curls are their greatest admiration, and his word is like an oracle to them."

The summer following was unusually dry and dusty, and Sybil declared she must be taken to Lake Tahoe.

Mr. Brayton urged a visit to the "Big Trees," and mentioned Yosemite, which was then just becoming accessible to ladies with courage enough, but Sybil preferred the lake, and she carried her point, as she always did. It was a merry party which set off, and Sybil was the life of it. She laughed and sang, gave glowing word pictures of the scenery, and carried them all captive with her fascinations. Even her aunt forgot to sneer, and Ben Brayton, who had been desperately smitten before, became hopelessly entangled then.

The first walk by the crystal lake brought to Sybil Applebee the story of a love.

Sybil listened like one in a dream. "Do you mean all you've said?" she asked.

Then came the ardent protestations which lovers make, only this man's wooing was something beyond the common, and his words flowed like the rythm of some improvised melody, rich, full and unique.

For a moment he seemed tempted to press his suit, then begged her pardon, and said her word was law to him. "Grant me one favor, however," said he, and he took from his pocket a tiny case of rare workmanship, and touching a spring revealed his own face, confident and youthful in its expression. "Wear this while you are here. It shall plead for me while I am compelled to be absent;" and he fastened it to her watch chain.

Sybil made a faint protest; but he told her she could not remove it—the clasp had a secret spring that would not yield to her touch.

Sybil strayed off alone, whenever she could make her escape from the others, and several days she was missing for hours together; she came back with her hands full of flowers and cornelians, besides many a quaint and curious stone that looked like bits of antique earthenware broken under foot.

Mr. Brayton complained that he wasn't allowed the privilege of escort and protector, and he only prayed for patience until the willful beauty should confer upon him the right to dictate instead of suggest. Sybil seemed to lose her spirits, and as the time grew near for them to leave, she grew pale and silent. Her aunt said "'twas all airs," but Mr. Applebee was really alarmed. Sybil petted him and snubbed him, according to her mood; and his heart, which had never known the joys of fatherhood, had gone out to the young girl with an unselfish love that went further toward redeeming him from his worldliness than he was aware of.

"Uncle, darling, will you do something for me? When I've been gone an hour, please give this note to Mr. Brayton, and do your best to keep the company from walking on the beach to-night."

The note was faithfully delivered on the moment, and the next, Mr. Brayton was walking rapidly down the worn footpath to the lake. Turning to the right, according to the directions, he soon came in sight of the grove, and in the dusky twilight he could discern the fluttering of Sybil's white dress.

He would have placed himself beside her, but she rose.

"Shall we walk? I'm a trifle cold sitting here."

As he folded her shawl around her he could hardly resist the temptation to fold her in his arms, but he was wise enough to bide his time.

"You should have been with me the other day, Mr. Brayton; you could have looked upon a picture far more interesting than me."

"I cannot conceive of anything lovelier or more picturesqe, but I should like to have been with you; that always gives me pleasure. Oh, Sybil, tell me."

"Have patience one moment; I want to describe it to you while I have it fresh in mind. You said once you'd 'rather have my word-picture than the real scene, for I caught at things you would have overlooked.'"

He touched the hand that rested on his arm, repeating the words which seemed such a delicate flattery to him.

"Under that tree were two figures, a boy with a basket of pebbles, which he was tossing right and left, giving a gay shout as they fell around him, and an Indian woman, who looked far too hopeless to be the mother of such a beautiful child. As I came up to her she snatched him, and would have run away, but I called to her, and offered the boy some bon-bons. As I stooped over him he caught at my watch chain, and I coaxed him to sit beside me, showing him the trinkets I wore, your little locket among the rest. The woman talked very good English, and I found the child belonged to her, and was three years old. But the time for you and the artist would have been when the case opened and disclosed your face. She caught a glimpse of it, and her dusky face grew ashen, while a terrible fire leaped from her eyes. With one wrench she tore it from the chain, then pressed it to her bosom, while she mourned and wailed like a lost spirit."

"He call her pale-face wife, and stay with her always. Poor squaw only have pappoose and no brave," she said, wrathfully.

"Pointing to the child, she held up your picture. Perhaps you would have chosen that scene for the canvas, when I learned the true character of the man who had offered me his love.

"Mr. Brayton, you have my answer; I have no fancy to make one in your harem, and the pretty bauble you intrusted to my care I left with one whose claim was stronger than mine. I do not wonder you showed such a dislike to ramblings in this vicinity, but I promised that poor creature to bring you here for once."

She had talked so rapidly her listener had no time to arrange his speech. It mattered little, for before them stood the woman, like a dark Nemesis, holding in her arm the boy. He was sleeping, and on his neck glittered the jeweled case, held fast by strings of gaudy beads.

Sybil turned and fled back through the beautiful grove, across the pebbly beach, and into the path which had become so familiar to her in the last few days.

Pluck Armstrong came to the breakfast table the next morning, and Ben Brayton was absent from it. The party returned without him, and only Sybil learned through Pluck that her plan had well nigh had a fatal termination.

When Ben Brayton came back to his home there was a long, mysterious story of peril and escape from Indians, and his face bore frightful evidence of some terrible assault, whereby his wondrous beauty was marred forever.

Sybil disappointed her aunt and astonished her friends by marrying Pluck Armstrong, and perhaps the noblest deed life will have possibly for her was the setting apart a portion of her property for the maintenance and education of a bright little boy, whose mother rests in her grave, and whose father is reckoned honorable among men.

Then time and its changes brought Mrs. Applebee a widow, without money, and prostrated by physical suffering, to Sybil's home for comfort and support.

The Officious Man.—The officious man stands around rubbing his hands anxious for a job.

He seems tew ake for sumthing tew do, and if he gits snubbed in one place, it don't seem tew diskourage him, but, like the fly, he lights on another.

The officious man iz az free from malice as a young pup, who, if he kant do anything else, iz reddy tew lay down in front of yu and be stept on.

Theze kind ov men spend their whole lives trieing tew make friends ov all, and never succeed with any.

There iz a kind ov officious man, who iz only prompted bi hiz vanity, hiz anxiety tew be useful tew others, don't arise from enny goodness ov heart, but simply from a desire of striking hiz noze into things.

Theze kind ov individuals are supremely disgusting.

The officious man iz generally ov no use whatever to himself, and a nusance tew everybody else.

I don't kno ov but phew more unfortunate disposishuns than the officious man's, for even in it's very best phase, it seldom suckseeds in getting paid for its labors with common politeness.—Josh Billings.

A House in California One Thousand Years Old.

The loftiest house, and the most perfect in the matter of architecture I have ever seen, was that which a wood-chopper occupied with his family one winter in the forests of Santa Cruz county. It was the cavity of a redwood tree, 240 feet in height. Fire had eaten away the trunk at the base, until a circular room had been formed, 16 feet in diameter. At 20 feet or more from the ground was a knot-hole, which afforded egress for the smoke. With hammocks hung from pegs, that house lacked no essential thing. This woodman was in possession of a house which had been 1,000 years in process of building. Perhaps on the very day it was finished he came along and entered in. How did all jack-knife and hand-saw architecture sink into insignificance in contrast with this house in the solitudes of the great forest! Moreover, the tenant fared like a prince. Within 30 yards of his coniferous house a mountain stream went rushing past to the sea. In the swirls and eddies under the shelving rocks, if one could not land half a dozen trouts within an hour, he deserved to go hungry as a penalty for his awkwardness. Now and then a deer came out into the openings, and, at no great distance, quails, rabbits and pigeons could be found. What did this man want more than nature furnished him? He had a house with a "cupola" 240 feet high, and game at the cost of taking it. This Arcadian simplicity would have made a lasting impression, but for a volunteer remark, that nothing could be added to give to life a more perfect zest. "Well, yes," said he. "I reckon, if you are going back to town, you might tell Jim to send me up a gallon of whisky and some plug tobacco." It will not do to invest a hollow tree with too much of sentiment and poetry. If that message had not been suggested, we should have been under the delusion to this day that the lives of these people dwelling in a house fashioned 1,000 years ago, were rounded in a perfect fullness, without one artificial want.—Overland Monthly for March.

The Railways and the People.

To deny that the excitement on the railway question in Illinois is intense would be to ignore facts. A distinguished citizen, familiar for twenty years with the habits of thought of the people of the State, said: "I never saw the people so wrought up before in my life." At the point when the railway monopolists began to tighten their grip upon the industries of the country and make themselves felt as an oppression the war of rebellion broke out. The peril of liberty distracted the attention of the people from the peril of property interests. But while the farmers and mechanics shouldered their muskets and went to the front to crush out the rebellion, the railway companies continued to seek and obtain grants of special privileges, to build new lines, water stocks, charge exorbitant rates for transportation, and to rivet the chains of their corporate despotism more firmly upon the people. In 1861, when the war commenced, Illinois had but 2,867 miles of railway. During the period of tumult and war and of the scarcely less exciting period of reconstruction, the companies added 5,000 miles to the system—more than duplicating pre-existing lines, and fastening their power more firmly upon the necks of the people. It was not until 1870 that the people began to wake up to a realizing sense of the hugeness and completeness of the tyranny established over them. It now turns out that the 4,000 new miles of railway were built, not to accommodate them, but to oppress them and absorb their substance. The American people are "long suffering and slow to anger," but when once aroused no power can successfully antagonize them. They have determined to throw off the incubus of the system of abuses and extortions which have become synonymous with railway management. In Illinois they have determined upon the mode of its accomplishment; and neither courts, nor legislatures, nor governors, can defeat their solemnly-formed purpose any more than a civil engineer can dam Niagara.—Inter-Ocean.

Johnny Clem.

The Washington Star says:

Among the many notable persons at the inauguration of Presieent Grant was John L. Clem, of the Twenty-fourth United States Infantry, who came here a few days since from his regiment at Fort Brown, Texas, in order to place in the National Asylum an invalid soldier. Lieut. Clem has a national reputation, and is written down in "Frank Moore's Rebellion Record," and in "Lossing's History of the Civil Conflict in America," as "Little Johnny Clem, the Drummer Boy of Chickamauga," at which battle he laid aside his drum and assumed the musket during the entire day. During the retirement of the Union army from the field he then performed a guerre de mort upon a colonel of a Texan regiment, who had ridden up with a drawn sword demanding his surrender, by suddenly swinging up his musket from an order arms and emptying the saddle of his assailant. This daring act of one so young sent his name flying through the country. He afterward had his little horse killed under him, and was wounded in the shoulder at the same time, at Atlanta, while delivering a dispatch from Maj. Gen. Thomas to Gen. Logan. He entered the army in May, 1861, before he was ten years of age, as a drummer boy, and served with distinction to the end of the war, during which time he was present at Shiloh, and at nearly every other battle in which the Army of the Cumberland was engaged. He is the youngest officer ever commissioned in the United States army, and Lossing's History speaks of him as the youngest person, of whom we have any account, that ever bore arms in battle, either in this country or in Europe; and his military record is a matter of history upon the records of the War Department. Considering his years, he is without a peer, either in the Old World or the New.

Railroads, Eggs and Farmers' Daughters.

We hope our farmers will wage the fight on railroad and other monopolies without flinching. Yet there may be danger of their getting a little one-sided in the matter. If farming is unprofitable, or rather not so profitable as it ought to be, it is perhaps not quite fair to throw the whole blame on railroads. We pay in Le Mars 35 cents for a quart of canned corn. It is raised in Iowa at 15 cents a bushel, sent to Baltimore, prepared there, shipped back and sold as above. Are the monopolies to blame that our own farmers do not prepare the article to get the big price for it? We pay to 25 cents a pound for cheese manufactured in New York. Are the railroads to blame that our farmers do not supply us with article? We in town have to pay more for a dozen eggs than for a bushel of corn, and yet a bushel of corn will yield five dozen of eggs. Are railroads to blame that farmers do not convert cheap corn into dear eggs? Our butchers import from great distances sheep for mutton, which they sell at high prices. What monopolies prevent our farmers from raising sheep? Sheep yield wool as well as mutton, and what is to hinder farmers' daughters from carding and spinning wool enough to make all the socks, stockings, and mittens required at home? Surely not the railroads. And so we might go on, but do not think it necessary. Let there be no slacking up in the railroad war, but at the same time our farmers might do well to consider the hints we have thrown out.—Le Mars (Iowa) Sentinel.

Slang Talk by Young Ladies.

Young ladies have but little idea of the impoliteness and bad effect of the slang phrases often used in so-called polite society. An exchange says, in a word of advice to any who are partially or wholly addicted to it:

"You can have no idea how it sounds to ears unused or averse to it to hear a young lady say, when she is asked if she will go with you to some place, 'Not much!' or, if requested to do something which she does not wish, to hear her say, 'Can't see it.'

"Not long ago I heard a young miss, who is educated and accomplished, in speaking of a young man, say that she intended to 'go for him!' And, when her sister asked her assistance at some work, she answered, 'Not for Joe!'

"Now, young ladies of unexceptional character and really good education fall into this habit, thinking it shows smartness to answer back in slang phrases; and they soon slip flippantly from their tongues, with a saucy pertness that is neither ladylike nor becoming. 'I bet' or 'you bet' is well enough among men who are trading horses or land; but the contrast is startling and positively shocking to hear those words issue from the lips of a young lady. They seem at once to surround her with the rougher associations of men's daily life, and bring her down from the pedestal of purity to their own coarse level."

Iowa Corn-Raising.

A farmer of Fayette county, Iowa, gives the following rules for raising corn:

I am often asked by my neighbors how it is that I always raise such good corn, with so little labor. If you deem the inclosed items worthy of publication, I think it will be a satisfactory answer.

This is my plan: Do not plow your ground until you are ready to plant, being careful not to cut and cover. Mark out your ground as soon as plowed, first with a shovel plow, then crosswise with a marker, and plant your corn as soon as marked out, in order to get the corn in moist earth, putting not less than three nor more than four kernels in a hill. When about half the corn is up, go into it with cultivator; cultivate it both ways, being careful not to fill up the furrows. The third time take your double-shovel plow and run so close that it will throw the dirt to the corn, covering up all the weeds and grass; thereafter you will have but little trouble in keeping your corn free from weeds or grass. Adopt this plan, and I warrant you a good crop of corn, let the season be wet or dry.

Lying in State.

Apropos of Napoleon's body lying in state an English antiquary writes:

"In the year 1433 the body of Edward IV. was exposed, bare from the waist up, to show that had not died by foul means, in the Palace at Westminster, and was visited by the Mayor of London and many other persons. The body of Henry VII. lay in state at Richmond, as did that of Queen Elizabeth; but wax effigies in armor represented James I. and Oliver Cromwell, and we doubt whether the body of any English sovereign has been exposed since the death of Charles II."

The last time that Thurlow Weed set type was on November 8, 1854, while he was editing the Albany Evening Journal. The paper was kept back from the press until the result of the gubernatorial election, just closed, could be ascertained. While the employes were waiting he hastened into the office, and seizing a stick, set up the announcement which informed the public of a Whig victory. It was confined to ten words, as follows: "The eagle screams! Myron H. Clark is the next Governor." The expression "the eagle screams" had great significance among Albany politicians twenty years ago. Previous to this performance Mr. Weed had not set type for thirty years, or since the days when he and the late ex-Mayor James Harper were fellow apprentices in Henshaw's shop in New York city.

Farm Fuel.—Mr. Henry Eicke, our well-known ex-County Commissioner, has solved the fuel problem in a manner which appears to be both pleasant and profitable. There is no wood on his farm, and he does not burn coal; yet of eight cords of wood, which he bought in 1870, two are still left. He raises about 5,000 bushels of corn each year, shells the corn so as to feed it to stock more profitably, and burns the cobs. In this way he has supplied two stoves in his own house, and one for his neighbor, without difficulty. Cobs make a clean, bright, and hot fire, and all kinds of stock thrive better, and are kept much more economically when the corn that is fed them is first shelled. Much wastage is saved also.—Omaha Herald.

I THINK YOU OUGHT TO BE THANKFUL.

BY W. M. CARLETON.

What 're ye doin' a-wife, a-kneelin' a-here at m' bed?
Is it a-you that is dyin', or is it a-me?—a-say?
Let ye alone my soul, an' wait on m' body instead;
An' when ye can't talk to me, there's time an' a plenty to pray!

Hang it, can't ye quit weepin', an' do as I ask ye to do?
I think you ought to be thankful you've ever had m' at all!
'Should think you could do your cryin' when other duties is through;
An' when my groans is ended, there's time an' a plenty to bawl!

Yis'rday af'rnoon the lawyer made m' will;
Yes'rday af'rnoon he made my prop'rty fly?
Hard to see it go, a-lyin' here so still;
Dollars to this 'un an' that 'un, and never a penny to I!

Thousan' dollars apiece unto m' chil'ren three,
An' none of them a-near me, but hun'r'ds o'miles away?
I think they ought to be thankful—(they never done aught f'r me);"
But I was al'ays gen'rous, clean up t' m' dyin' day.

Thousan' dollars to Mary, my han'som cousin does fall;
An' five hun'r'd dollars f'r you in case the condition suits,
Which is, if ye marry ag'in, then Mary has it all;
For no other man's a goin' to wear my Sunday boots.

Fifteen hun'r'd dollars t'buy me a monument high!
An' I think you ought to be thankful that I this money gave,
So's ye needn't feel humbled, though folks is a-standin' nigh,
When you go out each evenin' to weep at your husban's grave.

An' out o' your generous portion I hope you'll a little spare,
An' give me a decent burial—one that's worthy of me;
I want no one-horse funeral, but one 't 'll make 'em stare;
For maybe the Lord 'll fix it so I can be there to see.

An' now good-bye, good wife! I soon 'll be movin' on!
An' I s'pose you won't be tryin' to live very long, my love;
For life is not but a burden when them we love are gone,
An' maybe I may want you to wait on me up above.

A man whom Dr. Chalmers engaged to manage a disorderly Sunday school kept his eyes open during praying, and when one boy thrust a pin into another he marched up the aisle, still praying, and cuffed that boy's ears, and went back again, still praying. I lost several good chances before I caught your fond dear grandfather, by putting on airs, but I learnt how to do it after a while."

Whittier a Little Confused.

The New York correspondent of the Chicago Tribune says:

An amusing story is told of the poet Whittier, who is as modest as he is gifted. He was in the city not long since, and went to hear the Rev. E. H. Chapin speak a lecture somewhere up town. The clergyman was eloquent as usual; his discourse, interlarded with highly-wrought passages of rhetoric, closing with a stirring poetical quotation, so well delivered that the Quaker bard applauded with the rest.

Some one sitting near him inquired, "Do you know, Mr. Whittier, who is the author of that extract?"

"No, I do not. It sounds familiar, and I like the sentiment."

"Why, the lines are yours, Mr. Whittier. You must remember them. They are from your famous anti-slavery odes."

"So they are," said Whittier, after a little reflection, and blushing like a school-girl caught reading her first love-letter. "I really did not recall them. Indeed, they sounded so much better than they ever sounded before that it is not strange that I failed to recognize them."

The poet, thoroughly sincere, did not recover for some time from the embarrassment of outwardly disclaiming his own composition; but has now come to regard it as so good a joke that he tells it himself.

Andrew Jackson was once making a stump speech in a country village out West. Just as he was concluding, Amos Kendall, who sat beside him, whispered, "Tip 'em a little Latin, General; they won't be satisfied without it." The "Hero of New Orleans" instantly thought of a few phrases he knew, and, in a voice of thunder, wound up his speech by exclaiming: "E pluribus unum. Sine qua non. Ne plus ultra. Multum in parvo." The effect was tremendous, and the shouts could be heard for miles.

A Cannibal in Ireland.

An Enniskillen (Ireland) correspondent of a New York paper says: A horrible scene of cannibalism was enacted in Tralee a few days ago. The principal actor in it was a pig-jobber who had long been completely absorbed in the gratification of animal desires and passions. This two-footed brute came home drunk to his poor old mother, who has passed the allotted "three-score years and ten," and the old creature remonstrated with him. A row ensued, in which the mother was knocked down on the floor, and by sheer force one of her legs was broken in two places. This not satisfying him, he commenced to eat the flesh off her arm. A watchman named Mara, who was passing at the time, was attracted by the woman's screams to the house, and on Mara forcing open the door he saw him actually eating the flesh, as if he had a taste for it. The watchman not being able to rescue the poor creature from his savage gluttony, he went off for another watchman, and, on their returning to the house, he was at the same inhuman feast, and his face and breast were all smeared with blood. Word was sent to the police, and the night-patrol, on coming to the house, secured him. The coolness of the ruffian was extraordinary, for he had the audacity to prefer a charge of assault against Mara for attempting to make him desist when he first entered and saw the horrible repast he was indulging in. The poor woman was conveyed to the County Infirmary and placed under the care of Dr. Lawlor, where, on examination, her body was found to be frightfully lacerated; the bone of one arm up to the elbow was quite bare of flesh, and the sinews of the other were quite exposed. It is thought she can hardly survive the treatment of her cruel son. Her depositions were, of course, taken, and the prisoner, who had been in the Bridewell, was transferred to the county-jail for trial at the Assizes.

The Irish University Bill.

The bill introduced into the British Parliament by Mr. Premier Gladstone, and the defeat of which has resulted in the dissolution of the Ministry, is a scheme for the establishment of an Irish University upon a plan intended to meet the approbation of both Protestants and Catholics. Briefly stated, it is a proposition for merging the Catholic and Protestant Colleges of Ireland in a University to be liberally endowed, so that like the colleges of Oxford or Cambridge they shall constitute one University, and like them be subject to the control of one central governing body. But, unlike the Universities of Oxford and Cambridge, the new Irish University is professedly to be non-sectarian in its character. This feature of the institution might readily be accepted as a sensible compromise if the provisions of the bill were certain to insure such a result, but here is where the trouble arises. The Catholics, many of them, see in the bill only a trap for bringing Catholic institutions under Protestant supervision and control, while on the other hand some of the Protestant organs have demonstrated to their own satisfaction that if the measure is carried the Catholics will soon have entire sway in the University.

The President Interviewed.

A New York Herald reporter recently interviewed President Grant, who is reported as saying that no changes are to take place in the Cabinet beyond that which Secretary Boutwell's resignation will occasion. Nevertheless, the financial policy of the Administration will not be changed.

THE POISONMONGERS who advertise compounds of Fluid Fire and pungent alkalies as "balsamic medicines," "safe and harmless tonics," and "genial invigorants," are worthy of being classed with the old Barnegat wreckers who kindled deceptive beacons, in order to decoy mariners to inevitable death. But a time came when the lures of the coast bandits failed, and a time has come when the venders of Bittered Alcohol fail to impress the reading public with a belief in their fictions.

It is due to that conscientious and able physician, Dr. Joseph Walker, of California, to say that he has largely contributed to this desirable end, by providing the world with a Tonic Corrective and Anti-Febrile Vegetable preparation, which accomplishes all that is mendaciously promised on behalf of the alcoholic nostrums. His CALIFORNIA VINEGAR BITTERS, prepared from botanic productions, now for the first time employed in the pharmacy of civilization, is the leading tonic in every State and Territory of the Union. The fact that this wonderful elixir contains no alcohol, no mineral, no dangerous element, is one of the causes of its immense popularity; another is that as a stomachic invigorant, blood-purifier, alterative, anti-spasmodic and anti-bilious medicine, it is as far ahead of every other preparation as Temperance is ahead of Drunkenness.—[Com.

MEN'S FACES.—There is no mistaking the tale a man's face tells to the student of nature. His life comes out as plain as if it was small-pox. Is the human animal vicious; does he drink; has he any intemperance or demoralizing habits; is he avaricious—it all appears in the plainest colors upon his face, just as unmistakably as his eyes, nose and ears. Alas! how few good, pure, beautiful, temperate faces do we see to-day. The male man, like the male of the other animals, should be the noblest and handsomest in form and feature, and in a few generations he would be if he lived as nature intended he should live. Give us the man with a good face, a fine, honest face, and he can be trusted with this world and the next. Let the reader turn to his mirror and study his own face.

The Atmosphere of Spring.

With every change of season we have a change in the hygienic character of the air. In the spring it is impregnated, especially in low-lying, wet districts, with mephitic vapors, which generate chills and fever, rheumatism, indigestion, biliousness and diseases of the organs of respiration. It is, therefore, particularly necessary, at this time of the year, to invigorate and regulate the system so as to enable it to repel the morbid influences to which it is more or less subjected. The stomach should be toned, the bowels freed from obstructions, the blood purified, and the nerves braced and strengthened. This can be easily done. Hostetter's Stomach Bitters are everywhere procurable; and in the whole range of remedies and preventives prescribed by the faculty, or recommended through the press, there is not one that combines, in such an eminent degree, great efficiency and perfect harmlessness. It is a positive antidote to malaria. Whoever takes it habitually may breathe the atmosphere of the worst fever and ague locality without danger. Damp and chilling winds make little or no impression on the organization reinforced with this powerful vegetable invigorant, and consequently it is a good safeguard against asthma, coughs, colds, and other pulmonary complaints. It is not recommended as a remedy for this latter class of maladies, but simply as a means of strengthening the system against the aerial conditions and changes which so often produce them. As a spring invigorant and alterative, it will be found extremely beneficial to persons who are peculiarly sensitive to unhealthy atmospheric influences.

LUNG COMPLAINTS, BRONCHITIS, ASTHMA, &c., are speedily relieved, and, if taken in time, permanently cured by Dr. Jayne's Expectorant. You will find it also a certain remedy for Coughs and Colds.

Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy effects cures upon scientific principles, by its mild, healing properties, to which the disease gradually yields, when the system has been put in perfect order with Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, which should be taken earnestly, to correct the blood and system, which are always at fault, also to act specifically, as it does, upon the diseased glands and lining membrane of the nose and its communicating chambers. The Catarrh Remedy should be applied with Dr. Pierce's Nasal Douche, as this is the only form of instrument yet invented with which fluid medicine can be carried high up and perfectly applied to all parts of the affected nasal passages and chambers in which sores and ulcers exist, and from which the discharge generally proceeds.
So successful has the above course of treatment proven, that the proprietor offers $500 Reward for a case of "Cold in Head" Ozena or Catarrh which he cannot cure. The two medicines with instrument, for $2, by all druggists.

The Auburn Courier

Thursday, March 27th, 1873

Morton's name is gradually shoved to the front by his friends for the Radical succession to the Presidency, in 1876, How nicely he behaved at the downfall of Colfax, and how nicely he fell.

The most remarkable suicide of the time, is that of T. F. Andersen, cashier to Lamberton's bank, Franklin County Pa. He gathered and placed in the fire bank notes bonds, and bank papers to a large amount and then ran home and shot himself.

An eminent financier says: Thirty millions of dollars is what our rascally tariffs charges upon Railroad iron and steel, for the benefit of a few iron manufacturers, and which the owners of the iron house pay annually inte the pockets of said manufacturers. Let our farmers who complain of dear transportation remember this. It is the tariff they must get after if they would have relief.

The extra session of the Senate, called by proclamation of the President, has been thus far barren of results, with the exceptions of confirming the late appointments of postmasters and others, whose appointments comes through those channels. The matter of expelling Senator Caldwell has been the great theme of discussion, but it is not yet decided whether he is good enough to assist in carrying out the "civil service reform," or whether he isn't.

Perhaps you will be able to recall the name of Jason M. Brown. Jason was a member of the Indiana State Senate. Last fall after Mr. Greeley was nominated, Jason's democracy struck in on him. He took the stump against him, and for some time was the lieutenant of Blanton Duncan. Now note the career of this eminent "straignout." President Grant sent to the Senate for conformation, as Secretary of Wyoming Territory, the name of Jason M. Brown of Indiana. The laborer is worthy of his hire, Let the apostate be banished to the wilds of Wyoming.

The concience-smitten members, and ex-members of congress who took money under the salary bill which was not nominated in the bond when they were elected—and the conecience-smitten ones are amazingly (?) few—are donating their ill gotten gains to a variety of subjects. Hoar of Massachusetts, gave his to an educational institution, in his district. Some have emptied the dollars that burn them so into the Treasury of the United States. Ex-Senator Corbett, has donated his, or the people's $250 to the Washington Monument Association. All this is generous, but this was the peoples money, and what if the people didn't wish to donate their meney to those kind of objects.

It is refreshing to know that lovely women reads the papers and is imbued with the spirit of the times: One of them recently entered a Cleveland street car with a poodle.—Seeing this, the mild-mannered man the conductor said in his quietest accents that dogs were not allowed in the car, and that he must put hers out. Whereupon lovely woman softly arose, drew a revolver and pointing it at him with a sort of "shoot him on the spot' expression, she warbled forth: "If this car does not go on, I will make you rub your nose on the floor," and the conductor went out hastily, and the passengers ditto, and the car went on, and so did lovely woman, likewise the poodle,

The President has reappointed all the members of his Cabinet, except Mr. Boutwell, who has been appointed to the Senate. For the Treasury he has appointed William A. Richardson of Massachusetts, who has been assistant Secretary for several years, under Mr. Boutwell. The complete Cabinet is composed of Hamilton Fish, Secretary of State.

William A. Belknap, Secretary of War.

George E. Robeson, secretary of the Navy.

Columbus Delany, Secretary of the Interior.

William A. Richardson, Secretary of the Treasury.

John A. J. Creswell, Postmaster General.

George H. Williams, Attorney General.

John G. Whetler, New England's favorite poet, one of the pioneers of anti Slavery, makes this remarkable admission, concerning the corruption of the Administration, in a recent letter, concerning Sumner's opposition to the present Administration.

He felt the atmosphere about him thick and foul with bribers and corruption, and greed. He saw the Treasury ringed about like Saturn, with unscrupulous combinations, and cooperation, and it is to be regretted more than wondered at, if he struck out wildly in his indignation, and that his blows fell sometimes on the wrong object

The following is given by the Louisville Medical College, as a good treatment for that dreaded disease cebre spinal menengitis, or spotted fever.

Put ice to the head and along the spine, while the fever lasts; pounded ice eaten or swallowed so as to melt in the stomach; opium in the beginning of the disease, and promide of potash after the fever abates; concentrated nutritious liquid diet, a well ventilated room comfortably warm, are the principal elements of treatment. It is connected with badly drained habitations, damp and badly ventilated lodgings.—These are the homes and sources of the disease. They were made abundently evident as such in the terrible outbreak of the disease in New York in 1872.

The Salary Grab.

The Radical press have but one justification of the salary grab, and that is that some of the Democrats voted for it. But the country will hardly take this view. The Radical party has a large majority in Congress, and through that majority they are enabled to pass or defeat any kind of a bill that is proposed. That party is responsible for the legislation of congress, and must take the responsibility whether it will or not. The bill to increase the salaries, originated with a leading Radical politician, Benjanin F. Butler and through his exertions, mainly, the bill became a law. It is true that the greedy members find no endorsement of their characters, and so far as Butler is concerned, he is probably indifferent whether the country like it or not. He was after the money, and pockets it with as little compunction as he would a well earned fee.

The measure is a fitting ligislative climax to the extortion and corruption that has so disgraced congress for the last few years, and for shameless disregard for the interests of the people, has no parallel in the history of that body. The Radical party must take the responsibility as well as the odium attached to this law, and the people will accept of it as another evidence of the utter disregard of that party of their interests, as well as of the demoralizing effect of the general corruption in Washington.

What an Opportunity he Lost!

Suppose that on the morning of Tuesday March, 4, when the bill increasing the salaries was hanbed to President Grant he had, instead of signing it, sent it back to the House, with such a message as the following.

"I return herewith a bill providing for the increase of salaries without my signature, which I withheld for the following reason.

1. This bill gives me $50,600 for the next four years without regard to the fact that when I accepted the nomination and election I contracted with the people to preform the duties of my office for $25,000 a year. It would be dishonest in me to draw any more by virtue of a bill passed as this one has been, and I refuse the proffer accordingly. Besides, apart from this consideration, the question for increasing the salary of President, was not discussed by the people in the recent election and I do not think that a measure of so serious nature respecting the compensation of their public servants should be passed until they have had an opportunity to express their judgement upon it.

2. I also disapprove of this bill because it increases the salaries of members of Congress, for a period of service all ready performed and paid for. This appears to me to be a more flagrant invasion of popular rights, and common honesty, even than that clause in the bill which doubles the President's Salary"

Suppose President Grant had posessed honor and intelligence enough to send in such a message as this. What a great man he would be in the estimation of the people and what a great man he would be in reality.

This Tuesday it looks as if another winter was determined to squall in the lap of Spring.

Another hop will be given at the Lent House, Waterloo, April 1st, 1873. Let some of our boys attend.

The Sedan Hotel will change hands this week Everything was pack up last Sunday—grabe with the rest.

We have already received twelve "Odes to Spring," all claiming to be original and some of them are decidedly so.

The gentle fly will soon put in an appearance, but the Hoosier Fly Catcher is ready for him.

Strangers are daily seeking homes in our town. We should extend cordial greeting.

We saw a man at each end of a colt in front of Beard's, trying to hitch him to a post. They did'nt make it.

The streets, owing to the combined influences of wind and travel, are getting into respectable condition again.

Several of our citizens were at Sedan, last Friday, attending the concert given by Prof. Bennett. They report it good.

The pioneer drug store is receiving drugs, medicines and toilet articles daily, and all wanting goods in this line will go to this popular establishment.

Horse Bills.—Having different cuts we are prepared to do horse bills in a tasty manner. We also execute life-like cartoons of jackasses, with appropriate explanations.

The Rev. A. Cone and lady, of Auburn, Ind., formerly Pastor of the M. E. church of this place, was in town yesterday, look ing as hale and hearty as could be.—Angola Times.

A man in this place wants a remedy for keeping his boy in nights. Well, Mr., drive a spike through his abdomen into the wall, and if this won't do make him wear patched clothes.

It is an accomplished fact, that by toning and stimulating the nerve structure with an occasional dose of Smolander's Buchu, you invigorate the entire nervous system, remove or counteract kidney, bladder and glandular diseases, female weakness and uterine complaints. It is without doubt the best, safest and surest diuretic alterative and solvent yet discovered.

A couple was married in a saloon at Fort Wayne last week. The justice was treated to a ten cent cigar.

F. D. Ryan, Esq., is preparing for a large trade in the spring. He intends to get new buggies, horses, &c., and every body will find Frank agreeable and pleasant, and always willing to do what is right in his line of business.

We peeped into the old stand of Philip Morell, the other day and found it empty but a few doors south of the railroad we found him established in nice quarters and ready to attend to all calls in the boot and shoe line.

The most original spelling we have yet seen is the following. It beats phonetics. 80 you be—a tub. 80 oh ! pea—a top. Be 80—bat. See 80—cat Pea 80 pat. Are 80—rat. See oh ! double-you—cow See you be—cub. Be you double-tea—butt. See a double all—call.

Our pleasing friend, Captain Rurade of the firm of Root & Co., was in town last week, attending a sale of chattles of one Chas. Brandt who started a country store at Summit, sometime ago purchasing his dry goods stock at the above popular establishment. Brandt was not a success, as his creditors have since learn.

A lady of literary turn writes to know if she can pay for her paper by writing poetry. Well, by jove, we hardly know what to say. The editor is away from home, and we don't like that sort of contracting. However, we'll allow three cents a ton for manuscript poetry, and run the risk. For our part we're in favor of "home talent"

E. V. Long, of this city, has received the appointment of Circuit Judge, for the new District composed of the counties of Kosciusky, Marshall and Fulton. As we said last week—if it is to be a Democrat we are satisfied, because Van is a good lawyer, and perfectly competent to fill the position.—Indianian.

The Club Dance, last Friday evening, was a grand affair. This being the first hop the room was not in a proper condition, but on next Tuesday evening it will be all arranged, and another good time will be had. "They say" the best dancers last Friday were, Miss Annie Rainier, of this place, and Miss Mary Eminger, of LaGrange. Let there be a good turn out next Tuesday evening.

The Press says that Mr. John Camp, who lives near North Benton, became involved in a quarrel with one of his boys. Coming to blows, another boy took sides with his brother, and they beat and kicked the old man in a fearful manner. Succeeding in getting away from them, he made his way to a neighbor's house, where he remained in a critical condition. The boys are grown up, and remain in possession of the field.

Prof. Hansley, perhaps one of the most accomplished frauds now on the road, writes us an extensive letter. It is not about how he attempted to dead beat this town but much more interesting. He proposes to give himself away as a present and writes to know what thing he should represent, of a useful character.—We don't know of anything he looks more like than that unmentionable article used in chambers. Try it Professor and see if it don't take the house down.

The Dramatic association of Waterloo, will give an entertainment next Friday evening, at the old School Hall, in that place. It will be profitable for our friends generally to be in attendance.

The methodists at Barker's Chaple are having a revival, and twenty-three accessions have been made. Rev. Mr. Baker of Waterloo, was the officiating minister.

We don't believe in signs, but when we see a good-looking girl and a big bashful boy sitting off in one corner alone, at a public entertainment, we generally make up our minds that something is brewing.

At the Old Folks' Hop we heard of a young man who engaged his lady a week or so before-hand, but the evening he went after her she met him in a pleasant manner and politely informed him she would rather (have) Knott. And since the Club Dance we hear a great big rooster complaining, but he blames it to her mother, because he says when he left her, the other evening she was as pleasant as a basket of chips. We expect to see several of our back streets with the chips all cleaned off before next Tuesday.

Shirts.—Doubtless many of our readers have read Shakespear's beautiful lines called the "song of the shirt." We don't know much about the poem as the above would indicate, but if you want to hear the song, stop in at Moderwell & Fowler's Calhoun street corner of Berry, Ft Wayne and listen to the busy hum of a score of workers, all engaged in making shirts, to meet the great demand made upon them by the public. Now, the public won't patronize much unless its a good thing.—This has been proven beyond doubt that this firm keek the best stock of everything from a paper collar down to a pair of socks, in the gents furnishing line, and get you out a cheaper and better fitting pair of shirts than can be obtained elsewhere. Try them and see.

Davenport is doing the largest cigar trade in town. When you want a good smoke go there.

THE LATEST RAILROAD DODGE

An Attempt to Sell Out the Eel River Road.

The Stockholders Expect to Ratify.

The latest news in railroad matters is the attempt made last week to consolidate the Eel River and Hillsdale Roads with the Fort Wayne, Jackson & Saginaw At a meeting of the Board of Directors of each line, articles were entered into for the object, and the knowing ones are at work to consumate this great achievment We cannot but characterise the whole thing as a stupendous fraud upon the stockholders of the Eel River road. The moment this arrangement is ratified by the stockholders the stock of the Eel River road is virtually wiped out, as far as its marketable value is concerned.—The Saginaw road, being the stronger, will absorb the lesser ones, and those holding stock in the latter may whistle for any return on their investments. In fact it is not denied by the friends of this consolidation that such will be the case. At a time when the Eel River had a fair prospect of realising her long cherished hopes of the final completion of the line east she is asked to attach herself to another, corporation, that will ignore the fact of her existance in a commercial sense.

Are the stockholders ready for this bargain and sale? and are they ready to sacrifice all that has been done in the past. to feed the morbid taste of a few speculating officials, who have done nothing for its present success. To the Board of Directors it has not been a matter of choice They have doubtless discharged their duties faithfully under the circumstances.—We know that President Collins has worked hard and staked more on its success than any other man, and while he is acting consciencioualy and squarly in this movement, we believe that the force of circumstances has had more to do with it than actual mature deliberation.

We are confident that, through the recent developments, the road can be built eastward. It has been argued heretofore by those who should have subscribed that the road would be built in any event and they have not been as liberal in their subscriptions as they would have been, under the assurance that they must raise the amount asked for or loose the road.—But since this consolidation has been talked of they have come to their senses, and are now anxious and willing to do all in their power toward its completion.

Let another effort be made and there is no fear but that it will meet with entire success. There is no necessity for abandoning the project when the prospect of completion is brighter to-day than ever. We believe the stockholders are in favor of the entire completion of the line. A splendid result can now be achieved along the whole line. Let the effort be made and the friends who have stood by its fate for years, will yet see the grand consummation so devoutly wished for, the completion of the road on the original line projected some twenty years ago

This is good weather for hauling sawlogs.

We find in our copy box this morning some resolutions, showing respect to one Irwin. They are too late for this issue.

Oh! the beautiful snow. This morning (Wednesday) at three o'clock the snow fell faster than at any other time this winter. We wasn't there to see, but the hired-girl told us.

Milton B. Hopkins, Superintendent of Public Instruction, has advised Rev. A. J. Douglas, School Examiner of this County that an act passed the Legislature, and been approved by the Governer, requiring the enumeration to be taken between the first day of March and the first day of May of each year, and requiring the trustees to report the same to the School examiner, on or before the first day of May and further requiring the School Examiner to report the enumeration to his office on or before the 15th day of May.—Col. City Post.

County Papers.

The New York Times says that you might nearly as well forget your churches your academies and school houses, as to forget your local paper. It speaks to ten times the audience that your local minister does. It is read eagerly each week from beginning to end. It reaches you all, and if it has a lower spirit and less wisdom than a sermon, it has a thousand times better chance at you. Laying, as it does, on every table, in almost every house, you owe it to yourselves to rally liberally to its support, and exact from it as able, hight-toned a character as you do from any educator in your midst. It is no sense beneath notice and care—unless you yourself are beneath notice and care—for it is your representative. Indeed, in it's character, it is the sumation of the importance, interest and welfare of you all. It is the aggregate of your own consequence, and you cannot ignore it without miserably depreciating yourselves.

We are in receipt of an invitation from the extensive clothing house of M. E. Woodward, of Fort Wayne, to attend the spring opening of their custom department. The beautiful garments, of every imaginable style made at this establishment, mark it as the head quarters in this line, and we have no doubt that when any one, no matter how fastidious or plain he may be, gets into the hands of the experienced cutters employed here; they are sure of a fit to their entire satisfaction.—Call in and see the magnificence of their stock and facilites.

Great Reduction on Teas.

The failure of five of the largest tea importers of New York has broken the tea market. We have taken the advantage of the situation, and purchased large quantities at low rates, and we now offer all grades 15 cents per pound lower than former prices. Young Hyson, 50c, 60c 80c and $1, best 1 10. Gunpowder 50c and 80c, best 1 10. Imperial, 50c, 80c and best 1 10. Oolong, 40c, 50c and 80c, best 95c. Japan, 40c and 50e, best 95c Fruit House.

Coffee, Coffee!

No advance in prices. The excitement in the market is only temporary. We purchased a large stock before the advance and will continue to sell at our old prices:

Best Rio, 25 cents.
Good Rio, 25c.
Old Government Java, 28c
Best roasted Rio, 27c Feb 6.
At the FRUIT HOUSE, Fort Wayne.

A Flourishing Institution.—The Mt. Union College, located at Mt. Union, O near Alliance, is perhaps the most flourishing of all educational institutions in that State. The attendance is very large and so extensive has been the demand that large improvements and additions are being made, and will be made in the future to accommodate all. All persons contemplating a collegiate course will find greater facilities at this place than another. One superior advantage is given from the fact that those who depend upon teaching to defray expenses, can teach fall, winter and spring terms, and attend the regular terms of this college at the same time. Our friends in this section cannot do better than to give it their earnest consideration. For catalogue and particulars, address,

The East.

THOMAS F. ANDERSON, cashier of a bank at Franklin, Pa., recently set fire to the notes, bonds and papers of the institution, and then shot himself through the head....George Francis Train, who is confined in the New York Tombs, insists that he is insane, and a medical commission has been appointed to determine the question.

LARGE numbers of orders are being received at New York from Europe to purchase wooden vessels to replace the iron ones lost in the last year's gales. Some brokers say they find find it impossible to fill their commissions fast enough.

It is probable he will be turned loose, as he is not regarded as a dangerous man, and therefore not a fit subject for commitment to an asylum. Train's latest assertion is that in 30 days not one stone in the bastile shall be left standing upon another, and that the streets of New York are to run with blood.

THE lower house of the Massachusetts Legislature has refused, by a vote of 49 to 167, to rescind the resolution censuring Senator Sumner.

The West.

THE political excitement at Salt Lake has died out, the utmost good nature exists between Mormons and Gentiles, and the business prospects are said to be unusually promising....There were two hangings in Illinois on Friday, the 14th of March—George Driver, at Chicago, for the murder of his wife, in November last; and John Marion Osborne, at Knoxville, Knox county, for the murder of Mrs. Adelia M. Matthews, in August, 1872....The German Savings Bank at Kansas City, Mo., was recently burglarized to a heavy amount....John Kelsey was shot at Centerville, O., the other day, by Miss Ella Benham, a discarded lover....Nevada has been having a little speck of internal war. The Lieutenant-Governor refused to surrender the office of Warden of the Penitentiary, and conform to the new law detaching the two offices, whereupon Gov. Bradley marched upon the Penitentiary with militia and cannon, and forced the surrender of the rebellious officer, who will probably be impeached....A proposition has been introduced into the Michigan Legislature for the appointment of Railway Commissioners, who shall have power to enforce the general railway law and have a supervision of all police regulations concerning railways in the State....An effort will be made for another conference with Capt. Jack, the Modoc chief, though there is little hope of a peaceful settlement....The epizootic is raging throughout Arizona, and stage travel and the mails are much delayed....D. A. Washington.

THE President has appointed Rev. Edward Payson Smith, of New York, to be Commissioner of Indian Affairs....A Washington correspondent says: "The country has been generally misinformed in relation to Congressional legislation with regard to the postal laws this session. The Farnsworth bill, reducing letter postage to 2 cents, and providing for the prepayment of postage on mail matter, passed the House, but failed in the Senate. There was an amendment to the Post-office Appropriation bill, which repeals all existing acts with regard to free mail matter. This, of course, includes exchanges between newspapers and free postage on papers circulated in the counties where they are published. Railroad Development in the South.

The Memphis Appeal says: The rapid extension of railroads throughout the South has never had a parallel in its own history, and is scarcely excelled even in the great Northwest. In one respect, at least, the South stands ahead of any competition—economy of the construction of its roads, the strength of their financial management, and their sound reputation in the leading money centers. This we may truthfully state, with but few exceptions, is the general estimation in which Southern railroads are held here. We attribute this very largely to the fact that, in a great degree, the people themselves, in the several States where roads are under construction or completed, have put their own shoulders to the wheel and helped along the car of progress. They have taken stock by granting the right of way, by working out contracts, by furnishing timbers, and subscribing money. They have not first sought to issue a large amount of wildcat stock, based upon promised security, to throw upon the market at whatever it might bring. The consequence is good, strong, healthy, paying roads all over the South, and more in rapid process of construction.

The Southern people are at last becoming thoroughly aroused to the importance of the development of all their material resources, and they know that the first step is to secure ample and cheap transportation facilities. Now let them be wise enough to insist that these facilities be cheap—that is absolutely necessary to secure the full advantages of the great increase in railroad lines throughout the South.

The Bachelor.

Where is there a more pitable object on earth than a man who has no amiable woman interested in his welfare? How dismal does his disconsolate room appear when he comes home at night weary and hungry, and sees a barren table and a lonely pillow, which looks like the white urn of every earthly enjoyment. See the old bachelor in the dark afternoon of life, when his heart is sinking in its sunderance! Not a solitary memory gleams over his opening grave! No weeping wife to bend like a comforting angel over his dying pillow, and wipe the death damp from his brow! No fond daughter to draw his chilly hand into the soft pressure of hers, and warm his icy blood with reviving fires of availing affection! No manly boy to link his breaking name with the golden chain of honorable society, and bind his history in the vast volumes of the world he is leaving forever! He has eaten, and drank, and died, and earth is glad she's got rid of him, for he had little else to do than to cram his soul into the circumference of a sixpence; and no human being save his washerwoman will breathe a sigh at his funeral.

HOW SOIL WAS MADE.—Prof. Agassiz says that all the materials on which agricultural progress depends are decomposed rocks, not so much those that underlie the soil, but those on the surface, and ground to powder by the rasping of the glaciers. Ice all over the continent is the agency that has ground out more soil than all other agencies put together. The penetration of the water into the rocks, frosts and baking suns have done something, but the glaciers more. In a former age the whole United States was covered with ice several thousand feet thick; and this ice moving from north to south by the attractions of the tropical warmth or pressing weight of the snow and ice behind, ground the rocks over which it passed into the paste which we call soil. These masses of ice can be tracked as game is tracked by the hunter. He has made a study of them in this country as far south as Alabama, but has observed the same phenomenon in Europe, particularly in Italy, where, among the Alps, glaciers are now in progress. The stones and rocks ground and polished by the glaciers can easily be distinguished from those scratched by running water. The angular boulders found in meadows and the terraces of rivers not reached by water can be accounted for only in this way.

ROCHEFORT's friends are hopeful of obtaining a pardon for him.

OURSELVES AS OTHERS SEE US.

What is Said of Us in England—A Liberal English Journal on the Credit Mobilier Disclosures—The Corruption of American Congressmen Serving in Europe as an Argument in Favor of Caste.

[From the London Spectator.]

Nothing can be more disheartening to Radicals, or indeed to any men who believe in self-government, than the revelations of corruption recently reported from the United States, and yet we appear to discern among them one gleam of light. A belief in the corruptibility of American politicians has of late years been very widely spread in Europe, perhaps unduly spread, but until this month it was corrected by an impression that the Senate, at all events, was pure. That body was not elected by a democracy, but by the elite of the people, the State Legislatures; it was filled by men of a different stamp from the Representatives, and it had a long tradition of honor. Its members might "job," as British Ministers have jobbed, but the short tenure of American office might account for that, and after all, some one must recommend for local appointments; but there was a belief that they would not betray their trust for money.

The revelations in the American Credit Mobilier case and the Pomeroy case show, however, that this belief was ill-founded; that the position of Senator, the highest in the Union next the President's, is sometimes bought and sold; that the Legislatures which elect the Senate may be corrupted; and that in the Senate itself there exist men whose votes can be regularly purchased for a moderate sum of money. Without going into unproved scandals, there seems to be no doubt whatever that certain managers of the Pacific railroad formed a ring; that under the title of the Credit Mobilier they sold to themselves concessions made by Congress to the Pacific railroad; that they resold these concessions at enormous profit—witnesses talk of dividends of 1,500 per cent.; that they were arraigned in Congress, and that they have granted—that is, money—in amounts of £1,000 to Senators for protection. How many Senators are implicated it is impossible to say, but it is certain that three at least are held by opinion to be guilty, including Schuyler Colfax, the Vice-President, who avers that he can make a full defense, but who has only escaped impeachment by three votes. It is certain also that "lobbying," i. e., the practice of carrying bills by bribery, has reached the Senate, that several men have grown rich there without cause, and that one man, Mr. Pomeroy, of Kansas, has been convicted of buying his seat, in order, as every one admits, to sell its powers. The revelations are of the most frank character, and though they do not cover a majority of the Senate, or anything like it, they do cover names heretofore generally respected.

Anything more disheartening could scarcely be conceived. If a democracy itself uncorrupt cannot find or does not care to find representatives who, after a double winnowing are commonly "law honest," will abstain from actual bribes or actual plundering of the State till, democracy is dead before it has well been born. No State can long survive pecuniary corruption in its rulers. They may urge, as we believe Americans do urge, that they do not sell their countrymen, that an anti-national vote cannot be bought, that they only receive gratifications for votes on indifferent matters, or that at worst they only traffic in concessions, but all that is delusive. The men who sell concessions will sell contracts, and in our modern civilization the very life of a nation may depend upon contracts being honestly performed, upon ship rivets, and soldiers' boots, and the quality of powder; and the step from furnishing boots of paper to betraying an expedition is very short indeed—how short we may discover from any life of the first Duke of Marlborough. When once such a practice becomes general, the work of legislation is sure to fall to men who make a trade of it; who, profiting by their work, attend to it and make a monopoly of it: and the control of the great city of New York was abandoned to a regular Ring, whose almost avowed object is the plunder of the people. The Ring did not govern New York well, but badly, its ultimate interest being not only high prices, but scamped work; and a Ring, if it obtained control of the Union, would not govern well either, but as badly as France was governed in the latter years of Napoleon.

We do not hesitate to say that, immensely powerful as the Union is, and splendid fighters as the Americans are, if her resources fell into the hands of men like the New York Ring, she would in her next great campaign be defeated by sea and land, if only through corruption among her contractors. The vice is fatal, and if it spreads only a little more, we shall see the fall of the mighty American Republic, and of the brightest hopes of the race now covering the globe. There is no conceivable reason why Australians should swindle less than Americans, or why Englishmen under the same conditions should be better than either, and all good or far-sighted men would give up the Democratic cause as a hopeless fallacy.

However, as we said, with the intelligence comes also a gleam of light. The real difficulty in studying this problem of corruption is to understand why the people bear it, to decide whether the electors acquiesce in their sale by their representatives. If they do, the struggle is over; but if they do not, all may be redeemed. A nation may fall into the hands of a corrupt class as into the hands of a corrupt King, and yet remain itself uncorrupted. That certainly happened in England under Charles II, when King, courtiers and statesmen alike accepted bribes which the electorate would have rejected with contemptuous scorn; and under Walpole, when Peers apologized for rejecting bribes which tailors would have thrown in the faces of those who offered them. We see some faint reason to believe that this is the case also in America, and that the ultimate cause of the popular toleration for corruption is popular ignorance. The electors do not believe their representatives corrupt. The moment that by any accident the evidence comes before the people in a way they trust, there is an end of the bribe taker. In this very Pomeroy affair, the moment Col. York had produced indisputable proofs the contest was at an end. The members of the Kansas Houses dared not face their constituents' indignation, and with Pomeroy's money in many of their pockets unanimously voted his dismissal, the election of his adversary, and his own arrest on a criminal information. In the United States House of Commons there has been no hesitation to investigate, no refusal to expel—Mr. Ames, for instance, being expelled—except by the cumbrous method of impeachment, and no idea that any convicted member will be re-elected.

There is much lenity about punishment, as there used to be in England, and indeed still is about buying seats in the House of Commons; but it is evidently felt that the delinquents are politically dead, that the electors do not intend votes to be sold, that although they may choose men no better than those expelled, they will not knowingly choose the agents of the "lobbying" Rings. While they think them merely extravagant they will bear with them, partly because they are too comfortable to care—remember the debt is being reduced by £25,000,000 a year—and partly from that horror of pecuniary "meanness" which among certain classes in America, as among the whole lower classes in England, has made of thrift an artificial vice, but corruption they decidedly dislike.

This is so far satisfactory, but we cannot deny that each of these revelations, necessary as they are if there is ever to be reform, is a severe blow struck against Democracy. Grant the electorate innocent, and we must still concede that it is excessively stupid. It looks as if average, half-educated workingmen, such as make up the constituency of Kansas, while they can be trusted to fight for their country, and even to see that slavery is an evil, cannot be trusted to discern the character of their representatives. They select in ordinary times a "bad lot," and when selected do not look after them with anything like adequate keenness and intelligence. If they remain poor, that is no credit to them, and if they become rich, that is no cause of suspicion, for they may have been speculating in stocks. We do not like the outlook—for Englishmen and Americans are essentially the same—any more than we like the deduction we are forced to draw—that the reverence for rank acts as an antiseptic on the reverence for money.

We never feel sure, as we read these stories in American papers, and French papers, and German papers, that the English guarantee against a repetition of them in this country is not caste pride, the strongest argument for aristocracy in some sense or other it would be possible to suggest. It is a disheartening thought from our point of view, but we never deny a fact, and there the fact is that any man who offered £1,200 or £12,000 to any English peer or county member for his vote would be summarily ejected from the room. There are lobbyers among us, too, but they refrain from putting temptation into that crude form, and they are powerless against the caste.

Europe Astonished—Warning for Nations which Contemplate a Republican Form of Government.

[From the Naples (Italy) Pungalo.]

Entire Europe is never satisfied with admiring the Republic of the United States, regarding that Republic as a model. The immortal Washington rendered it great and rich. On many occasions the New World has proved its perfection compared with old Europe; but now, if Washington were able to rise for a moment from the tomb where he lies, he would suffer the greatest anguish in seeing the immense change which has taken place in the United States.

Of the ancient glory only tradition exists there. Frauds, intrigues, and gigantic public robberies succeed each other rapidly in that country. The journals in America, without any distinction, speak of pecuniary villainies with coolness and frankness that are hardly credible. Three days ago a dispatch informed us of the fraud of twenty-five millions of dollars committed by the company of the Pacific railroad.

Not only are commercial affairs full of corruption, but in politics the order of things shows an astounding tendency. The Republican idea is dying out little by little, while President Grant exercises a dictatorship unheard of before. Witness the following fact which happened immediately after the re-election of Gen. Grant as President of the United States:

In Louisiana, on occasion of the election of the Governor, a conflict arose in the Legislature of that State. A certain Warmoth was Governor, duly elected by the majority; but an insidious minority, at the head of which was a mulatto named Pineback, combined with certain Federal functionaries, among whom was a brother-in-law of President Grant, organized a species of Legislature, contested the right of Warmoth, and proclaimed in his place the said Pinchback. The President, without any regard to the principles of the Constitution as to the rights of the question, gave orders to the troops to aid the mulatto; and the latter became Governor in fact, and Warmoth, the legal Governor, was expelled. After this act, which was more than autocratic, a hundred prominent citizens proposed to come to Washington and defend there the cause of the Legislature and of the majority of the State. The following are the words of the reply to these hundred citizens made by President Grant through Mr. Williams, his Attorney-General:

> "WASHINGTON, D. C., Dec. 13.
> "Your visit with a hundred citizens will be unavailing so far as the President is concerned. His decision is made and will not be changed, and the sooner it is acquiesced in, the sooner good order and peace will be restored. GEO. H. WILLIAMS, Atty.-Gen."

After such a document, we can say frankly to European Republicans that they ought not to cite the American Republic as a model, for the reason that since the time of the immortal Washington it has undergone, as we have seen above, an incredible metamorphosis.

BIG GRAIN TRANSACTION.—The San Francisco Commercial Bulletin reports the following as the largest single bona fide transaction in grain ever made in California, if not in the United States. The wheat was all in the city warehouse, was of uniform, good shipping quality, and was the property of Scholle Brothers, having been purchased by them in lots during the fall, at low prices. The sale consisted of 12,000 tons, valued at $50,000.

FARM AND GARDEN.

Punctuality of Farmers.

The agricultural part of mankind have suffered seriously in character and business by their too reckless disregard of written and verbal contracts. And there is an urgent necessity for our Agricultural Societies, Clubs and Granges to take in hand the important task of educating our people up to the importance of punctuality in the payment of their debts. Many farmers cannot borrow, in case of emergency, from banks at reasonable rates of interest, for the reason that they have failed to establish their credit for promptness. Farmers should all feel, as they do in commercial circles, that a lack of punctuality is forfeiture of honor. And when a man becomes so reckless of his honor as not to feel keenly a blemish on his reputation when his contracts are considered of no account, he has lost much of that which should pulsate proudly in every man's heart.

We would therefore urge upon Agricultural Clubs, and especially Granges, which are so constituted as to operate efficiently in this matter, to instil into its members the great essential of business and honor, a strict fidelity to contract. All cannot pay in full when due, but all can promptly confer with the payee, make a fair representation, and get an extension. When a debtor goes to his creditor with an honest face, and a reasonable excuse, it is seldom but what matters can be arranged satisfactory to all. Then work up faithfully to the new contract, trouble will be avoided, costs and litigation saved, and the debtor will feel that he has yet a reputation to defend. In this way men will be more honest and happier, the business of the neighborhood will be more harmonious, and old friendships will be perpetuated.

In this day, when so many disregard their obligations, and let the hour of payment pass away without a thought, it may be considered harsh to say such conduct is dishonorable. Yet what milder terms will fully portray the heiniousness of such neglect of duty. The frequency of business lying has so benumbed the feelings of some to such an extent that they are ready to resent the charge that they are thus guilty. This shows the great importance of establishing a higher standard of morals as to our written and verbal contracts. And there is no better time to inaugurate a new code among farmers on this subject. By care, economy, and a full control of business, prepare for a new departure on the subject of fidelity to contracts.

Woman's Right to a Woodpile.

Much is said nowadays about woman's rights. A correspondent of the Maine Farmer contends for one which cannot be gainsaid, in the following paragraph:

"Perhaps the family may live on a farm where wood may be had with little labor at the right time; but, instead of that, the woman may have small children, some of them sick, and but very little wood, if any. What can be more trying for a woman, when she can get very little time to work about the house, than to be hindered for the want of fuel? I think, if her husband could be placed in her situation for a month, it would cure him of being so neglectful about providing good fuel, if he was not past curing. Besides all the discomfort, it looks very shiftless to see a man that cannot go to his work in the morning because he has to stop and get some wood. And before he retires at night he must get a rail off the fence to make a fire in the morning. Such a man cannot be said to be a thrifty farmer. I think the woodpile a fair test of the father's love for the wife and children. If you want domestic peace and a warm dinner, get some dry wood, put under cover, make a good fire, and let the tired wife rest awhile. Remember, she is shut up with the children more than you are, and her mind and body need rest and relaxation.

Mulching Grass Land.

A Massachusetts farmer writes to the Country Gentleman: It is a common practice here to mulch the new sown grass land, as soon as the ground is frozen, with thatch—a coarse sedge that grows on the banks of salt water creeks; straw and other bedding materials are too valuable here, we think, for this use. As soon as the ground is frozen hard enough to bear the team, the thatch is thrown in a light windrow from each side of the wagon, and then spread with a fork over the ground so thinly that the grass or soil is not excluded from view on any spot larger than the hand. This thin covering is always much protection to the young grass, by arresting and retaining the thin and blowing snow, and by preventing the frequent thawing of the surface in warm days in winter, thus avoiding the heaving out and killing of the grass; and also by shading it when small and tender, in the hot days of early summer; and by decaying it adds to the fertility of the soil.

Bunions.

The treatment consists in removing all pressure from the part. The formation of a bunion may in the beginning be prevented, but only in the beginning; for when once actually formed, it is scarcely possible to ever get rid of it, and it remains an everlasting plague. To prevent the formation of a bunion, it is necessary, whenever and wherever a shoe or boot pinches, to have it eased at once, and so long as the part of the foot pinched remains tender, not to put on the offending shoe again. When a bunion has once completely formed, if the person wish to have any peace, and not have it increase, he must have a last made to fit his foot, and have his shoe made upon it. And whenever the bunion inflames, and is painful, it must be bathed with warm water, and poulticed at night.

Charcoal for Turkey.

A California paper highly recommends charcoal for fattening turkeys, pulverized and mixed with potatoes and corn meal, as well as fed to them in small lumps. It mentions two lots of turkeys of four each, treated alike, one lot given this mixture and the other not, where there was an average gain in weight of the first one pound and a half each. We do not like the practice of mixing the pulverized charcoal with other food of turkeys, compelling them to eat it or go without food, but we have no doubt of the excellent effects of supplying turkeys with charcoal broken into small bits, especially when fattening for market. They will naturally eat all they require.

To Clean Lamp Chimneys.

When you wish to clean a lamp chimney, hold a linen cloth against one end of the chimney and place the other end in your mouth; breathe in it until it is covered inside with moisture, push the cloth into the chimney with a smooth slender stick, and rub it around until the moisture is absorbed; repeat the process and breathe on the outer surface also; rub this with a cloth until dry, and you have a clean, bright chimney. Soft newspaper will take the place of a linen cloth. Do not use cotton cloth on glassware.

Lace.

Lace may be restored to its original whiteness by first ironing it slightly, then folding it and sewing it into a clean linen bag, which is placed for twenty-four hours in pure olive oil. Afterwards the bag is boiled in a solution of soap and water for fifteen minutes, then well rinsed in lukewarm water, and finally dipped in water containing a slight proportion of starch. The lace is then taken from the bag, and stretched on pins to dry.

Lemons.

All do not know that lemons sprinkled with loaf-sugar almost completely allay feverish thirst. They are invaluable in the sick-room. Invalids affected with feverishness can safely consume two or three lemons a day. A lemon or two thus taken at "tea-time" is recommended as an entire substitute for the ordinary supper of summer, and will often induce a comfortable sleep through the night, and give a good appetite for breakfast.

To Prevent the Smoking of a Lamp.

Soak the wick in strong vinegar, and dry well before you use it; it will then burn both sweet and pleasant, and give much satisfaction for the trifling trouble of preparing.

A Tale of Horror.

For some time the planters of Fiji have wanted laborers, or, in other words, slaves, and it has been known that vessels have been engaged in picking up loads of the innocent natives on the other islands, carrying them to Fiji and selling them to the planters at £10 a head. We believe this sale is called "hiring," but the poor wretches seldom get away from their masters. The authorities at Melbourne and Sidney, and the British Consul at Fiji, have been endeavoring to stop this new slave trade, but with little success until the murders on the ship Carl came out and brought the offenders within the grasp of the law.

The story of the Carl is one of the most horrible on record. This vessel was in the business of sailing about among the Polynesian Islands and kidnapping natives. At first persuasion was tried, but in vain; and then such tricks as dressing up a man-stealer as a missionary, but the natives were not deceived, and out and out capture was resorted to. The owner of the Carl was Dr. James Patrick Murray. The captain was Joseph Armstrong, and the mate Charles Dowden. The Carl made two complete voyages. On the first trip she took fifty-nine islanders to Fiji and disposed of them at an average of £10. On the second she took in 100 persons, whom the British Consul refused to pass, but ten of them were engaged by an American through the American commercial agent. It was in the first voyage that the murders were committed.

The living cargo was secured by a summary process. The Carl sailed in among the lovely islands, and the natives thronged around her in their fruit boats. The crew then threw in iron weights into the boats and sunk them, then picked up the natives out of the water, and disabled, stunned, or even killed with clubs or slung-shots the vigorous ones who were determined to escape. The monster Murray was accustomed first to read prayers to the crew and then bid them smash the canoes.

The first load had been picked up in this way, and the hold was crowded with kidnapped men, when the prisoners rebelled. Breaking up benches, they tried to force their way out. Failing to quiet them by usual means, the crew began firing into the hold. This was evening. The firing continued all night. By morning all was quiet. When the hatches were opened, and the unwounded were invited to go on deck, only five obeyed the call, a few more, slightly wounded, were helped up, and the rest were severely hurt or dead. They then began throwing the dead overboard, how many nobody exactly knows. Then came the question what to do with the badly wounded. It was settled by throwing them overboard; Murray says there were sixteen of them; another witness thirty-five. Between sixty and seventy men were thus massacred, and Marray landed on an island with a dozen wounded, of whom nothing seems to be known. The Carl was then cleaned so quickly and expeditiously that the Rosario, which overhauled her, found nothing suspicious.

The details of this murder came through Murray, who turned Queen's evidence in order to save his life, the Consul having promised him protection if he would reveal what he knew, having no idea that he was the ringleader in the affair and the one wretch of all others who deserved no mercy. The captain and the mate were condemned to be executed, but, in consideration of their behavior on the trial and the evidence that they were tools of Murray, their sentence is commuted to imprisonment for life. The judge said it was a stain upon the Government and upon the administration of justice that Murray should escape. Four other of the accomplices at Sidney and Melbourne are to be tried for murder.

THEY have been injecting the brains of a mule into the veins of a Dubuque local editor, with such results as fully justify the theory of the transfusion of blood.

A Defense of Pretty Women.

After all, is the world so very absurd in its love of pretty women? Is a woman so very ridiculous in her chase after beauty? A pretty woman is doing a woman's work in the world, but not making speeches, nor making life sunnier and more beautiful. Man has forsworn the purpose of beauty altogether. Does he seek it for himself, he is guessed to be frivolous, he is guessed to be poetic, there are whispers that his morals are no better than they should be. In society resolute to be ugly there is no post for an Adonis but that of a model or guardsman. But woman does for mankind what man has ceased to do. Her aim from childhood is to be beautiful. Even as a school-girl she notes the progress of her charms, the deepening color of her hair, the growing symmetry of her arm, the ripening contour of her cheek. We watch, with silent interest, the mysterious reveries of the maiden; she is dreaming of a coming beauty, and panting for the glories of eighteen. Insensibly, she becomes an artist, her room is a studio, her glass an academy. The joy of her glass is the joy of Raphael over his canvas, of Michael Angelo over his marble. She is creating beauty in the silence and loneliness of her chamber; she grows like any art creation—the result of patience, of hope, of a thousand delicate touchings and retouchings. Woman is never perfect; never complete. A restless night undoes the beauty of the day; sunshine blurrs the evanescent coloring of her cheek; frost nips the tender outlines of her face into sudden harshness. Care plows its lines across her brow; motherhood destroys the elastic lightness of her form; the bloom of her cheek, the quick flash of her eyes, fade and vanish as the years go by. But woman is still true to her ideal. She won't know when she is beaten, and she manages to steal fresh victories even in her defeat. She invents new conceptions of womanly grace; she rallies at forty, and fronts us with the beauty of womanhood; she makes a fast stand at sixty, with the beauty of age. She falls like Cæsar, wrapping her mantle around her—"buried in woolen! 'twould a saint provoke!" Death listens pitifully to the longings of a lifetime, and the wrinkled face smiles with something of the prettiness of eighteen.—Saturday Review.

Discovery of Buried Cities in Africa.

Recent discoveries in the South African Republic Transvaal have led to the supposition that at one time the east coast of South Africa was inhabited by a race of men who were in the enjoyment of great wealth and far advanced in the arts of civilized and refined people.

The ruins of one of these ancient cities, situated on a farm near Bloemhof, on the banks of the Vaal, are to be thoroughly explored, and the results of excavations already made are such as to excite deep interest among archæologists. In another buried city, which is being explored by Herr Mauch, the ruins cover an area of two square miles. The walls of the city were thirty feet high and eighteen feet thick, built of blocks of hewn stone, laid in cement, which is hard and durable as the stone itself. Within the walls iron pots have been found, and vases with ornamental handles. It is supposed that the inhabitants of these cities in their day utilized the rich mineral resources of Transvaal, as there are numerous mines within the limits of the republic which were evidently worked in former ages, but have been long abandoned.

A Mr. Guzman, who is promoting the organization of a company for the construction of a railroad from Pretoria to Delagoa Bay, says that near the Limpopo river he found one hundred and sixty pits which had been worked for minerals. He recently exhibited at the diamond fields specimens of ores taken from these pits which were very rich, and included copper, tin, silver, bismuth, cobalt, nickel, and quicksilver. Alluvial and quartz gold has been found in different places in Transvaal, but reports differ as to the richness of the deposits.

The stories in relation to the buried cities seem to be fully authenticated, but a boast made by the inhabitants of Sofeir, a port lying parallel with the largest of them, that they have documents which proved the ruined town in their neighborhood to be Ophir, and "identify it with the Queen of Sheba," remains to be substantiated by the production of the documents.

Texas.

But few realize the fact that Texas is larger than Pennsylvania, New Jersey, New York, and the five New England States taken together. If the whole population of the country were settled in it, it would still be far less densely peopled than Massachusetts is at the present moment. And it is as fertile as it is extensive. It is as full of coal as the Schuylkill basin; as abundant in iron, lead and copper as any part of Pennsylvania, Missouri and Michigan; as fit for cotton as the Sea Islands themselves; as various in the finest marbles and granites as any part of the world; as prolific, by nature, in every species of fruit as a tropical region; as good for the cultivation of tobacco as the most famous districts in the Island of Cuba; as favorable to the increase of all kinds of domestic stock as the most covetous can ask; and as delightful and salubrious in climate for the good of mind and person as Italy. It cannot be questioned that Texas is capacious enough and fertile enough for an empire of a hundred millions of people.

PASCAL was the inventor of the wheelbarrow. Before his day wheels already existed, and the barrow part was in common use. But it never occurred to any body to work them together. A man who wanted to carry a load of anything piled the material upon the barrow, gave the wheel a kick, and then shouldered the barrow. One man did unite the two, but as the idea was to hold the wheel in his hands and to run the handles upon the groud, his friends generally regarded the undertaking as a failure. But one day a gleam of light burst upon the soul of Pascal. It was revealed to him that something might possibly be done by turning the machine over, and fixing the wheel so that it would revolve. Then the wheelbarrow was born. Thus it is ever with genius.—Max Adeler.

Old Kentucky Times.

The skill of Kentucky hunters is a matter of history, and the pithy sayings of these men have passed into proverbs. The shot-gun was unknown in frontier life, or, if known, looked upon with contempt. The bear, the deer, and the wild turkey were the game the old hunters went in quest of; but, when they could not be found, the rifle was sighted at the quirrel, and the ball sent whizzing through the head. To hit the squirrel in any other place than the head was the sign of a poor marksman, and a poor marksman was held at a great discount by the hardy pioneers. But times have greatly changed. The old hunters are fast being gathered in the fold of death, and a new race of shooters have come upon the carpet. The larger game has disappeared before the advanced tide of civilization, so that a rifle is of very little practical value now. Birds, which cleave the air on rapid wing, are the things that excite the enthusiasm of the sportsman, and in order to cut down in a sportsmanlke way the shot-gun is called into requisition. Notwithstanding the times have altered so much, it is pleasant to drift through the reminiscences of pioneer life, and to recall the glorious reign of the rifle.

One of the most celebrated shots of Kentucky is Dr. C. Graham. His aim was next to infallible, and in his younger days he killed as effectively at long range as at short range. The Louisville Courier-Journal tells us that he could ring the bell or take the bull's eye at every shot a distance of 200 yards, while a turkey stood little chance of retaining life if he drew bead on it at 400 yards. For half a century the Doctor used a favorite rifle of primitive make which he christened Blucher. The gun was always kept in the very best condition, and he loved it as fondly as he could have loved a child. The barrel was thirty-three inches long, and the bore nine sixteenths of an inch, carrying thirty-two balls to the pound.

The doctor is now an old man, and has bequeathed his rifle to posterity. He has placed it in the museum at Louisville, and it hangs side by side with the rifle that proved such a terror to the Indians in the hands of Daniel Boone. It is well to treasure these relics of frontier life, for they are a part of the history of the State that once was looked upon by the civilized world as "the dark and bloody ground."

Effective Discipline.

One of the most disinterested inmates of Auburn Prison, on the inauguration of the present administration, was a gentleman in stripes who was supposed to have an interest in the progress of the shoe manufacture in one of the shoe shops. The supposition was erroneous. He took no interest whatever in the work, but refused to have anything to do with it. If put to stiching shoes, he would neglect to fasten the threads, or in other ways spoil the work intrusted to him.

Confinement in the dungeon was rather a relief to him. He preferred it to labor, and grew fat under the relaxation thus afforded him.

Col. Thomas, the principal keeper, concluded to try a spice of army discipline in this case of chronic restiveness. He accordingly procured a large knapsack, loaded with brick, and strapping it securely upon the back of the labor hater, set him to "marching on."

For two days the unambitious couirat perambulated the prison yard, under the surveillance of guards and keepers, who allowed him no pause in his peregrinations, except to march in the mess-room to his meals, after the other convicts were seated, where his appearance, with his back load of brick, always evoked a general ripple of interested attention over the "sea of upturned faces" which greeted his entrance and progress to his remote place at table.

Two days of this relief from labor in the shop had passed, and the Colonel asked the knapsacker if he preferred it to sedentary pursuits. Being answered in the affirmatie, he added some extra bricks to the load and humored "the bearer" in his preference. On the third evening the pedestrian concluded that brick work was not his forte, and he offered to return to his shop. But the Colonel told him he was doing well enough as he was. So he circulated over his line of parade, gathering energy and ambition with every stride, as each brick continued to increase in weight and unpopularity with the disgusted amateur mason's clerk.

A repetition of his appeal, and a renewal of his desire for steady employment at a lighter branch of industry, finally resulted in his promotion back to his shop, and there is now no better workman on the bench.—Auburn Bulletin.

Stunned by a Meteor.

The following singular incident, which occurred on the night of the 12th of November, when the meteors of the November period were due, is narrated in a letter from Mr. Robin Allen, Secretary to the Corporation of the Trinity House, to the President of the British Royal Society, which appears in the last number of the Proceedings. The letter runs thus: "I am directed to acquaint you that on the 13th of November last, at 12 a. m., a meteor burst against the Seven Stones light vessel, belonging to this corporation, and moored about nine and a half miles east by north of the Scilly Islands, and that it has been reported that the watch were struck senseless for a short period, seeing nothing before the shock, but that, on recovery, balls of fire, like large stars, were falling in the water like splendid fireworks, and that the decks were covered with cinders, which crushed under the sailors' feet as they walked. It appeared, the men said, as if something was passing swiftly, and met with the obstruction of the vessel and burst. The superintendent reports that the men say there was a very decided smell of brimstone, but adds that they did not mention that until he asked them. There is reason to fear that the cinders were washed off the decks by the rain and sea before daylight, and it happened, also unfortunately, that the men did not think to observe the compasses."

Mark Twain on Murderers, Lawyers, and Legislators.

I have read the Foster petitions in Thursday's Tribune. The lawyers' opinions do not disturb me, because I know that those same gentlemen can make as able an argument in favor of Judas Iscariot, which is a great deal for me to say, for I never can think of Judas Iscariot without losing my temper. To my mind Judas Iscariot was nothing but a low, mean, premature congressman. The attitude of the jury does not unsettle a body, I must admit; and it seems plain that they would have modified their verdict to murder in the second degree if the judge's charge had permitted it. But when I come to the petitions of Foster's friends, and find out Foster's true character, the generous tears will flow—I cannot help it. How easy it is to get a wrong impression of a man. I perceive that from childhood up this one has been a sweet, docile thing, full of pretty ways and gentle impulses, the charm of the fireside, the admiration of society, the idol of the Sunday school. I recognize in him the divinest nature that has ever glorified any mere human being. I perceive that the sentiment with which he regarded temperance was a thing that amounted to frantic adoration. I freely confess that it was the most natural thing in the world for such an organism as this to get drunk and insult a stranger, and then beat his brains out with a car-oook because he did not seem to admire it. Such is Foster. And to think that we came so near losing him! How do we know but that he is the Second Advent? And yet, after all, if the jury had not been hampered in their choice of a verdict I think I could not content to lose him.

The humorist who invented trial by jury played a colossal practical joke upon the world, but since we have the system, we ought to try to respect it. A thing which is not thoroughly easy to do, when we reflect that by command of the law a criminal juror must be an intellectual vacuum, attached to a melting heart and perfectly maccaronian bowels of compassion.

I have had no experience in making lows or amending them, but still I cannot understand why, when, it takes twelve men to inflict the death penalty upon a person, it should take any less than twelve more to undo their work. If I were a legislature, and had just been elected and had not time to sell out, I would put the pardoning and commuting power into the hands of twelve able men, instead of dumping so huge a load upon the shoulders of one poor, petition-persecuted individual.

Great Telescopes.

The United States boasts of the largest refracting telescope in the world, the object-glass of which they have recently purchased in England. It is a twenty-five inch glass, magnifying three thousand times, and bringing our vision, to all intents and purposes, to within a distance of eighty miles from the moon. The construction of a lens of this size is a work of the most laborious and difficult nature, it being absolutely necessary that the glass should be of uniform density, perfectly pellucid, and free from even the smallest flaw. The telescope to which this glass belongs is made of steel, with an inner zinc tube, the whole mounted on a pillar twenty-nine feet in height, and weighing not less than nine tons. The next largest telescope is placed in the Observatory in Chicago, and has an object-glass eighteen inches and a half in diameter. The two next largest have object-glasses of fifteen and a half inches in diameter, and they are situated at Cambridge, Mass., and at the Observatory of Pulkowa, in Russia. The most gigantic of telescopes, however, is still unfinished, though now rapidly approaching completion. The object-glass for this instrument will have a diameter of twenty-seven inches, and will alone cost $50,000. It is being manufactured for the Government of the United States, and will probably be placed on an astronomical station to be established by the Coast Survey Bureau on the Sierra Nevada Mountains. It will thus be situated at a height of from seven to ten thousand feet above the level of the sea, in an atmosphere of wonderful purity and comparatively free from clouds. That the establishment of this great instrument will add greatly to our knowledge of physical astronomy cannot be doubted, but it may reasonably be doubted whether any telescope will enable us, as has been recently suggested, to settle by direct optical proof whether the moon is inhabited by human beings or not.

"Wild Bill" Hickox.

William Hickox, or "Wild Bill," as he was generally called, and who was Marshal of Abilene, was killed at Fort Dodge, on the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe railroad, last week. Two men, whom he thought were his friends, proved treacherous and murdered him in the following manner: The three were going about the small town on the night of the murder, the assassins being very friendly; and finally they entered a saloon where, at a signal, the lights were all extinguished. Simultaneously with the going out of the lights, firing commenced, and with the first report, the tall form of the man who had proved such a terror on the plains fell at the feet of his enemies, vanquished by death, a bullet having pierced his brain, entering his skull in the center of his forehead. The firing was kept up in the dark by the assassins, one shot entering Bill's heel, another his shoulder, and four others perforating his body in different places. Then all ran out, and when the lights were again turned on all that was left of Wild Bill was a dead and bleeding body, fulfilling the prophecy in connection with him and all his class that he would "die with his boots on." It is almost certain that the two false friends, at least, were concerned in the murder, although others may have joined in the firing. It was dark; no one could see another do the deed, and in that country they consider that they have no evidence to warrant the arrest of any one for the crime.—Rocky Mountain News.

His remarks, it is said, showed him to be thoroughly in earnest in his profession, while the accompanying gestures proved that he had not quite forgotten the old one, as they were emphatic in the extreme.

THE DIFFERENCE.—A learned clergyman in Maine was accosted in the following manner by an illiterate preacher who despised education:

"Sir, you have been to college I suppose?"

"Yes, sir," was the reply.

"I am thankful," replied the former, "that the Lord has opened my mouth without any learning."

"A similar event," replied the latter, "took place in Balaam's time, but such things are of rare occurrence in the present day."

Lines Written on the Death of Ellanor Ann Gates.

Weep not for me, dear mother
Our darling Ella said,
As she lingered on the threshold
Ere her happy spirit fled.

I hear my saviour calling,
I must his voice obey,
Weep not for me dear father
When I am far away.

Weep not for me I'm going
To a land of light and love,
Their to dwell with christ forever
In a blessed home above

A glorious crown awaits me
In that land to which I go
Where the streams of living water
Ever from the fountain flow.

Prepare, dear friends, to meet me
Where the toils of life are o're,
In the blessed of glory
On the everlasting shore.

Farewell, farewell I'm going
Death's seal is on my brow,
I must cross the chilly waters
Of the cold dark river now.

But my savior is beside me
Leading me so gently ore,
Whispering words of comfort
As I near the other shore.

Soon the pearly gates will open
And I'll enter into rest
Soon I'll goin with angels singing
In the mansions of the blessed.

Prof. Fowler's Greatest Work.

The National Publishing Company, of Cincinnati, have just issued a very important and valuable work, by Prof. O. S. Fowler, on Manhood, Womanhood, and their Mutual Interrelations; Love, Its Laws, Power, etc. It is a masterly exposition of the laws which control the relations of the sexes, and their duties towards each other, and it is not asserting too much to pronounce it the most valuable and timely publication of the age.

"Know thyself!" was the profound injunction of the ancient sage, and it is the neglect to comply with this precept which causes nearly all the misery and sickness of the world. Husbands and wives constantly feel the need of more light on the subject of their relations to each other, especially concerning the great duty for which marriage was instituted—the begetting and rearing of a family.

It is for the purpose of diffusing this knowledge that Professor Fowler has given to the world this work on "Sexual Science," which is simply an explanation of the laws which govern the sexes in their relation to each other. He lets us into the secret of preserving female health and beauty far into old age, and shows how mothers can avoid much of the suffering of bringing children into the world—a subject in which every woman is interested, and how "female complaints" may be avoided with ease and certainty.

His book is pure and elevated in its style and ideas, and furnishes a practical solution of many of the most perplexing questions of life. It touches upon questions and discusses them thoroughly, in which every married person is interested. The advice which it gives to unhappy or indifferent husbands and wives is sound and practical, and its warnings to those who seek to promote pleasure at the expense of health ought to be read by every one. Tee terrible practice of "regulating the size of families," which prevails in many parts of our country, is shown in its true light, and we commend the chapters concerning it to every husband and wife.

All friends of morality and purity in social life will hail the advent of Prof. Fowler's book with delight, and those who seek information upon the curious and tragic features of domestic life, those who would study human nature stripped of its marks and disguises, will find this volume the best hand-book in existance. Young men who value their domestic happiness, should not fail to read his remarks on the subject of selecting a wife, as the information it contains is beyond value.

The book is a real blessing to the public, and will be regarded as such by all who read it. The low price at which it is issued brings it within the reach of all and every person who wants to arrive at the sexes, should procure a copy. It is sold by subscription only, and Mr. Geo. Bittinger, Spencerville, Ind., who is the anthorized agent for this section, is now canvassing for it.

We are going to have a large crop of maple sugar this year, owing to the decline of common brown sugar and the large stock of last years maple sugar left over. The sap is already flowing freely from the skin of city confectioners who work and perspere over their stoves making nice fresh cakes of this years' maple wax and maple sugar,

A lady who was urging some friends to stay to dinner, felt disgusted when her little boy came in and said: 'Mrs. Jones says she can't spare any bread, and Mrs. Fox ain't at home, so I did not get any butter." The friends thought that they had better dine elsewhere, and the lady thought so too; she taught that boy that the way of the transgressor is hard before evening.

The Turkish government couldn't exactly get the hang of a comic journal, so they suspended it.

Beyond the Mississippi.

Thousands have already gone, and thousands more are turning their eyes towards new homes in the fertile West. To those going to Missouri, Kansas, Colorado, Utah, Wyoming, Nevada, Oregon or California, we recommend a cheap, safe, quick and direct route, via St. Louis, over the Missouri Pacific Railroad, which runs its fine Day Coaches and Pullman Sleepers from St. Louis to principal points in the West, without change. We believe that the Missouri Pacific Railroad has the best track and the finest and safest equipment of any line west of the Missippi, and its connections with roads further West are prompt and reliable. The Texas connection of this road is now completed and passengers are offered a first class, all-rail route from St. Louis to Texas, either over the Missouri, Kansas & Texas R. R. via Sedalia, or over the Atlantic & Pacific R. R. via Vinita. For maps time tables, information as to rates, &c., we refer our readers to S. H. Thompson, Eastern Passenger Agent, Columbus, Ohio, or E. A. Ford, General Passenger Agent, St. Louis, Mo. Questions will be cheerfully and promptly answered!

WISHART

PINE TREE!

Tar Cordial,

NATURE'S GREAT REMEDY

FOR

Throat and Lungs.

It is gratifying to us to inform the public that Dr. L. Q. C. Wishart's Pine Tree Tar Cordial, for Throat and Lungs diseases, has gained an enviable reputation from the Atlantic to the Pacific coast, and from thence to some of the first families of Europe, not through the press alone, but by persons throughout the States actually benefited and cured at his office. While he publishes less, so say our reporters, he is unable to supply the demand. It gains and holds its reputation—

First. Not by stopping cough, but by loosening and assisting nature to throw off the unhealthy matter collected about the throat and bronchial tubes, which causes irritation.

Second. It removes the cause of irritation of the mucous membrane and bronchial tubes, assists the lungs to act and throw off the unhealthy secretions, and purifies the blood

Third. It is free from squills, lobelia, ipecac and opium, of which most throat and lung remedies are composed, which allay cough only, and disorganize the stomach. It has a soothing effect on the stomach, acts on the liver and kidneys, and lymphatic and nervous regions, thus reaching to every part of the system, and in its invigorating and purifying effects it has gained a reputation which it must hold above all others in the market.

Cousin Sally Dillard.

A STORY THAT MUST NOT DIE.

"Cousin Sally Dillard," was written by Hamilton C. Jones, of North Carolina, nearly half a century ago, and the public can enjoy a hearty laugh over its exquisite ridiculousness at least once a year. It purports to be a report of the testimony of a witness in a case before one of the courts of the State, and is as follows:

A beardless deciple of Themis arises and thus addresses the court:

"May it please your worship, and you gentlemen of the jury, since it has been my fortune (good or bad, I will not say,) to exercise in legal disquisition, it has never befalen me to be obliged to prosecute so direfully marked an assault. A more willful violent and dangerous battery, and finally a more diabolical breach of the peace, has seldom ever happened in a civilised country, and I dare say it has seldom ever been your duty to pass upon one so shocking to benevolent feelings as this which took place over to Captain Rice's in this country; but you will hear from the witnesses."

The witnesses being sworn, two or three were examined, and deposed.—One said that he heard the noise but did not see the fight; another that he saw the row but did not see who struck first; another that he was so very drunk that he couldn't say anything about the skirmish.

Lawyer Chops—"I am sorry gentlemen, to have ocupied your time with the stupidity of the witnesses examined. It arises altogether gentlemen, from a misrepresentation on my part—Had I known as I now do, that I had a witness that was acquainted with all the circumstances of the case, and who was able to make himself understood to the court and jury, I should not have trespassed so long upon your patience. Come forward Mr. Harris and be sworn."

So forward came the witness, a fat chuffy old man, a 'leetle' corned and took his oath with an air.

Chops—Harris, we wish you to tell us about the riot that happened the other day over to Captain Rice's, and as a great deal of time has been spent, already in circumlotion we wish to be commeudous, at the same time as expicit as possible.

Harris—"Axactly, (giving the lawyer a knowing wink and at the same time clearing up his throat.) Captain Rice began a treat, and cousin Sally Dillard she comes over to my house, and axed me if she moutn't go. I told cousin Sally Dillard that my wife was poorly as how she had a touch of the rheumatis in the hip, and the big swamp was up in the road, there having been a great deal of rain lately, but, however, as it was she, cousin Sally Dillard, my wife she mout go. Well then cousin Sally Dillard then axed if Mose he moutn't go. I told cousin Sally Dillard that Mose he was the foreman of the crap, the crap was smartly in the grass, but as it was she, cousin Sally Dillard, Mose he mout go too.

Chops—"In the name of common sense, Harris, what do you mean by this rigmarole?"

"Captain Rice he gin a treat, and cousin Sally Dillard she came over to my house and axed me if my wife she moutn't go—"

Chops—"Here it is again. Witness, please stop.'

Witness—'Well sir, what do you want?'

Chops—'We want to know something about the fight; and you must not proceed in this impertinent story. Do you know anything about the matter before the court.

Witness—'Yes sir.'

Chops—'Well, go on then, and tell it.

Witness—'Captain Rice he gin a treat—'

Chops—'This is intolerable. May it please the court, I move that the prisoner be committed for contempt.—He seems to be trifling with the court.'

Court—"Witness, you are before a court of justice, and unless you behave yourself in a more becoming manner, you will be sent to jail; so begin and tell me what you know about the fight at Rice's."

Witness—"Well gentlemen, Captain Rice he gin a party, and cousin Sally—'

Court—(After deliberating) "Mr. Attorney, the court is of the opinion, that we would save time to let the witness go on his own way. Proceed Mr. Harris with your story but stick to the subject.'

Witness—"Yes gentlemen, well Captain Rice he gin a treat and cousin Sally Dillard, she come over to our house, and axed me if my wife she mout go. I told cousin Sally Dillard that my wife she was poorly being as how she had the rheumatis in her hip, and the big swamp was up; however as it was she cousin Sally Dillard, my wife she mout go. Cousin Sally Dillard then axed me if Mose he mought go. I told cousin Sally Dillard as how Mose he was the foreman of the crap, and the crap was smartly in grass, however as it was her, cousin Sally Dillard, Mose he mout go. So they goes off together, Mose my wife and cousin Sally Dillard, and they came to the big swamp, and it were up as I were a telling you; but being as how there were a big log across the big swamp Cousin Sally Dillard and Mose, like genteel folks walked the log; But my wife, like a darned old fool, hoisted her petticoats and waded right straight through.

Chops—"Heavens, this is too bad; but go on.

Witness—Well that is all I know about the fight.

FOSTERS FINALE.

The Terrible Jerk That Took Him Out of the World—Incidents of the Scene.

The New York Commercial Advertiser has this graphic sketch of the last scene in the life of Foster: The door of the prison opened and at eleven minutes past nine the head of the procession emerged into the yard. First came Foster wearing the black cap and the fatal noose, and supported on one side by Sheriff Brennan, and on the other by Under Sheriff Stevens. All hats were doffed and every eye was turned upon the wretched man. His arms were pinioned and his head bowed upon his breast. He walked slowly and with effort, but with a firm step.—Behind him came Rev. Tyng Dr. Walker, Rev. Mr. Schoonmaker, and several of the Sheriffs deputies. Foster had not been shaven, and his beard was untrimed, while his countenance was deathly pale. He seemed to be stunned and overwhelmed by the sense of his awful position. The Sheriffs walked him up under the fatal beam, and placed him with his back to the prison and his face to the throng. They then fell back and Rev. Dr. Tyng, and Rev. Dr. Walker, his assistent took their positions on each side of him, and commenced the services for the dying used in the Episcopal church. Dr. Tyng read the service, while his assistent read the responses. Foster stood quietly under the beam, with his hand to his face, and his head still bowed upon his breast. He seemed to pay the closest attention as Dr. Tyng with a strong clear voice, read, and without faltering in solemn tones, the beautiful and soul comforting words which the ritual of the Episcopal church, proscribes for those on the verge of the Great Unknown. A hush fell upon the assembly and uncovered heads bowed reverently, and the solemn words of prayer and suplication fell upon the ears of the condemned man, just trembling upon the verge of eternity. The service closed, and then the voice of Dr. Tyng arose in prayer, for the wretched man whose body swang to and fro, while his knees trembled precipitably. He kept his hands pressed over his eyes, and his head bowed. In closing his prayer, Dr. Tyng turned toward the wretched man, and lying his hand upon his shoulder finished the invocation in that position. The deep Amen, of the attendant minister fell upon the ears of the congregation, and pressing the hand of the dying man once more, they stepped back from the platform, at fifteen minutes past 9. Then the hangman stepped toward Foster, drew the black silk cap over his eyes, adjusted the noose and fastened the snap to the end of the noose, with the ring at the end of the roap. As the click of the steel was heard, a great tremor passed over Foster, and he trembled violently, and his body swayed back and forth. The assistants fell back, and for a momentt here was a pause for an instant when the dull thud of an axe was heard the fall of a heavy weight immediately followed, and at seventeen minutes past nine, the body of the culprit was suddenly lifted into the air with a swift and strong pull, and dropped to within three feet of the earth, seemingly a lump of clay.—There was scarcely any evidence of life after he was suspended. The hands of the man, which were clenched, became half straightened at once, but were henceforward as motionless as if carved of stone. But for the change of collor apparent in them, and apparent too in that part of the neck which was exposed by the shifting of the cap there were no evidences of the slow progress of death. At twenty-six minus past nine, the pulse still beats three minutes later, and every sign of life was wanting.

If only old winter would go home a week or so, how warm it would be.

THE BALTIMORE RAIL ROAD.

The Chicago evening Post says:

The Baltimore and Ohio road, or strictly speaking, the Chicago Pittsburg and Baltimore road, is approaching its western terminus with great rapidity. The organization in Illinois is now complete, and as it is on the line constructed in Indiana, its continuation in Illinois will be proceeded with. The route through Ohio and Indiana is not only determined by actual survey, but the grading and track-laying have been executed, with the vigor and success so characteristic of the great corporation which originated the enterprise. The Indianaiansians on the route of the road, are looking with interest for a decision as to the precise point at which the shops and other works of the first section east of Chicago is going to be located. It has been given out that Syracuse Kosciusco county a promising place, half way between Warsaw and Goshen, will be the favored spot. It is understood that the officers of the road have been influenced in their choice of this place because of its beautiful surroundings. The country is rolling, fertile and healthful, and a lovely sheet of water known as the "Nine Mile Lake" adds to the picturesqueness of the place.—The lake is broad and clear and is well stocked with fish. Enthusiastic Syracusians predict that when the Railroad communication with Chicago shall have been opened up, their village will become the favorite summer resort of those who, flying the city seek happiness, health and handsome surroundings. If the railroad people adhere to what at present seems their intention with respect to the place it will at once advance from a pleasant village to a prosperous city.

It seems to be pretty definitely settled, that the Baltimore and Ohio will enter the city by the Illinois Central track.

THE TREACHERY OF JONES.

A Philadelphia Tragedy.

Rebecca Johnson was a maid of high and noble birth;
No man could guess the awful sum her proud papa was worth.
She fancied Jones when first [illegible] saw him try,
As courteously he bowed to her, to smile with the right eye.

And subsequently, when Jones called, the sparking that was done
Was so terrific that at once Rebecca's heart was won.
And Jones, for fear the exercise by Johnson might be stopped,
One evening fell upon his knees, and sighed and blushed and popped.

The wild, tumultuous passion that was raging in her breast
Can hardly be imagined, and it cannot be expressed.
But, till she learned precisely in what neighborhood he dwelt,
She didn't dare to tell young Jones the ecstasy she felt.

She said, "Your proffered love I shall assuredly decline,
If north of Market street you live, or farther south than Pine.
That people dwell beyond those bounds you may perhaps insist,
But I, of course, can't recognize the fact that they exist."

And then Jones said no earthly prize could possibly induce
A relative of his to live on any street but Spruce.
The fellow fibbed most shamelessly, as desp'rate lovers will;
The street that Jones lived upon was really Callowhill.

So then she flew into his arms and murmured in sweet tones:
"I love you! O, I love you! Fold me close, my sweet! my Jones!"
And though he clasped her to his heart and kissed her, mussed her hair,
And carried on outrageously, she didn't seem to care.

The wedding followed in a week; two weeks they were away;
Then back to Philadelphia the Joneses came to stay.
While speeding homeward in the cab, the bride remarked, "Why will
This brutal man, of all the streets, drive into Callowhill?"

They stopped before a house just then, and Mrs. Jones looked queer,
And said, "What does he mean, my love? What business have we here?"
But gazing out, she saw a plate of brass upon the door;
And JONES was all the legend that the shining tablet bore.

A wild, unearthly yell escaped the lips of Mrs. Jones,
And this was followed by a lot of sobs and shrieks and groans.
"O perjured villain! Slave!" she screamed, "I tell you I will not Consent to live with any Jones on this plebeian spot!"

Then suddenly she tackled Jones (who called for the police),
And brained him instantaneously with blows from her valise,
And looking at his corpse without a shadow of regret,
She [illegible] herself by swallowing her cut-glass vinaigrette.

They buried both the bodies in the same cold, cheerless tomb;
Rebecca's high-toned friends declared she merited her doom.
The Jones shutters for a year were bowed both front and back,
And all the Johnsons dressed themselves for twenty months in black.

TIMOTHY MURPHY.

If Timothy Murphy had been an educated man, possessed even of the elements of education, he would have made another Morgan or Marion. But he could not read or write, so he steadily refused to accept a commission, feeling that his deficiencies would subject him to much inconvenience and mortification. Therefore, he lived and died without a title. But his name yet supplies the crones of Schoharie Valley with traditions for the long winter's night, and if ever there was a true patriot born of our struggle for independence, Timothy Murphy was one.

He resembled the Father of his Country in one striking particular. His seemed to be a charmed life. From the beginning to the end of the Revolutionary war he was almost constantly exposed in border conflicts, always seeking the post of danger, and at the lowest estimate he must have had several hundred bullets fired at him by good marksmen, and yet was never touched. He seemed preserved, like Washington especially.

Murphy was a stout, well made man with rather a large body and small limbs, handsome in face, with jet black hair and eyes. He could out-run most Indians and surpassed the noble savage in heathen Chinee games. Here is an example:

Upon one occasion he, with twenty-seven others, were surrounded with a thousand Tories and Indians. Odds enough to satisfy any one, more than forty to one! They tried to cut their way out and twice failed, losing seventeen men out of twenty-eight. The third time Murphy tumbled a huge warrior into the dust (which made his dusky brethren laugh even in the heat of battle), and led his comrades out. Then they scattered. After Murphy had been pursued some time he saw that he had distanced all his blood-thirsty pursuers, except two, a tall and a short Indian. Several times, as they neared him, he would raise his rifle, which was unloaded, whereupon they would fall back.

He found, as he ran, that his moccasins began to bind him, owing to the swelling of his feet. He opened a pocket-knife, and, while running, slit the tops of the moccasins (at the hazard of cutting his shins), and so got relief. Shortly after he entered a swale, and getting his feet caught in long grass, fell. As the place was a favorable one for concealment, he lay still. When his pursuers came over a knoll which overlooked the long grass he saw them, but they did not see him, and so passed by. Murphy loaded his rifle and went on his way rejoicing. He knew from the beginning what his fate would be if caught, for he had an Indian scalp in his pocket, and the same hairless redskin's moccasins on his feet.

He had not gone far before he found that he was headed by a savage, which discovery was mutual, and they simultaneously took trees. After dodging each other some time Murphy drew his ramrod, placed his hat on it, and gently moved it on one side of the tree. The Indian put a ball through it and it dropped, whereupon he ran up to obtain the scalp and received Murphy's bullet through his breast, exclaiming as he fell, "O-wah!" which, being interpreted, means, "Scalp stocked."

Lieut. Boyd, who attempted to escape with Murphy, but who was captured, being less fleet of foot, suffered horrible torture. The Seneca Indians made an incision in his abdomen, fastened his intestines to a tree, and compelled him to move around it till they were all drawn out. They then enlarged his mouth, dug his nails out, cut his tongue out and his ears off, cut his nose off and put it in his mouth, dug his eyes out, and as he was dying, cut off his head, which was their most humane act. Truly, [illegible] "the tender mercies of the wicked are cruel."

The sickening details are given to show what perils our forefathers were daily exposed to while fighting, that we, their descendants, might be free.

Murphy's tortures would have been more exquisite, if possible, than Boyd's; but the gun was not made that could kill him, nor the Indian born who could capture this fortunate Irishman. One of them once tried a trick which was vain, during the latter part of the Revolution. The hero had a cow with a bell on its neck so that he might the better find her in the woods. A shrewd Indian took this bell off the cow's neck and put it on his own. Then he went jingling about the woods, so as to get Murphy within killing or capturing distance. But the scout knew too well the different music produced by a cow and an Indian, and so, driving his beast quietly home from another part of the woods he left the ding-dong warrior to make music for the blue-jays till he was tired.

Murphy's hair-breadth escapes were many in number. In the nick of time something was certain to turn up to help him out. He had at one time a double barreled rifle, a weapon unknown to the Indians in those days. He was chased by a party, and although he could generally out-run them, on this occasion they gained upon him. So he turned and killed one. Then he ran on and while sheltered from the view of his enimies, by a clump of bushes, managed to load the empty barrel. As they gained upon him still he stopped and shot another. The party pursued him without firing, being particularly anxious to roast him before a slow fire, or show him some such warm hospitality, which anxiety would not be satisfied if they shot him dead. They were sure of taking him, and he felt that his luck deserted him at last. Utterly exhausted, he treed, and as they advanced, killed another redskin. To his astonishment the party immediately fled. Murphy afterwards ascertained that, seeing him fire three times without seeing him load once, they imagined he had a Great Medicine of a gun that would shoot forever.

I have said that Timothy Murphy was never wounded or captured, but I am in error. Cupid hit him once, and hit him hard. Margaret Feeck captured him.

Timothy found leisure among his many engagements to fall in love with Margaret. Margaret reciprocated. But this being "true love" its course was not allowed "to run smooth." Old Mr. and Mrs. Feeck were opposed to the match, and they forbid Margaret to leave the house alone, on any account, and Timothy was forbidden to enter it.

Margaret and Murphy communicated frequently in spite of father, mother, and vigilant cousins. The most serious obstacle in the way of the young peoples' marriage was the necessity of publishing the bans for several Sundays at a religious meeting. If the Feecks heard of this, they would redouble their precaution. It was the law that the minister should publish these bans, if there was a minister—but there wasn't. He had "run away and left his flock to the mercy of the wolves." So John Van Dyck, a good old deacon, read them the requisite number of times, at conference meetings about the country, and gave Timothy a certificate to that effect.

Then Murphy immediately prepared to move upon the enemy's works. He sent a message to Margaret: Come, for all things are now ready.

She sent word: I will be at the river at the time appointed.

That night she went to milk as usual, attended by a cousin. The task accomplished, the girls separated, the cousin going to her own home near by. Margaret then emptied some of her milk on the ground, and, going to her mother, told her that one cow was astray, and had not been milked. "Then," said her mother, "you must go after it. The cow must be milked." So the young lady took another pail and left the house, light-hearted and bare-footed. Hanging her pail on a stile in the cow-yard, she stole away in the direction of the river, as the darkness came on. Just think of what she braved—wild beasts and wilder Indians were about her, but the darkness, which was also about her, befriended her.

It was a time when men went armed, and she was an unarmed woman. It was simply heroic, that act!

Timothy Murphy, with three trusty comrades, crossed the river and went down the west bank to see his intended. Having passed the appointed spot, he began to fear that she had not been able to get away, and he retraced his steps, gently calling her name. Great was his astonishment to hear her answer from the opposite shore. Fearing that she might be stopped, she had not tarried at the rendezvous, but had forded the Schoharie river in the dark, though the water was cold—for it was on October 1, 1789, that she ran away.

Murphy was mounted. He took her behind him, and they were soon at the fort.

There was racing and chasing at the homestead that night. Old Feeck, as soon as the fact that Margaret had run away, and not been abducted, was made certain, started for the fort. When he reached it, the sentinel took a shot at him, but fortunately missed his aim. He could not prevail on his daughter to come home, so he went there himself, and gave her up.

Miss Feeck's female friends made up a dress for her—one lending a gown and shoes, another a bonnet, a third stockings, for she had no wedding trousseau at all, you will observe. Then the next day a party escorted them to Schenectady, and the happy lovers were condensed into one by the Rev. Mr. Johnson.

Here comes into the narrative another little incident, which shows what stirring times there were. The garrison at the fort had arranged a ball for the evening of the return from Schenectady, but only a few figures had been danced, when a scout returned and reported that he had seen Indians near by, whereupon the linstock was applied to the alarm gun, and hunting Indians was the order of the day, or rather night.

When the Feecks learned that she was married, they were highly indignant with their daughter. After some time the mother became anxious to effect a reconciliation with her and have her come home, but she could not think of admitting her Irish husband with her.

"Never," said the daughter, "as much as I love home and parents, never will I enter your house until my husband enters it with me." Her parents tried her hard, sending repeated messages. Her answer was always the same.

One pompous cousin volunteered to mediate. He came to [illegible] grief. He told her how much her father loved her. "Yes," said she, "when at home I had two striped linen petticoats and a calico frock; now see how I'm dressed!" she added, flouncing the skirt of a rich silk gown, "this shows who cares the most for me."

As old Feeck was rich and young Murphy was poor, this argument sent Cousin Cornelius home quietly.

By-and-by the old people heard that Murphy was going to take his wife to Pennsylvania. This ended the opposition. A family treaty was formed, and escorted by about thirty officers and soldiers, and a party of citizens, martial music playing, the happy couple marched to the homestead. As they drew near, old Mr. Feeck ran forward, opened the gate and extended a hand to Murphy and his wife, saying, "You have my daughter, but you shall not take her to Pennsylvania; I have enough to support us all."

Murphy gave the old man's hand a pinch which he long remembered, and said in his usual loud tone: "She's no longer yours, Master Fake; she's my wife. I didn't marry her to get your property; I can take care of her myself."

Both parents wept for joy. It is not known whether there was a dry eye in the party; but there was certainly not a dry whistle, for—if I dare tell it in temperance terms—they drank up ten gallons of wine that night.

This reconciliation took place about a month after the marriage, from which time the couple made their home at Mr. Feeck's. On the death of her parents, Margaret inherited their valuable estate, and I believe her descendant still lives on the patrimonial farm.

Mrs. Murphy lived 27 years, and died at the age of 44, in 1807, so she was 17 years old when she ran away, and Murphy was 29.

At the war's end Murphy became a farmer. It was characteristic of this man to live for others, and he died from disease contracted in saving the children of a neighbor from a winter's flood.

When peace was declared and our independence acknowledged, many of the Schoharie Indians had the assurance to return and settle among a people whose houses and barns they had burned, whose friends and relatives they had killed. There was one Indian named Seths Henry, who had killed more Schoharie people than any other man. He would sometimes leave a war club upon the dead body of a victim, with a horrid row of notches thereon, each notch standing for a scalp taken. An energetic savage, he once led a party from Fort Niagara, in the winter, to capture certain Schoharie patriots, and he succeeded, traveling six hundred miles through the snow to do so. He, too, had the audacity to come back, but he was too much upon his guard. One day he started from one house to go to another. Timothy Murphy was observed to go in the same direction shortly afterward, and it is a curious coincidence that, as far as can be ascertained, Seths Henry never reached any place in this world.

After this there began to be mysterious disappearances of Tories and Indians, and it was to be noted that coincident with a disappearance would be a brush-heap fire in the vicinity in which the missing person was last seen. It is to be supposed that calcined human bones might have been found in the ashes of these brush fires. The remaining renegades and savages took the hint and departed that land before they departed this life, so the country was cleared of this vermin.

Timothy Murphy was a capital stump speaker, and was a political power in Schoharie county. He brought Wm. C. Bouck into public life, which brought him into the gubernatorial chair of the Empire State.

He died in 1818, full of years and of honor,

A fine old Irish gentleman,

Treatment of the Hair.

"What shall I do for my hair?" is a question that comes to our sanctum from various quarters every month; and were it as convenient to engraft artificial hair as to insert artificial teeth, hair doctors would be as plenty as dentists. No one is to be reprimanded for desiring a brilliant and vigorous growth of the hair, for it indicates a good vital constitution; nor for envying a wavy or curling disposition of the natural head covering, for it is useful as well as ornamental. But the health of the bodily integument and appendages are developed from the organs within; all vital structures are developed from the center to the circumference, hence the normal condition and integrity of the hair, as well as that of the skin and nails, depend on the general health.

Stimulating viands and irritating condiments, the excessive use of salt, pickles, saleratus, etc., predispose to disease of the scalp and baldness. Many young persons injure and finally destroy the roots of the hair by frequent washes or oily preparations. These may produce a soft, glossy appearance for a time, but premature decay is the sure and not very remote result of their employment. —Science of Health.

Temperance and Health.—Beer makes heavy sleepers, and persons drinking it are not fit to be trusted with the care of infants or sick people. In England the notion is widespread that the use of beer is beneficial to mothers with nursing babies, its deleterious influence on milk being quite overlooked. This being the custom, it might be expected that now and then a little life or a feeble life must be sacrificed to the stupid slumbers of mother or nurse; but the assertion of a London coroner is an astounding one, that 3,000 children are suffocated annually in England from this cause. In Bavaria, whose women are more addicted to beer-drinking than any others on the globe, mothers are forbidden to have children under two years of age in the same bed with them.

Prussian vital statistics show an average of 4.6 births to each marriage.

Foreign.

London need snow plows last winter for the first time.

Birmingham is furnishing Russia and Germany with rifles.

Emilio Castelar has issued a Spanish "Life of Lord Byron."

The Scotch pig iron product in 1872 was 1,100,000 tons, against 1,760,000 tons in 1871, and 1,206,000 tons in 1870. The average price in 1870 was 54s 4d per ton; in 1871, 58s 11d, and in 1872, 101s 6d. The number of furnaces has decreased in ratio with the product, notwithstanding the increased price. In 1870 there were 160; in 1871, 127, and in 1873 only 123.

A new iron-clad man-of-war was launched at Copenhagen on the 12th ult. It is a casemated steamer of 2,500 horse power, 230 feet in length, 47 feet wide, and gauging 15¼ feet. Denmark now possesses three iron-clad frigates, with respectively sixteen, eighteen, and twenty-four cannon, and four floating iron-clad batteries with respectively two, three, and four cannon.

The religious census of Dublin shows that in the city and county taken together there is a population of 401,262 persons, of whom 307,144 are Catholics, 79,186 Protestant Episcopalians, 7,512 Presbyterians, and 7,420 of all other denominations. Out of 401,962 persons 112,889 are "illiterate," of whom 98,456 are Catholics, or about 1 in 3; while the other 14,433 are Protestants, or about 1 in 6¼.

The friendship growing up between Prussia and Japan has received a new manifestation by the resolve of the Japanese Government to copy the European institution of a ministry of public worship and instruction, strictly upon the Prussian model, securing the services of a Prussian schoolman for its introduction. Negotiations are now in progress with several eminent Prussian pedagogues.

The lion's share in the allotment of space at the Vienna Exhibition has been assigned to France. She is to have no less than four saloons and four galleries out of the eight saloons and eight galleries set apart for exhibition of foreign—that is, non-Austrian—art. Contrary to their traditional custom, the French are going to contribute the choicest gems out of their Luxembourg collection and other museums, and hope thereby to excel all other nations.

It is estimated that the average income of English authors is not more than one hundred and fifty pounds a year, yet Mr. Charles Dickens, Jr., reports that he is unable to find any one to occupy the houses for poor authors, recently erected at Stevenage. "We have been," he writes, "wholly unable to find a poor member of the guild willing to become a tenant of one of the houses, and it is to members of the guild alone that, according to the terms of our act, its benefits are applicable." What a humiliating failure of an enterprise for which Dickens, and Lemon, and Forster acted, for which Dickens read so often, and to which Bulwer contributed so liberally!

A Crewless Ship.

The Liverpool Globe's correspondent at Gibraltar writes:

There is a little vessel in this port whose recent history is even still more mysterious than that of the Murillo, and perhaps similarly tragical to that of the Northfleet. The Mary Celeste, an American brigantine, was fallen in with by a British vessel some four hundred miles east of the Azores, and brought by her to Gibraltar on Dec. 13. When discovered she was under foremast staysail and jib, and under this light canvas she had been pursuing her way for ten days without a soul an board, the last entry on the ship's log being on on Nov. 24. No other papers were found on board—manifest, bills of lading, every document which could have thrown any light upon the history of the derelict had been removed—and up to the present time, although the inquiry is still going on, not the slightest clue has been traced to account for the desertion of the vessel, and even conjecture is at fault. The cargo, consisting of barrels of spirits, is untouched, with the exception of one cask which had started. There are no signs of the vessel having suffered from bad weather in any single respect, the most minute examinations having failed to detect any injury above the water or below it. A harmonium in the captain's cabin and the music-books are all in their places untouched by salt water. A little vial of oil was still standing by a sewing-machine, and a reel of cotton and thimble had not yet rolled off the table. Nor had the cabin been plundered, for its contents, belonging to a lady and child, were of considerable value. A sword was in its scabbard, rusty, and with marks of blood having been wiped off. There are marks like sharp cuts on the topgallant rail and on both sides of the vessel's bows, which appear to have been done on purpose. Whether this points to any act of violence, and with what motive committed—why the vessel was left under sail, or, in apparent absence either of plunder or of peril, why she was ever deserted at all—is still an absolute mystery, for up to the present moment no trace has been found of the lady or child, of the captain, or any one of the crew.

An Unprofitable Errand Boy.—A family named Granby, living on Randolph street, have been in the habit of sending their dog to the butcher's after meat, giving him a basket and the money, and writing what was wanted on a slip of paper. The butcher yesterday presented a bill of three dollars to the surprised dog owner, who had never failed to send the change by the dog. He sent fifty cents in the basket yesterday morning and watched the dog. Before the animal reached the shop a negro appeared with a piece of meat for him, and while the dog was devouring it the fellow stole the money from the basket and then outran Granby and the butcher.—Detroit Free Press.

With the exception of Louis XVIII, not one of the French monarchs has died at the Tuileries. Louis the XVI. was guillotined at La Place de la Revolution; Napoleon I. died in exile at St. Helena; Napoleon II. in exile at Reichstadt; Charles X. in exile at Holyrood; Louis Philippe in exile at Claremont; Napoleon III. at Chiselhurst.

How to Wash Dishes.

In the matter of washing dishes many servants are wofully deficient, and yet a "sticky" plate or cup is the abhorrence of all neat house-keepers. To avoid unnecessary annoyance, we should teach our domestics to wash first, and dry immediately, all glassware, then cups, saucers, and spoons; after that the greasy dishes from which all scraps have been scraped; then the knives and forks, taking care that the knife-handles are not put in the hot-water, as that loosens and blackens them, while they are readily cleansed by a damp cloth. Silver forks, whether solid or plated, should never be tossed about in contact with steel knives, as the latter are sure to inflict unseemly scratches.

The water for washing glass and delicate china should never be very hot, and even granite or stone ware should not be in water where you cannot easily bear your hand, for though the dishes may not actually break, they soon become full of unsightly small dark checks. A very little soap suffices, more than just the quantity to remove grease is apt to leave a disagreeable roughness. For delicately painted French china, fair warm soft water, without any soap, is best. Two tin pans, one for washing and the other for rinsing, rather deeper than milk-pans, and painted on the outside to prevent rust, are often preferred to the wooden dish-tubs. Hanging from pegs over the sink should always be kept a hemmed dish-cloth (if unhemmed it is sometimes apt to find its way, unaided of course, to the fire or the barnyard, to save the trouble of washing it), a teacup towel, and one for saucepans, etc. One of the first, two of the second, and four of the third named, will ordinarily be sufficient for a week's use. All should be distinctly marked that there may be no excuse for taking a teacup towel to wipe the spider. All milk utensils should be thoroughly scalded with boiling suds, then rinsed, wiped with a cloth wrung as dry as possible from hot water, and kept in an airy place. Singular as it may seem, a perfectly dry towel should never be employed to wipe tins which have been used for holding milk. The reason is that a stickiness is left behind by the dry towel, which will soon become a sourness.—Hearth and Home.

Home After Business Hours.

The road along which the man of business travels in the pursuit of competence or wealth is not a macadamized one, nor does it ordinarily lead through pleasant scenes and by well-springs of delight. On the contrary, it is a rough and rugged path, beset with "wait-a-bit" thorns, and full of pit-falls, which can only be avoided by the watchful care of circumspection. After every day's journey over this worse than rough turnpike road, the wayfarer needs something more than rest; he requires solace, and deserves it. He is weary of the dull prose of life, and athirst for the poetry. Happy is the business man who can find that solace and poetry at home. Warm greetings from loving hearts, fond glances from bright eyes, and welcome shouts from children, the many thousand little arrangements for comfort and enjoyment that silently tell of the thoughtful and expectant love, the gentle ministrations that disencumber us into an old and easy seat before we are aware of it; these and like tokens of affection and sympathy constitute the poetry which reconciles us to the prose of life. Think of this, ye wives and daughters of business men! Think of the toils, the anxieties, the mortifications and wear that fathers undergo to secure for you comfortable homes, and compensate them for their trials by making them happy at their own firesides.

Government Assumption of Railroads.

Such has been the success of the assumption of the railroads in Belgium, and of the entire telegraphic service in England, by Government, that it is now in agitation in Ireland to have the whole of the Irish railways purchased by Government, in order to cheapen transportation and increase facilities for trade and travel.

In Massachusetts, the venerable Josiah Quincy advocates the purchase by the State or the United States of one or more of the great railroad thoroughfares between the East and West, and for the same ends; that is, the reduction of fares and freights. He cites the ownership of the Erie canal by New York State, which has been of incalculable benefit to that State, and which can neither be sold nor leased. This position of Mr. Quincy has attracted a great deal of attention, and has served to develop public sentiment in a way that the railway monopolists evidently did not expect. Mr. Quincy expresses the belief that the National Government will eventually be compelled to own the road-bed and stations of the whole of the leading railways. About the only real difficulty in the way is the vast influence of the existing monopolies; but it is undeniable that an immense majority of the people of all sections are directly hostile to these monopolies, and ready to embrace any remedy likely to be effectual in the way of reform.—Philadelphia North American.

An Infamous Order.

The Missouri Pacific railroad has issued an order which imposes on operatives the duty of preventing the public and the press from obtaining any information relating to accidents which may happen on that line. The St. Louis Globe characterizes this as an infamous order, in which opinion we fully concur. The theory that such an order prevents exaggerated reports is untenable. The results of accidents are first looked for by an anxious public; then they inquire into the causes. If the company is not to blame they need fear no inquiry into the cases, and the results cannot be changed one way or another. The public are entitled to the fullest information regarding accidents on railroads, which, as common carriers, are no exceptions to the general rule. Public sentiment, always generous, will exonerate a railroad company, as well as an individual, when there is no blame. Dame Partington attempted to sweep back the rising tide with her broom; as well may the railroad companies attempt to conceal the causes and results of accidents by the promulgation of special edicts and orders to their employes. Murder will out!

The frost penetrated the ground deeper last winter than it has for thirty years.

THE YOUNG MUSTACHE.

Oh, barber, spare that young mustache,
Nor touch a single hair;
Your razor, brush and other trash,
Must never venture there;
At last the bud has blossomed out,
By much caressing taught;
Its frail young tendrils how they sprout—
Then, barber, touch it not.

Though well laid out, and wide the field,
Whence this young mustache shoots,
The stubby soil no more can yield—
Oh, then guard then its roots;
For should the murderous blade sweep o'er
The curved lip's shadowy mist,
The tender plants would bloom no more—
Then, barber, oh, desist!

Think of the dear young girl, whose lip
Was wont so oft to press
That budding mouth, its sweets to sip—
Oh, think of her distress.
'Tis unfledged manhood's pride and joy,
With sighs and tears 'twas brought,
Let no rude stroke its life destroy—
Oh, barber, touch it not!

THE RATTLESNAIK.

The rattlesnaik iz ov a dull yaller color, from four to six feet in size, ackordin tew length, and all the way ov a bigness.

They hav a pizen tooth and a dedly natur.

On the further end ov their boddy they have some loose bones, which they kan play a tune upon, which makes the noize from which they take their name from.

There is only one remedy for the bite ov a rattlesnaik that I kno ov, and that iz whisky.

I have seen a man that had been bit bi one drink three quarts ov whisky, and be sober enuff all the time to jine the sons ov temprance.

I hope I never shall be bit bi a rattlesnaik, not so much on account of the snaik as on ackount ov the whisky.

I think three quarts ov whisky in mi person at onst would keep me drunk forevermore.

The grate mortal enemy of the snaiks is the hog.

I have seen a woods hog take after a rattlesnaik, and ketch him in running 50 yards, and with 3 rips and a snap, tare mister rattlesnaik into ribbons, and hen swallow him whole without saying grace.

The woods or wild hog is the grate eradikator. They will hunt for them like a setter-dog for a woodkok, and if the snaix sight them, they hav a way ov laying down in a mud-hole and soaking the pizen all out ov them.

THE HOOP SNAIK.

This remarkable snaik has a funny way ov taking their tail in their mouth and making a hoop ov themselfs. They can travel a good gait.

There iz a tradishun that the end ov their tale iz ov bone, and is filled with pizen, ov the most dedly dimenshuns, but I think this is only a lie.

Az I sed before, it is so natral tew lie about snaix that it iz a great wonder to me that they don't leave this world entirely, and take up their abode somewhare else, whare they kan have a fair show.

I am about 7 eights ov a mind tew believe that the hoop snaik iz one ov P. T. Barnum kind ov kritter, that yu pay yure money tew see in the menagare, and then take yure chances.

The only way tew git at the truth about snaix is tew believe all yu hear, and more tew.

Greece.—A new census of the kingdom of Greece was taken in 1870, the figures of which have only just been published. From them we learn that the total population of the kingdom at that time was 1,457,894, of whom 754,176 were males and 703,718 females. The increase during the last decade was 132,415, giving a yearly increase of 13,241 persons, or one per cent. in the total number. According to these returns, Greece is the healthiest country in Europe except Great Britian, and the most prolific next to Italy and Bavaria.

FARM AND GARDEN.

Horse-Tooth Corn.

variety of Indian corn called the egus or horse-tooth corn, has been ly introduced into France from ragua, which is asserted to be su or in many respects to those already wn to agriculturists. The point of ellence in this corn consists in its ilability as a fodder plant—the yield acre being nearly four times as great that of ordinary varieties—and its tivation for this purpose alone is high recommended. It attains a height from twelve to eighteen feet, and hen fully grown, the stalks are so stout hat they require to be divided longitu inally before they can be fed to cattle. he yield of grain is from one-fourth to ne-half greater than that of common corn; but it produces more bran in proportion, and less starchy matter, which, however, is of unusual whiteness. The principal objections to this corn are the length of time required for it to reach maturity, and the necessity of a very rich, fertile soil, with plenty of moisture, for its successful cultivation. When these conditions can be combined, and the season is long enough to permit the crop to mature, as in the Southern and Western States, it is probable that its cultivation might be profitably introduced into the United States.

Hot Bread.

Say what we will of the unhealthfulness of hot bread, it seems to be universally preferred and generally eaten. I am sure that I have tried in a small way to set a good example, but am often overruled by others. Now, in case of a little tea company, when I think good cold light bread and biscuits sufficient for the bread department, some one is very apt to say something like this: "Well, yes; the bread and biscuit are very well to have on the table, but you know everybody likes hot bread best, and you ought to have some muffins or waffles." Occasionally I have served up a dish of soaked crackers in the place of hot cakes, and they were very much preferred to the cold bread, just because they were warm. If I want to please the other half of my family about breakfast time, I serve up hot rolls, and try to have them light and well baked. Mrs. B. told me that her husband had insisted on having hot bread and strong coffee three times a day; and I remember that he died years before his prime of jaundice; do not know that his diet was to blame. I want to tell the lovers of hot bread that the risen dough will keep sweet a week or more in cold weather, if put in a cold place, and they can make out rolls or little loaves for every meal if they wish to. I do not know that freezing hurts the dough.—"Nellie," in Germantown Telegraph.

Utilizing Carcasses.

In answer to the question, How is the best way to dispose of dead animals, the Massachusetts Ploughman says: The most economical way is to cover the carcass six or eight inches deep with muck, and let it lie and decompose. It may take six months or more. It is better to put it within sight of the house if possible, so that it may be watched a little to keep the dogs and crows off. The muck or loam will absorb and retain the gases which are given off in the process of decomposition. After it has lain through a summer, fork over the mass and throw out the bones, add half a bushel of plaster or gypsum and another load of earth; let it lie a month or two longer, when it will be fit for use. The bones can be broken up as much as practicable, put into a cask and covered with ashes, to be kept moistened from time to time till they are softened. Every dead animal is worth saving, and it is very poor economy to haul it off to one side of the farm and leave it for the dogs and the crows.

Agricultural Experiments.

The Boston Journal of Chemistry says: Field experiments, as a rule, are deceptive, unless many circumstances are taken into account which are usually overlooked. What is usually known regarding the previous agricultural condition of the fields experimented upon? What account is taken of meteorological conditions, dry seasons and wet seasons? It is possible for a good artificial manure to do positive harm to a crop in a very dry season, while an indifferent or valueless compound would do no injury. It is therefore apparent that we are liable to be misled by experiments with fertilizers, and that the reports so frequently made of experimental labors must be read with an intelligent understanding of what is necessary to give such experiments positive value.

Cottonwood.

"This is emphatically the new settlers' grove tree," says Mr. Ebber Stone, of Iowa. It will make more fuel, more clear lumber, and afford as good protection as any other tree raised. If grown in a thicket it will self-prune and make a tall, straight growth, but when sufficient space is given it forms a handsome spreading tree. It is readily transplanted, but we prefer to propagate from cuttings. These may be prepared in winter, but it is as well to cut them just before setting; if done before the buds start, make the cuttings ten inches long, sharpened at the lower end, using last year's wood. Set in rows at the desired distance, and so deep as to leave only one or two buds above the surface.

Planting Shade Trees.

In planting a row of shade trees along a road, or avenues leading from farm house to the gate, only one kind of trees should be used. It is bad taste to set out an elm, then a lombardy poplar or an ash, and thus mix all kinds together. Use only one kind, and those as nearly the same size and height as possible. A variety of trees in such long rows would be about like an architect using a variety on the pillars of a temple. First a Corinthian, then a Tuscan, etc., in the same row of pillars.

Propriety of Washing Butter.

In reference to the preparation of good table butter, Dr. Wilkens Pogarth remarks that there is a rather common belief that the process of washing injures its peculiar fine flavor, and renders the butter more perishable. The former part of the proposition Dr. Pogarth admits; yet thinking the use of fresh water indispensable for removing the milk and hardening the butter, he recommends its application directly in the churn, avoiding working and kneading by hand or spatula. Butter which keeps well is made in Holstein, by repeated salting and heavy pressure, without the use of water; but it is too salt to be considered fine table butter.

Water-Proof Pasteboard.

One of the cheapest and most effectual coverings to render wood perfectly water-proof, and increase its durability, and which will impart to pasteboard the appearance and strength of wood, is that employed in many ways by the Chinese, according to tests made with a sample sent from Pekin by Dr. Scherzer. It may be prepared, as a slightly viscid fluid fit for immediate use, by stirring into three parts of fresh serum of blood (or defibrinated blood) four parts of dry slaked lime and some alum. It should be laid on twice, or at most three times, in order to render articles perfectly water-proof.

Sub-Soiling.

Mr. Gill, near Columbus, Ohio, had a tract of land which had been cultivated in corn for forty years. As an experiment he plowed ten acres to the depth of eight inches, and then sub-soiled eight inches—making sixteen inches. Adjoining, he plowed ten acres the usual depth. The former was planted May 10, the latter May 7. Both planted with the same kind of corn, and received the same culture. On that which he plowed and sub-soiled sixteen inches deep, he raised 120 bushels per acre, while on the latter he had 40 bushels. Comment is unnecessary.

The Shah's European Tour.

The Perseveranza publishes a letter from a citizen of Milan, who has commercial relations with Teheran, containing the following details regarding the vists of the Shah of Persia to Europe. The journey is definitely fixed for the month of April next, the Persian monarch having been officially invited to the Universal Exhibition, at Vienna. He will be accompanied by the principal nobles of the Empire, with the pomp befitting the "King of Kings." The molachs, or priests, oppose the journey of their Sovereign to Europe, but the latter remains firm in his purpose. He is prond of the idea that he will be the first Shah who will have abandoned the old usages which have been maintained by the influence of the priests, and which prevented the Sovereigns of Persia from leaving their own dominions, and above all from setting foot on European soil. The sacerdotal influence is the main obstacle to advancement in Persia; but it will be greatly shaken by the impressions which the Sovereigns and his Ministers will bear away from their European travels. The Shah will visit St. Petersburg, Vienna, Berlin, Paris, and perhaps London, then Constantinople, probbably going there by way of Italy.

Dress Plainly.

Some one has given the following reasons why people should dress plainly on Sunday. These reasons are as valid on any other day in the week. Here they are:

1. It would lighten the burden of many who now find it hard to maintain their place in society.
2. It would lessen the force of the temptations which often lead men to barter honor and honesty for display.
3. If there was less strife in dress at church, people in moderate circumstances would be more likely to attend.
4. Universal moderation in dress at church would improve the worship by the removal of many wandering thoughts.
5. It would enable all classes of people to attend church in unfavorable weather.
6. It would lessen, on the part of the rich, the temptation to vanity.
7. It would lessen, on the part of the poor, the temptation to be envious and malicious.
8. It would save valuable time on the Sabbath.
9. It would relieve our means from serious pressure, and thus enable us to do more for good enterprises.

THE TWO EXTREMES.—Two classes of medical thinkers attempt to cure disease by opposite modes of treatment. One class forces the system into preternatural activity; the other depresses and weakens it. Both are wrong. To inflame the blood of an invalid with medicated alcohol is as dangerous as to apply undue steam pressure to a weak boiler; and to prostrate the physical energy, which is the natural opponent of disease, by depleting treatment, is an act of almost equal temerity. There is a medium between these two extremes, and DR. JOSEPH WALKER, to whom the world owes the famous CALIFORNIA VINEGAR BITTERS, has been fortunate enough to strike it. He has produced from simple vegetable elements, without the admixture of any distilled or fermented fluid, a specific comprising the important properties of a wholesome tonic, a gentle evacuant, a purifier of the secretions, a pulmonic, a sedative, and a powerful anti-bilious agent. Never before were these six sanative qualities comprehended in one medicine, and never before did one medicine cure so many different diseases. Dyspepsia, liver complaint, diseases of the kidneys, rheumatism, intermittent fever, disorders of the bowels, gout, nervous affections, and maladies proceeding from impurity of the blood, are only a few of the bodily ills for which VINEGAR BITTERS is considered an unfailing remedy.—[Com.

The Laws of Health.

It is useless for State Legislatures to pass laws for the preservation of the public health, if the great law of self-preservation, which depends for its enforcement upon the will of the individual, is suffered to remain a dead letter. There is scarcely an adult member of the community, of either sex, in this country, who has not seen the testimony in favor of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, furnished over their own signatures by persons of acknowledged eminence in science, literature, art, commerce, and every department of business and professional life. These witnesses have declared in the most explicit terms that the preparation is a safeguard against epidemics, a sovereign remedy for dyspepsia, a valuable anti-bilious medicine, promoter of appetite, a genial and harmless stimulant, a good acclimating medicine, a strengthener of the nerves, a general invigorant, a protection against the deleterious effects of malaria and impure water, and that it imparts a degree of vigor and activity to the vital forces which is not communicated by any other of the tonics and stomachics in use. Under these circumstances the self-preservative law of nature should teach every rational person who, either by reason of inherent debility or in consequence of exposure to unwholesome influences, is in peril of losing the greatest of all temporal blessings, health, the importance of using the Bitters as a defensive medicine. Dyspeptics who neglect to give it a trial are simply their own enemies. It is guaranteed to cure indigestion in all its forms, and the bilious and nervous will find nothing in the whole range of official and proprietary medicines which will afford them the same relief.

IT IS WELL TO GET CLEAR OF a Bad Cough or Cold the first week, but it is safer to rid yourself of it the first forty-eight hours—the proper remedy for the purpose being Dr. Jayne's Expectorant.

The Auburn Courier

Thursday, April 3d, 1873.

Senator Pratt voted "no" on the salary fraud, and Senator Morton dodged it. Morton had a friend 'round the corner that wanted to see him on business.

The Radical party says it is not responsible for the salary steal. If not, who is? It was evident from the vote that the measure could not become a law over the veto of the President. If Grant had vetoed the bill there would have been an end to the steal. But this he would not do. He made haste to attach his signature to it, as it put $100,000 additional into his own pocket.

It is announced that general Freemont has been sentenced in France to imprisonment of five years, and to pay a fine of 5,000 frances for his connection of the sale in Paris of the bonds of his Railroad. The General, it is confidently believed will not be imprisoned in Paris until he arrives there; though he may be invited by the extradition laws to go over the seas and be imprisoned, and if so invited, will probably accept.

◆

When the salary robbing bill came to General Grant on the third ult., he knew perfectly well what the people thought of it, and he further knew that some of the best men of his own party opposed it. But he signed the bill without a moments hesitation. He signed one million six hundred thousand dollars away, one hundred thousand he received himself! General Grant the next day made an inaugural address, and gave the public to understand that he conducted his office in good faith, and that he felt that the confidence of the country was with him. Compare this appropriation of $100,000 of the public money by this President now, when the country is struggling under an enormous debt and the action of another president in 1789 when the country was working out of a very small debt. Says General Washington, at the close of his inaugural, April 30, 1789: "When I was first honored with a call into the service of my country, then on the eve of an arduous struggle for its liberties, the light in which I contemplated my duty required that I should renounce every pecuniary compensation. From this resolution I have in no instance departed; and being still under the impression which produced it, I must decline as inapplicable to myself any share in the personal emoluments which may be indespensibly included to a permament provision for the executive department."

Mean.

Gen. Grant constantly misses opportunities of doing creditable things. Here for instance is his son Frederick, who was carrird through West Point by Presidential power and not by his own talent and industry, and who was afterwards sent to travel in Europe at the expense of the public, in violation of the spirit, if not the letter of the army regulations. This young man has now been assigned to the staff of Lieut General Sheridan, of Chicago, and become thereby at one jump a Lieutenant-colonel, instead of a second lieutenant. In order to give him this high place and high pay, Major George A. Fortsythe of the Ninth Cavalry one of the bravest of the brave, often tried in battle, and scarred with many wounds, has been taken from the post which he has long filled on Sheridan's staff and sent back to his own regiment.

Now this is one of the opportunities, but it has not merely been missed, it has been abused. It would be a great deal better for young Grant, and still better for his father's credit, if instead of giving him this soft place in Chicago, the President had sent him to take his chances with his company like other young officers, and to earn what promotion he gets by his own merits. It is a great pity that General Grant would continue to confirm in such a manner as this, the opinion that he regards the Presidency as a kind of private possession which can be applied by him, without disgrace to the comfort and enrichment of himself and his family.

The extra session of the U. S. Senate, called by the proclamation of the President, adjourned sine die on the afternoon of the 26th.

Look At The Record!

At the close of the last session of congress, at least five cases of corruption in the Senate, some of them of a flagrant character, remained to be disposed of. The guilty ones were Caldwell, Harlan, Pomeroy, Patterson of New Hampshire, and Clayton.

What was done in regard to them in the last Senate? Harlan and Pomeroy were whitewashed, and Patterson, Caldwell and Clayton were sent over to the new Senate.

What has the new Senate done? Of course the old Senate knew that the new Senate could not take jurisdiction in Patterson's case, because he would not be a member. Though a committee of the old Senate had unanimously recommended the expulsion of Patterson, for the grave offense of bribery and perjury, the Senate, in order to shield him, resorted to the trick of allowing his case to be sent to their successors for final action, they all the time being aware that the tribunal to which they had turned it over, had no power to act upon it. So Patterson was allowed to escape by this mean contemptable dodge.

In the last Senate, Caldwell was proven to have obtained his seat by bribery. His case came up in the new Senate, he being a member of that body. After spending three weeks in delivering arguments, and examining precedents to determine whether bribery was one of the 'qualifications,' for Senatorial honors specified to the constitution, the Senate allowed Caldwell to resign and go home to Kansas and try it again.

Claytons' case in some respects was worse than any of the others. To obtain his seat, he had not only been guilty of corruption, but of stupendous frauds which struck at the very foundation of orderly governments. The testimony was voluminous, and on the plea that they had not had time to examine it, Senators passed a resolution giving the culprit a certificate of good character, and let him go.

So much for the old members. Three new ones come in stained from head to foot, Patterson of South Carolina, and Jones of Nevada are charged with having bought their way into the Senate, while Allison of Iowa, was proven before the Poland committee, to have been as deeply involved in the Credit Mobiler corruption as any other member of Congress. What does the new Senate propose to do with these three gentlemen? Nothing!

Such is the record made up by the Senate of the United States within one month, in regard to these eight members! If Senators do not blush as they contemplate it, their constituents surely do.

◆

The Marquis de Chesseloup Laubal, who died in France on Monday, was a prominent official in the reign of Louis Philipe and clung tenaciously to the old regime. Mrs James Gordon Bennet, whose death was announced from Saxony, was the widow of the owner of New York Herald and a woman of force of will. She married Mr. Bennet when he was struggling under the enormous discouragements, that attend the journalist, and aided him by the strength and constancy of her womanly nature. Later, when he grew enormously rich, she relapsed somewhat either through ill health or indiffer ence, and for years the husband and wife were residents of not only separate homes but different hemispheres. Mrs. Bennet bought a charming villa in Nice, in 1860 and has lived there ever since.

That Consolidation.

We take the following from the Fort Wayne Sentinel: "It is reported on the street that an election of the stockholders of the Fort Wayne, Jackson & Saginaw Railroad Company will soon be held to to ratify the sale (consolidation) of that road, recently made to the Detroit & Eel River Railroad Company. It is proposed we understand, to call the new corporation the Detroit, Fort Wayne & Logansport Railroad Company. Why Fort Wayne should be named as a point on that line, when the cars will run some 20 miles north of us, we have not learned, but presume it will be to pay us back, in part, for the $100,000 of city bonds, the $50,000 in cash, and the promise of 20 acres of the City Park which we gave them. To name Fort Wayne as a point on this line and run a side track down to us from Auburn will be what we will have for this expenditure. We are not faultfinders, but we cannot but think that a grave mistake was made by somebody in not getting more for our money than we are likely to get. We do not like to admit it, but it now looks as though we had been the dupes of somebody. This new line having failed to make a satisfactory arrangement with the Muncie road, will take their Indianapolis and Louisville passengers on to the crossing of the Indianapolis, Peru & Chicago Railroad, north of Peru. It would be clearly their interest to do so, in any event.

The following will explain itself.

Consolidation not Concluded.

To the Editor of the Jackson Daily Citizen.

A statement has been going the rounds of the press, that a consolidation had been effected of the Fort Wayne Jackson & Saginaw, Detroit, Hillsdale & Indiana, Detroit, Eel River & Illinois Railroads, I wish you would correct the statement.—The fact being that the Directors of these roads have agreed upon a basis of consolidation to be submitted as by law required, to the stockholders of the respective companies at some future day for their final action. Prior to that time each of the companies has many obligations to perform, which are conditions precedent, and the non performance of which by either would overthrow the proposed arrangement, so the interested public will observe that the result is no means certain, although stated to have been concluded. Yours respectfully,

P. B. LOOMIS,
Pres't Ft. W. J. & S. R. R. Co.

EXTENSIVE AGRICULTURAL DEPOT

Machinery for Our Farmers.

The time is fast drawing near when our farmers must have recourse to the varied articles of machinery, now brought to a high state of perfection, to enable them to plant, cultivate and harvest the extensive crops annually produced in this country. It is necessary then for them to look about and ascertain the best point at which these machines can be obtained.—Plows will be the first called into requisition, and we believe Auburn possesses special inducements for the purchasers of these implements. Next and most important in demand is the celebrated American Machine, the Reaper and Mower, of which there are many kinds, operated differently for the accomplishment of the same object. The best ingenuity of the age has been devoted for years in perfecting this machine, and to-day there are several that stand pre-eminent before the country. Whether you want a rear or side delivery, a self-raker or not, there are machines now made possessing one or more qualities to suit the preference of the farmer. Those who have not made a choice and desire to purchase a good machine, will do well to call at the extensive establishment just erected by D. D. Snyder, Esq., at this place, where a large assortment of machinery is on hand for the inspection of the farming community.

Mr. Snyder has shown considerable enterprise and energy in his department, and is determined to be at the head in this line of business.

Last year he erected a large brick building 70 feet long 25 wide and three stories high in which he has gathered and is gathering the various products of our manufactories of farming implements, and with the facilities he now possesses of exhibiting them, we feel confident that purchasers will be largely benefitted by a visit to his ware rooms.

He is agent for the very best Reapers & Mowers now made, and gives special attention to these machines. He also keeps all other machinery used by the farmer, such as: Threshers, Hay-rakes, Wagons Plows, Straw-cutters, &c.

We refer our readers with pleasure to this popular establishment, confident that the upright and honorable course which Mr. Snyder pursues, his candid and fair, dealing manner of conducting business, together with his excellent reputation for honesty and sobriety cannot fail to convince all that he is the right man in the right place, and worthy the patronage of all our citizens.

MEETING OF STOCKHOLDERS.

Notice is hereby given that a meeting of the stockholders of the Building, Loan and Savings Association will be held on Saturday Evening, April 5th

at the Court House, at which time an election of officers for the second year will take place.

J. B. CARBERRY, Pres't.
T. C. MAYS, Sec'y.

There are several of our citizens who refuse to give a cent to the Eel River subscription. One wants an office, another expects the people to patronize his store and while they do nothing for the town they want the town to do for them. The people will mark them in the future and the prompt and enterprising citizen will patronize none but those who are with him in these public improvements. They may expect to thrive upon the investments of others, and help reap a harvest from the seed sown by others, but they will be disappointed. Let it be generally understood those who aid in these enterprises should receive our hearty support. It has been suggested that a list of those who are too niggardly to subscribe be published, and we endorse the suggestion. It would not speak volumes for Auburn, however, and it should not be done until the last resort. Men too contemptably mean to give for the benefit of the community at large as well as themselves ought to be known to every one.

SPOT HIM.—A highly scented individual, who parts his hair in the middle, has been amongst us recently soliciting orders for pictures for a house in Huntington. There would be no harm in this if he did not try to build up his own house by running down another, a stroke of policy that most generally fails. He spoke in no complimentary terms of one of the best artists in this part of the State, Mr. W. W. Robbins, proprietor of the premium gallery at Huntington. We advise our citizens to give this agent a wide berth, and keep their hands on their pocket books. The Huntington Democrat, of last week, says:

There has been at times a gentleman among us delivering pictures, and taking orders for others. He is said to be an agent representing a house at Huntington; and we are also told he takes especial pains to speak disrespectfully of W. W. Robbins as an artist. Such conduct, in this community at least, will tend to injure the house he represents more than that of Mr. Robbins. The Premium Gallery is too well know here to be materially injured by such ungentlemanly conduct. The house the gentleman represents may do good work, but the Premium Gallery is universally acknowledged here to be the place to get the finest pictures that are taken in the county as the samples now among us will testify; and if the gentleman referred to above has not ascertained this fact, he can by making the proper inquiry.

Mouldings, Frames, Etc.

While at Toledo last week we visited the extensive manufactory of Osborn, Chase and Swayne, where mouldings and frames are made of most every patern and description. One would hardly suppose that the handsome, carved frames with which they are supplying a large trade were made by hand, and yet such is the case. This carving cannot be done by machinery, but requires a laborious application of muscle to bring it out as beautiful as it certainly is. It goes from one hand to another, each giving it a touch of their peculiar chisel, until the last gives it the final stroke. To see the vast stock of rough wood starting at one point, and coming out at another, as a beautifully wrought gilt frame or carved moulding so rapidly makes you wonder and then to know that a million feet of walnut is used annually, would make you think that the country would soon be supplied, but this establishment has been running for years and yet the demand is greater to-day than ever. This, of course is due to the excellent article they produce as they have facilities and advantages not possessed by any other manufactory. We found Mr. Osborn a genial clever gentleman, popular because of these excellent qualities and just the man to conduct an establishment of this kind.—His partners are also agreeable as well as enterprising and we don't wonder at the unbounded patronage they are daily receiving.

NOTICE.

To Whom It May Concern.

It has been currently reported that I had sold out my practice and my right to practice in this community, and that I am unworthy the confidence of the people, and various damaging statements have been made against me for the purpose of injuring my reputation and business, and for the purpose of misleading and prejudicing the minds of the people against me I, therefore, say to the public that any and all reports and statements above referred to are but the natural outflowings of the weak, narrow contracted and selfish mind from whence they emenated, and are entirely false and unfounded. I furthermore defy successful contradiction

J. J. LITTLEFIELD.

Auburn, April 3d, 1873.

"When a hen lays an egg," says a philosopher, "she cackles. It is hen nature. When a man gets in a new stock of goods it is human nature for him to crow over it. When the hen cackles people know that she has laid in some fresh stock, and feels rather proud of it. When the merchant opens his new styles, and blows his trumpet in the newspapers, people know that he has something on hand that is worth advertising. Blow your own trumpet once in a while. It won't hurt you or the trumpet either.' Our Auburn merchants can make the application for themselves. Let the people know you have new goods.

The other day, a lady, having occasion to leave her appartment for a few minutes locked the door and left a little child of two years playing upon the floor. When she returned, she was horrified to see the girl toying with a rat, which she held in one hand, and was affectionately caressing with the other. With a scream of dismay, the young mother rushed to its side, and, snatching up the rat proceeded to do up her hair with it.

The above is suggestive of a story we heard of two fast young men, who went to a neighboring town on a little business of their own, well provided with benzine, but what was their dismay on returning to the hotel for their team, after a few happy hours, to find that some wretch, regardless of their comfort, had drained their bottle to the last drop. What to do under the circumstances was the question; but suddenly a bright idea struck them. They would provide themselves with some loaf sugar, go to the drug store, and ask for a little corn juice to take some quinine in, and by this strategy, make up their loss and go on their way rejoicing. But their game did not work well under the new law. Their fond hopes were blasted. But to keep up the delusion, they said they would have to take the medicine anyhow—so they brought forth the powder put it into some water, and with wry faces swallowed the dose. There is a moral to this story, but if the shoe does not fit, don't put it on.—Kendallville Standard.

Now, Ruff, we never thought you would tell Meyers, but that accounts for your getting it so terribly mixed. The facts are, that the boys had two bottles; one contained whisky and the other succor oil. The latter is the one you stole, and we are informed that if ever you was in need of that article it was just then, as your brain whirled like the balance wheel of a thrasing machine and your tongue refused to wag. The whisky was not disturbed and the boys let it down with the greatest of ease. It made them feel high toned, no doubt, but they did'nt swap horses nor imagine the town was growing It don't profit a man to hunt for a saw mill that has been torn down before war; they are very apt to "get on the wrong track, and Auburn whisky, you know, Ruff (sic) makes a man generous hearted, and he would trade a horse for a mule just to please "Old Ben"

The way the boys come to make the mistake by getting into the drug store was: The proprietor was standing in the door as they passed, and the old man gapped, and a young saloon was visible (under the new law) and nothing was left only to try the sugar "cod." Having failed they passed the idle waste by laughing at you and the whoil.

In this world I gained my knowledge. Sing

CONGRESS IN BRIEF.

SENATE—EXTRA SESSION.

Thursday, March 20.—The Senate was engaged the most of the day in consideration of the Caldwell case. The feature of the debate was a sharp wordy encounter between Conkling and Schurz. The former alluded to to a Senator delivering political speeches at $200 a night. Schurz construed the remark as personal to himself, and characterized it as false; that he had not during the campaign received the sum named or any other sum for his speeches. Conkling then brought up the pay he had received for earlier campaign services. Schurz repeated his explanation that that matter took place before he was a Senator. Finally Conkling said he did not allude to Schurz in his first remark. The sparring was very sharp, and while in progress caused considerable excitement.

Friday, March 21.—A resolution was offered and referred to the Committee on Printing, providing that two bound copies of the Congressional Record for the session be furnished each Senator....A resolution was presented and ordered printed directing the Finance Committee to inquire what measures can be adopted to give the country a currency convertible into gold....Ferry (Ct.) offered an amendment to the resolutions reported by the Committee on Elections in the Caldwell case, so as to expel Caldwell instead of simply declaring his election void....There was a brief discussion, in Executive session, on the nomination of Casey as Collector of New Orleans.

Saturday, March 22.—The Senate was engaged all day in debating the Caldwell case, without coming to any conclusion.

A Well-Trained Eye.

Every occupation in life requires a mechanically trained eye. No mechanic can ever attain distinction unless he is able to detect ordinary imperfection at sight, so that he can see if things are out of plumb, out of level, out of square, and out of proper shape; and unless he can also detect disproportion or ill-shaped patterns. This is a great mechanical attainment. We say attainment, because it can be gained by any ordinary person. Of course there are defective eyes as there are other defective organs; the speech, for instance, is sometimes defective; but the eye is susceptible of the same training as any other organ. A very good way to discipline the mechanical eye is to first measure an inch with the eye, then prove it with the rule, then measure a half inch, then an eighth, and so on, and you will soon be able to discover at a glance the difference between a twelfth and sixteenth of an inch; then go three inches, six, twelve and so on. Some call this guessing; there is no guess work about it; it is measuring with the eye and mind. Acquire the habit of criticising for imperfections every piece of work that you see; do everyting as nearly as you can without measuring or spoiling it, or as nearly as you can trust the eye with its present training. If you cannot see things mechanically do not blame the eye for it; the fact is, the eye is not half as much at fault as a heedless mind, and a little training and care is all that is necessary for success.

A Great Bridge.

The proposed Hudson river bridge is to be one of the largest suspension bridges in the world. Its exact location will be four miles north of Peekskill—at Anthony's Nose. It will be 1,665 feet long between the towers, and 155 feet above the Hudson river water. It is to be suspended by 20 cables, made of 70,302 miles of steel wire, weighing, with the iron and steel in the bridge, 17,005 tons. It will be made strong enough to hold up safely 24,000 tons, and to break through with 25,171 tons. E. W. Serrell, the engineer, says 3,000,000 tons of coal from Pennsylvania, 54,000 tons of iron from Elizabethport, and 5,000,000 tons of through freight from the Midland and Erie, will pass over this bridge and over the New England railway, which will run from Turner's on the Erie road over the bridge to the New York, Boston and Montreal railroad.

Thirty years ago a man entered the city of New York in an almost penniless condition, and without a single acquaintance in the great wilderness of houses. To-day his name is known wherever humanity breathes. It is spoken of in every hamlet, is heard of in every city, and is as familiar to the worker in the mines as to his brother in the miles; and wherever language is known and ideas are expressed, the name of this penniless, unknown and uncouth lad of thirty years ago is uttered. It was John Smith.

The Dangerous Drift.

One of the gravest dangers which now menace our experiment of republican institutions springs from the seeming apathy of the masses in presence of startling events and their apparent indifference to the most compromising corruption in public life. Occasionally there are spasmodic signs of resentment, such as are now witnessed at the Credit Mobilier exposure; but they are rather angry paroxysms than the healthy and normal tone of public indignation. If the people were as vigilant, sensitive, and quick to censure venality as they were before this demoralization began, the outrages which have been perpetrated could never have come to pass, and crime would not have been condoned and protected by partisan power.

The excesses committed in the reconstructed States, and sanctioned by Executive authority, will almost defy belief when the future historian shall consider the character of the American people and the guarantees of their Constitution. Even now they seem astounding, and if the example of Louisiana was not before our eyes, with the Federal bayonet at her throat, and subject to the most cruel tyranny, resting too upon admitted fraud, perjury, and villainy, it would be almost impossible to realize, fresh as is the revolting experience, through what ordeals of persecution, robbery and rascality other States have passed since a heartless and pretended peace was proclaimed. All this has been done with the privity of the President and the participation of reckless majorities in Congress.

A single decade ago the first symptom of Executive intervention in the internal affairs of a State would have been the signal for an explosion of popular wrath all over the Union. Mass meetings would have been held everywhere, and a stern voice would have cried out, Hands off! Now a drunken Federal Judge, the hired and willing tool of the President's brother-in-law and Collector of Customs, has the audacity to intrude in the domain of State jurisdiction, claiming to upset the fairest election ever held, to depose the choice of the people, to install rejected candidates without returns, and to establish a State Government of his own creation. All sides denounce the infamy of these acts, and yet the President and his party uphold them with the whole force of the Government. And what is far worse, the people stand silently by and passively permit this atrocious usurpation. The wolf is not yet at their own door; and that is the pretext for an indifference to tyranny, which in a free government is the worst of crimes.

Gen. Grant has invested the highest civil office with the accessories of a military ruler, after the fashion of Mexico and South America. Surrounding himself with a staff of three Generals, called secretaries in defiance of law, the White House and its approaches wear the aspect of headquarters instead of the abode of a simple Chief Magistrate. During the last four years a vulgar taste for extravagant display and an affected pomp imitative of bogus royalty has grown up at Washington which was heretofore wholly unknown. The honorable habits and unpretentious life of all previous Presidents have been notoriously discarded, and a sort of pinchbeck glare substituted, which has shocked propriety and patriotism. The whole social tone of the Capital, which in official life receives its inspiration from the President and Cabinet, has been let down. Pretentious parade, loud vulgarity, showy garments, flaunting liveries, and lavish outlay of money obtained from jobbery have taken the place of the many attractions which once made the society of Washington so excellent and exceptional.

The recent inauguration seems to have been seized upon for a pompous ovation, which may well excite comment. The flatterers of the President who constantly burn incense under his nostrils, determined to signalize that occasion as an event which should not only throw all former experience into the shade, but establish a precedent of subverting purpose. This whole matter was in the hands of the District Government, appointed directly by the President, and who have so shamefully plundered the people of Washington. They brought Gen. Barry from Old Point to serve as Chief Marshal of the day, thus placing a local demonstration under the charge of a regular army commander. For the first time in our history the cadets at West Point and Annapolis, who were supported at the public expense and supposed to be free from partisan bias, were, by order of the Secretaries of War and the Navy, released from their legal discipline and studies, and made to form a feature in the gaudy pageant. All the troops that could be collected from far and near were paraded in the pride and panoply of war. The civil part of the procession was meager and evidently out of place in that long line of glittering uniforms. Unlike all his predecessors, and in painful contrast to Lincoln, Gen. Grant rode in a coach and four, after the fashion of royalty.

Not satisfied with this demonstration, the District Ring had erected an immense building for the inauguration ball, intended to surpass everything of that sort before known. Although the professed friends of civil rights, they put the tickets unusually high to exclude the colored race. Still the Downings, the African members of Congress, and a few others attended. The society of Washington, outside of official life, kept purposely away. The reports tell us that an immense dais profusely decorated was erected, higher than any throne in Europe, for the President and his party; and that exclusive supper-rooms, receiving-rooms, and retiring-rooms were also provided for them. Nothing of the kind was ever before heard of at such a ball, though deference has always been shown the Presidents, the Cabinet, the diplomatic body, and others of that category.

These facts show a growing tendency to change the whole character of the Presidency, to surround that great office with exclusive and foreign attributes, and to destroy the simplicity which is the sterling feature of a republic in external forms. Nor is this disposition confined to the White House. The passion for rank, class superiority, and their attendant distinctions, is growing every day, and may be discovered in every branch of the Government. In the last hours of Congress, provision was made for enlarging the hall of the House of Representatives to seat the increased numbers. Mr. Dawes seized upon that opportunity to amend that resolution, so that separate galleries should be constructed for the families of the President and Vice-President and Cabinet, for those of Senators and Representatives, as well as for the diplomatic body. Thus we are running fast into classes and orders, as in any aristocracy. This is the beginning, but who can tell what the end will be? Such is the republicanism of the Republican party!

Aside from the $5,000 which, with one or two exceptions, all the members will pocket from the recent plunder, one of the avowed objects of raising the Congressional pay was to enable them to live more magnificently in Washington than they have heretofore done. Under the cover of a larger salary, they can spend more without inviting so much attention to their Credit Mobilier operations. Who will say, after glancing over this record, that we are not rapidly drifting on to the shoals which have heretofore wrecked free institutions? Let us be warned before it is too late.—New York Sun.

Mobilier for the Nursery—The Road That Ames Built.

The Union Pacific is the road that Ames built.

C. M. is the malt that lay in the road that Ames built.

M. C.'s are the rats that ate of the malt that lay in the road that Ames built.

"H. G." was the cat that went for the rats that ate of the malt that lay in the road that Ames built.

The "brass collar press" is the dog that worried the cat for exposing the rats that ate of the malt that lay in the road that Ames built.

Truth is the cow with the crumpled horn that tossed the dog, that would worry the cat, for snatching such rats as ate of the malt that lay in the road that Ames built.

Poland is the maiden all forlorn, that half-milked the cow with the crumpled horn, that hoisted the dog that got mad at the cat for exposing the rats that ate of the malt that lay in the road that Ames built.

Henry Wilson is the (K. N.) high priest all shaven and shorn, who compelled his wife to acknowledge his corn; he's as bad as "Dear Schuyler" all tattered and torn, that fawned on the maiden all forlorn, etc., ad nauseam.

Fear is the cock that crowed in the morn, and frightened the priest all shaven and shorn, into selling the malt 'twas his wife's (in a horn); lest it might arouse the popular scorn, if malt should be found in the family corn of K. N. high priest, who desired to adorn the chair of the man now tattered and torn, that honied the maiden all forlorn, etc.

McComb is the farmer that sowed the corn—when he sued the C. M. concern—that inspired the cock to crow in the morn and frighten the priest, all shaven and shorn, into spilling the malt form the family horn, lest the finding it there might subject him to scorn, and forever destroy his chance to adorn the chair of "S. C. or bearer" forsworn, which the same is the man all tattered and torn, that explained and explained to the maiden forlorn, that fooled with the cow with the crumpled horn, that tossed the dog, that worried the cat, that went for the rats that ate the malt that lay in the road that Ames built.

The Credit Mobilier Party.

That two Vice-Presidents, three Senators, and six or seven Representatives, chairmen of the leading committees in the House, were defiled with the Credit Mobilier venality:

That the present Vice-President published and caused to be published a falsehood in concealment of his venality, and that the late Vice-President heaped falsehood upon falsehood and then perjury upon perjury in concealment of his venality, and that the three Senators and the seven members with but one or two exceptions were likewise guilty of venality and of falsehood:

That the House refused to impeach the guilty officer of the Government, that the Senate refused to expel its bribed Senators, and that the House refused to censure its bribed members:

That the party organization, State or national, has done nothing to repudiate and cast out briber or bribees, falsifiers or perjurer:

That the party press has supported, defended, belittled, extenuated, and condoned the offense of its leaders, utterly condemning not one of them all except Schuyler Colfax:

That the re-elected President, the head and twice chosen chieftain of the party should stretch forth his hand, pick up from the mud their one outcast, this same Colfax, and pledge him a lifetime of intimacy and affection:

Will change the name of the Republican party to the Credit Mobilier party. —New York World.

A Prediction and Its Fulfillment.

When Colfax was running for the Vice-Presidency in 1868, there appeared in our editorial columns this:

"When that accursed instrument of tyranny, a military commission, sentenced certain citizens of Indiana to death, and Mr. Lincoln meant to save them, there was presented to him, to overcome his scruples, this bloodthirsty document:

> "Washington, Feb. 3, 1865.
> "His Excellency, the President of the United States:
>
> "Sir: The undersigned, members of Congress from the State of Indiana, in behalf of the loyal people of the State, respectfully but earnestly protest against any commutation of the sentence of the Military Commission against the Indiana conspirators recently tried by it, and against any interference, in any manner or form, with that sentence.
>
> "H. S. Lane,
> "Schuyler Cofax,
> Speaker H. R. U. S.,
> "Godlove S. Orth,
> "George W. Julian."

"A few months after this wolf-howl the Supreme Court of the United States decided that Milligan and Bowles could not be harmed by this drum-head sentence, for which Mr. Smiler Colfax and his coadjurers had yearned. One by one these men, who hunted innocent blood, are meeting their deserts, and to the lengthening list Mr. Smiler Colfax has not long to go ere he be added."

The rascal did not live out his term before this prediction was verified. He prostituted his high place as deliberately to bribe-taking and perjury as he once abased it to the aiding and abetting of murder.—New York World.

Brain Food.

Some day we may read of a man offering a substitute for brains; now we are satisfied to read of brain food. Once Prof. Agassiz intimated that he dined on fish when he wished to do a little extra brain work, and forthwith sundry men ordered and ate fish dinners, but without, so far as the world knows, a corresponding exhibition of intellectual ability. Now comes Mr. Gerald Massey, an English minor poet, declaring that oatmeal is a brain-inspiring diet. "There is a deal of phosphorus in oatmeal," says Mr. Massey, "and phosphorus is brain. There is also a large amount of phosphorus in fish. Consequently I never miss having a fish dinner once a week, and like a plate of good, thick, coarse, well boiled Scotch oatmeal porridge every morning in my life." Ah! if Dr. Johnson were only alive! He would revise his famous definition of oats—"in England food for horses, in Scotland food for men," which led a Scotchman to say, "And where do you find such horses as in England, and such men as in Scotland?"

DEAR BROTHER, COME HOME TO THE FARM.

Your letter reached me, dear Herbert,
And I have read it all through,
So now I am going to answer,
And talk quite plainly to you.
'Tis time that you learned, my dear brother,
A little for common case;
Letting reason guide you a little,
And stop living in castles of air.

I don't want to be hard, my dear brother,
But the truth must be verily told;
Since the death of our dear, darling mother
Our father has grown wonderfully old.
I think he longs for you often,
And wishes Bert's strong, sturdy arm
Would willingly, cheerfully help him
Find wealth from the soil of the farm.

There's no disguising it, Herbert,
I think you sadly mistake
When you say "the life of a farmer
Is of such a contemptible make."
I'm sure no life suits you better,
And you know this to be a prime fact,
The professions of doctor and lawyer
Fill the country until it is packed.

Be sensible now, darling Herbert,
Remember our family cares;
Remember your promise to mother,
Remember how poor father fares
All alone with no one to help him;
Don't longer let idleness charm,
Look away from yourself for one moment,
Dear brother, come home to the farm.

What good did the few months at college
Do you, I would like to find out;
It only unsettled your prospects,
And ended in running about.
As for being a gentleman, Herbert,
That end can as well be attained
At work on the farm for your father
As in the city you named.

Don't spend any more idle moments,
Nor live for yourself all alone;
But come back to the cheery old fireside,
And enliven our dear father's tone.
Mother Earth will welcome you gladly,
Her soul will ne'r do you harm;
You will find your rich vocation
At home and at work on the farm.

MARRIED BY TELEGRAPH.

"Mr. Leary, you are a married man, sir?"

"Very, sir."

"Very! why do you say very?"

"Because my dear little wife and I are bound together by wires."

"Latimer Leary, you talk enigmas."

"Then, sir, to be plain as a primer, I will inform you that I was married by telegraph."

"You don't say so!"

"Yes, I do."

"Then tell the company all about the affair."

"I will with pleasure. Ladies and gentlemen, my wife is a second cousin, and was a Leary. She once resided in the city of Indianapolis, while I was a resident of Centerville, in the same State.

I was a bachelor of thirty, but full of romance and general love. I say of general love, because I had not made a concentration.

"Why don't you take a wife?" was eternally buzzed in my ears.

"Whom will I take?"

To this query a score of friends would say:

"Your relative, Kate Leary."

"Kate Leary, why, she is my own cousin!"

"Only a second cousin," they would retort; "and your opposite, Latimer. Kate is a blonde, and you are dark as Erebus, or the ace of clubs.

I never had seen Miss Leary, but this continual association of the young lady with my wedded life had an influence.

One day a member of Congress exclaimed, "Mr. Leary, were I single, I would assuredly pay court to your cousin. As I am married, and you are my best friend, I can earnestly hope you will possess the luxury."

At this period I was a merchant. Having discharged a thieving clerk, I was so confined to my store that a journey to Indianopolis was out of the question. I was growing almost wild to see one of whom all praised—so many wished me to wed.

In a few days from the call of my legislative friend, his brother, a noted judge, appeared at my store.

The judge was also my devoted ally—a position intensified by his recollection of being educated by my decased father.

Drawing a daguerrotype from his coat, said he, "I wish to show you something nice. There, what do you say to that?"

"Who is it?" I cried, with enthusiasm.

"This, my dear friend, is Miss Kate Leary, the young lady I wish you to marry."

"Tell me," exclaimed I, "is she all they claim for her?"

"My dear friend, honestly, as I value truth, I have not heard her sufficiently praised!"

"Why don't some man try his luck?"

"I'm glad you ask. Simply because she is overcourted, and consequently hard to please. She is romantic, and I clearly see not winnable by ordinary methods."

"You say she is very particular?"

"She is, sir."

"Then good-bye for me."

"Not at all; she is rapturous over your likeness, and sends her cousinly love, with an invitation to visit her. I pledge you of omitting not a single point in your body, caliber or character."

"Do you consider her daguerrotype accurate?"

"I can tell you it don't flatter her. She has extraordinary beauty, and the kind that is more striking in animation or conversation."

While mutual friends in Centerville were lauding my fair cousin, mutual friends in Indianapolis were decided in their eulogies of me, and preparing her mind for an alliance.

I am not self-conceited. Believing such a concord must be born of an obvious fact, I settled on the idea of marrying this wonder in beauty, soul and accomplishment.

My intent was quickly confirmed upon hearing that a very wealthy and influential banker from Gotham was in the melting mood. I remember it was midnight. I hinted from my store the last batch of chronic loungers, and selected the best stationery in my establishment. I was to write my first letter to Kate.

Such a reply as I received! Well—you must see it—you shall see it. I have good gas works, but am inadequate. In a brief time we learned that each knew the other well. The much said by so many mutual friends, superadded to our daguerreotypes and letters, made us a comprehending couple. In fact, we [illegible] our love—a soft, round, ripe and luscious article. There could be no unsafety in the [illegible]. Our lineage was in common, and every fact known, what followed is clear—an engagement—yes, between unseen lovers and cousins.

I was "dying" to fold her to my heart, but my soul's condition and maturing appointments postponed indefinitely.

What did you say? Why did she not visit some of our friends at Centerville? I answer you cheerfully. She had her notions and would entertain them. Though we were plighted, she declared it should not be said that she made the first visit. Many believe her right. I don't argue the point, but merely answer the question.

Weeks passed; letters were numerous and saccharine. The time arrived when I could endure my single condition no longer. What if some one were to cut me out at the eleventh hour? With such love what would become of me? I was determined to own her, even if I did not see her for a decade.

An idea dawned—a brilliant one. It was to compass a speedy marriage and satisfy her thirst for romance. After a flood of tenderness, of dramatic preparation, I wrote, "——, my adored one, let us depart from this stale routine, and wed by telegraph."

The idea took her by storm. Her answer was characteristic. It ran thus:

"Darling, I will. The idea is savory, but it is legal."

Immediately I sent for my friend, the Judge. Soon as he faced me, said I: "Judge, is a marriage by telegraph legal?"

"Certainly, sir; I see no objection to a contract by telegraph. I readily see how all these requirements can be accomplished."

"Will you state this opinion on paper and describe a formula for an electric wedding?"

"With pleasure, sir."

The Judge understood me, and gladly complied. The result I forwarded to Kate by return mail, and soon received word that on the following Thursday she and the proper authority would present themselves at the Indianapolis office according to formula, there to enter the holy state of matrimony.

I tell you the appointed day was a great one among the mutual friends at each end of the wire. The affair was so novel that all else was eclipsed by the contemplation of it.

Clergymen and witnesses assembled at the termini. There, in full costume, two unseen lovers were to be made man and wife. The instrument began its tick, tick, ticking. The operator read, the clergyman put questions, I answered; the instrument did more work, and soon I was saluted as the husband of Kate Leary. Happy was I, though the possessor of a lady I never beheld.

One week passed and I was still without help. My brain was becoming frenzied. I must see Kate, and I must go to her first, for it was her fiat, and well did I know what a Leary was.

By entreaty, I prevailed upon a brother merchant to loan me his best clerk. Soon as he put his foot in the store I put mine in the stage, en route for the capital of Indiana.

When about twelve miles from the city we stopped for a passenger. It was a lady. Such a beauty I never beheld. She resembled my likeness of Kate, but was far more beautiful. I own, my heart went out to her. Call me fickle, say what you please, and I will bear it, I repeat my heart gushed forth a flood of love.

Here was a fix! I, a married man, going to see his telegraphic bride, and as telegraphically in love with another woman. I began to repent my haste, and when, too late, saw the marrying one I had never set my eyes upon. What could I do! What could I do! The lady was also married, for I heard the driver call her madam.

How she eyed me! I spoke about the coach windows being raised to suit her.

She thanked me in tones that acted like an arterial stimulant. I was gone. Much conversation followed, and I was a goner. I saw she was giving me sweet, yet pleading looks. Heavens, thought I, she is unhappily mated. Suppose I gave her my sympathy. Yet should I jeopardize myself before such transcendent charms? Suppose I betray my love, how would I feel in the presence of my wife, and what power could I confer upon a total stranger? I had it. I would betray nothing, but offer consolation to a flower most surely neglected. We are the only passengers, and what a good chance.

"Madame," said I, "please pardon me, but you seem to exist under a cloud."

She sighed deeply.

"Well, sir, not a widow, though I don't live with my husband.

"Poor soul," continued I.

She put her handkerchief to her mouth.

I thought about half of it went in, but of course it was to stop her emotion.

"You are not happy, madam?"

"Very far from it, sir; I am miserable!"

So was I—miserable to put my arms around her neck.

"Where do you reside, madam?"

"In Indianapolis."

"Have you friends there?"

"Many, sir."

"No doubt of it. Allow me to ask, do you love your husband?"

"Devotedly, sir."

"Then you will live with him."

"Would be glad of the chance, sir."

"When did you see him last?"

"I have never seen him, sir."

Here she again half swallowed her handkerchief.

"Never seen him? Why, what do you mean?"

"Sir, have you not read of a telegraphic wedding?"

"Julius Cæsar!" cried I. "Tell me, are you Mrs. Kate Leary?"

"I am."

As I relaxed, she said: "Go on, Latimer; I knew you from your daguerrotype."

I will not prolong this, but merely remark that Kate is my next to the Great One above. I have never felt ashamed of my inconsistency, and would not lose her for the wealth of the Orient. I ever consider us as bound together by wire; and when asked if I am a married man, I always feel like saying—very.

Vienna.

In the course of a few weeks tens of thousands of Americans will flock to the "banks of the beautiful blue Danube," to participate in the enjoyment of the great Industrial Exposition, which will be opened in Vienna on the 1st of May, and which, there is every reason to believe, in splendor, variety, extent, and arrangement, will far surpass any of the universal exhibitions that have been held up to the present time. Although the capital of Austria, next to Paris, is unquertionably the most magnificent among the great cities of Europe, and although the popular song of the Austrians:

"Es giebt nur a Kaiserstadt, Es giebt nur a Wein"—

in many respects, is perfectly justified, Vienna, in a measure, has been neglected by American tourists.

The city of Vienna is beautifully situated on both sides of the Danube, which there is exceedingly wide; and the two parts of the place, the principal of which, including the old town, lies on the right bank of the river, are connected by several splendid bridge. Prior to the sudden growth of Berlin in the last few years, Vienna was the largest city in which the German language was spoken; but, if Berlin has now a larger population by one hundred thousand than Vienna, the latter still retains its fame of being an infinitely more beautiful place than the capital of the new German Empire. Berlin has undoubtedly many attractions, many superb palaces, many grand old churches; but its population is homogeneous; while Vienna, aside from its superior architectural beauties, and its by far more interesting historical traditions and reminiscences, has this advantage over its great northern rival on the river Spree, that it is populated by a southern race, noted for its lively character, its cheerfulness and versatility, and that there are mingled with its German inhabitants, who form the bulk of its population, representatives of all the numerous races of Eastern Europe, whose peculiar costumes render a more varied and animated aspect to street life in Vienna.

Suspected the Lawyer.

The law provides a defender for every arraigned criminal, no matter how well known his crime, but it will not do for a bad man's counselor to try to make his crime a joke, and try to ridicule it out of court. Such a course fairly leaves the lawyer himself open to distrust.

Counselor Higgins, of the State of ——, was exceedingly adroit in defending a prisoner, and would sometimes laugh down an indictment for a small offense. A fellow (one Smith) being on trial for stealing a turkey, the counselor attempted to give a good human turn to the affair. "Why, gentlemen of the jury," said he, "this is really a very small affair. I wonder any one could bring such a complaint into court. If we are going on at this rate, we shall have business enough on our hands."

Higgins then alluded to the "foraging expedition" of his college days, and the boys thought it no harm to take poultry here and there once in a while when they wanted a sly supply. But notwithstanding this appeal, the jury convicted the prisoner.

After the Court arose one of the jury, a plain old farmer, meeting the counselor complimented him on his ingenuity.

"And now, 'Squire," said he, fixing a rather knowing look upon him, "I should like to ask you one question: Which road do you take in going home—the upper or the lower one?"

"The lower," said the counselor.

"Well, then, it's no matter, I only wanted to observe that if you were going my way, I would just jog on before you and lock up my hen-house."

Where the Sun Never Sets.

A scene witnessed by some travelers in the north of Norway, from a cliff 1,000 feet above the sea, is thus described:

The ocean stretched away in silent vastness at our feet; the sound of waves scarcely reached our airy lookout; away in the north the huge old sun swung low along the horizon, like the slow beat of the pendulum in the tall clock of our grandmother's parlor corner. We all stood silent looking at our watches. When both hands came together at twelve, midnight, the full round orb hung triumphantly above the wave, a bridge of gold running due north spanning the water between us and him. There he shone in silent majesty, which knew no setting. We involuntarily took off our hats; no word was said. Combine, if you can, the most brilliant sunrise and sunset you ever saw, and the beauties will fade before the gorgeous coloring which now lit up ocean, heaven and mountain. In half an hour the sun had swung up perceptibly on his beat, the colors changed to those of morning, a fresh breeze rippled over the flood, one songster after another piped up in the grove behind us—we had slid by another day.

TO PREVENT LOCK-PICKING.—One of the most ingenious contrivances for preventing lock-picking is that invented in 1833, which causes the lock to open at the time to which clock-work is set. As, however, when once closed, these locks will not open, no matter how pressing the emergency, till the hour set; and as a mistake in setting them is easily made, and results in opening at unexpected and dangerous times, this device can not be extensively applied. The only plan which seems to afford security against picking is to make the keyhole so small that no improper instrument can be introduced; and since the invention of nitro-glycerine and dynamite, the safety of even this may be questioned, since they can blow the lock to pieces. Locks and bars cannot preserve earthly riches, and in this fact lies a great lesson for the general reader.

A DANBURY boy of ten winters (not like this one, however) stole a harmonica Friday evening to serenade his girl with, and was sending thunder and lightning through it when overhauled by his father and owner. He says there are places where a poultice won't take hold worth a cent.

Journalism Abroad.

A letter to the New York Mail says: The difference between English and French journalism is shown by the fact that in Paris there are sixty-eight daily papers to a population of 1,800,000, while in London, with double the population, there are but twelve daily papers in all, and three of this number are merely local organs, which seldom go out of the quarter in which they are published. With these statistics before us we would naturally conclude that the political life in England is not so fully developed as in France; and, although the English read many magazines and reviews, they do not trouble themselves particularly about the actions and gestures of the Government—of the Houses of Parliament and the general interests of the country. The total amount of readable matter in those twelve journals is far from equaling that of the sixty-eight of Paris. The slightest rumors which in Paris would create a sensation, have but little effect on the more stolid, prosaic John Bull.

The principal Parisian journals are the Temps, Figaro, XIX Siecle, Journal des Debats, Republicaine Francaise of London, Moniteur and Le Petit Journal. Those of London (and as there are so few we give the statistics of each) are as follows:

Before all others comes the Times, which, notwithstanding the fact that it has lost to a certain degree its circulation has singularly diminished, conserves still the first place in the English press. The Times publishes daily between 20,000 and 30,000 copies only. The Times is the largest daily published; contains more reading matter and more advertisements than any other London daily. It is composed of sixteen pages, forming ninety-six columns. With the great number of advertisements, it has no interest to have a larger circulation. By calculation, each number of the Times contains as much material as a month of the Figaro or Journal des Debats. Price, three-pence.

The other journals are the Daily Telegraph, Daily News, and the Morning Advertiser—this latter, however, inclines towards Radicalism. Then there are the five organs of the Conservative party, the Standard, Morning Post, Pall Mall Gazette, Globe, and lastly the Echo, after which we have the London Daily Chronicle and Clerkenwell News, the South London Press, and the City Press, which are the local papers alluded to before. Of the nine important dailies six appear in the morning—the Times, which has a second edition at noon; the Telegraph, Daily News, Post, Advertiser, and the Standard. The last-named appears in the evening under the name of the Evening Standard. The other evening papers are the Globe, Pall Mall Gazette, and the Echo.

The circulation of the Daily Telegraph, which reached 200,000 daily during the war of '70-71, does not exceed 80,000 to-day, and, in spite of the sensational canards it gives from time to time, it is generally a very reliable and authentic journal.

The Daily News, which, before the abolition of the Government stamp, had for a long time a grand success, is well dechu to-day as regards circulation.

The Standard and Evening Standard reaches a circulation of 70,000 copies daily, the greater number selling with the evening edition.

Outside of these principal journals the others have only a secondary importance in point of circulation. The Post, a Conservative journal, and the Advertiser, a Radical, hardly exist. The Globe has a circulacion of between 10,000 and 20,000 copies, which is a very small number considering the variety of its advertisements and the very small price—one penny.

The Pall Mall (pronounced Pell Mell) Gazette is the organ of the clubs and a journal of the monde elegant et leger. It aids its strong opposition to the actual government by a sort of sarcasm and humor which would give it a place in the Tory press.

The Native Australian.

A gentleman long a resident of Australia recently gave us some information in relation to the natives of that island. They are quite tall in stature, badly formed, ill-looking, but not evil-looking. Though resembling the negroes of Africa to some extent, they are not so dark, their color being like that of smooth iron, sheet-iron for instance. In the interior of the island they go entirely naked, but in the vicinity of the settlements they wear such clothing as the whites give them. Sometimes this consists of a hat, at other times a pair of shoes, while often it is a necktie. They lead a nomadic life, rarely staying longer than a fortnight in the same locality. Their temporary houses consist of sticks, placed so as to break the force of the wind. The Colonial Governments treat them with great kindness, appoint protectors for them, supply them with medicine, and do what can be done to civilize them. Very little, however, has been accomplished either by the Government or by societies formed for improving their condition. They live principally on opossums and kangaroos, which are very numerous. Though they fight some among themselves, they seldom trouble the whites, and one soldier or police officer will put a hundred of them to flight. They are very deficient in intellect, but they are able to do some things that no white man can do. They are often employed as trackers, to find children and adults who are lost in the brush. They are able to follow tracks, invisible to other eyes, for days, and never fail in finding the objects of their search. They are also employed to some extent by police officers to track criminals who escape from one settlement to another.

The Harvard Museum.

Whatever may have been the result of the recent Hassler Expedition, in which Prof. Agassiz embarked in scientific search of unknown denizens of the "vasty deep," it is yet certain that from this voyage and others contributions have flowed in from every source, and have given Harvard College the finest and most complete museum of "comparative zoology" in the world, in the specialty for which Prof. Agassiz is famous. The collection of fishes is greater than that in the Jardin des Plantes, at Paris, and that in the British Museum put together. Prof. Agassiz has devoted to it his life, and it will be his monument after death.

The Bee Business.

At the National Convention of the Apiarians some surprising reports were made, indicative of the growing importance of this special industry. A well-known gentleman, living in Western New York, said he received 12,000 pounds of surplus honey from 250 swarms kept during the past year. The best yield was from one swarm of black bees, which gave 361 pounds. The honey was gathered from white clover. His largest yield of box honey, for a single swarm, was over 200 pounds. A Minnesota bee keeper said he took six tons of bass-wood honey from seventy-five old swarms (and their increase) during the blossom of bass-wood, which ended about the 20th of July.

These six tons were gathered from the blossoms, extracted from the hives, and all barreled up for the market within twelve days' time. A paper was read showing the immense advances which have been made in bee culture, and the methods adopted. Not quite 250,000 pounds of Northern honey are sold in New York each year, but the improved methods, it is thought, will make it possible to raise 400,000 pounds a year in New York State. The business was recommended as a good one for ministers and women. In this connection, Mrs. Ann Savery, of Des Moines, Iowa, a lady of wealth, related her experience with bees, though last spring she hardly knew a bee from a yellow jacket. The past summer she sold 1,200 pounds of honey from her own bees, and now she has thirty-seven good swarms wintering in her cellar. She undertook the business as an example to other women, both rich and poor, and she expressed her enjoyment in it most heartily. Those statements of success must of course be regarded as exceptional. There are many failures, and these seldom get publicity in the newspaper. The person who expects to achieve any important results in bee-keeping must have, if not a special constitutional fitness for the work, at least a genius for painstaking, and must learn the art.

Dog Faces.

There is a bull-dog—that man in the brown suit yonder, with bandy legs and heavy shoulders—did you ever see kennelled, muzzled more thoroughly the bull-dog than this? The small eyes closed under the brows, the smooth bullet forehead, the heavy jaws and snub nose, all are essentially bull-dog. Then the mastiff, with the double bass voice and the square hanging jaw; and the shabby-looking turnspit, with his ear out at all sides, and his eye drawn up to its roots, and the greyhound, lean of rib and sharp of face; and the terrier, who is often a lawyer, with a snarl in his voice and a kind of restlessness in his eye, as if mentally worrying a rat—his client; and alike, all beard and mustache and glossy curls, with a plaintive expression of countenance, and exceedingly meek demeanor; and the noble old Newfoundland dog, perhaps a brave old soldier from active service, who is chivalrous to women and gentle to children, and who repels petty annoyances with a grand patience that is veritably heroic. Reader, if you know a Newfoundland dog man, cherish him; stupid as he probably will be, he is worth your love. Then we have horse-face men, and men with camel lips, and the sheep-faced man, with his forehead retreating from his long, energetic nose; smooth men, without whiskers, and with shining hair cut close, and not curling, like pointers; the lion man, who is a grand fellow, and the bull-headed man; the flat, serpent's head, and the tiger's, like an inverted pyramid; and the giraffe's lengthy unhelpfulness; and the sharp, red face of the fox. Don't we meet men like these every step we take in the city; and if we know any such intimately, don't we invariably find that their characters correspond somewhat with their persons?

The Graphic Process.

The Graphic, the illustrated daily just started in New York, regularly brings to our table its pictorial epitome of events in Gotham. The process of illustration is a secret jealously guarded by the proprietors, and is yet upon its trial. The rough theory, however, is well understood, and may be of interest to our readers.

Upon a sheet of paper is spread a layer of the oily transfer ink used by the lithographers, and over that a thin layer of photographic preparation which the action of light readily decomposes. The subject of illustration is then photographed, and the negative placed over the prepared sheet. The action of the light, passing through the unobstructed parts of the negative, decomposes the surface of the sheet, and leaves the image in a sort of bas-relief. The other portions are then removed, and the sheet laid over one of the porous stones used by the lithographers, and subjected to pressure. The oleaginous ink sinks into the stone and makes, as it were, the outlines of the desired picture. The stone is now sponged with water, and is ready for printing. The ink-roller of the press passes over it, leaving no trace whatever of the clean portions of the surface, but coating every place where the oleaginous transfer ink has touched, and printing the picture upon the sheet of paper that follows.—Cincinnati Chronicle.

WHAT EAR WAX IS FOR.—Dr. Dio Lewis in one of his lectures to the boys, singled out a red-headed little fellow, and asked him what the wax was in the ear for. He said he selected a red-headed boy because red-headed boys are generally the smartest. The boy stood up and said he did not know. The doctor would not take such an answer. If the boy didn't know, he must tell at least what he thought the wax was in the ear for.

"Well," said the boy, "the wax is in the ear because—because—because it wants to be in the ear."

He questioned another boy who claimed distinction by having a red head, and his answer was that it kept the passage to the drum moist. This was correct, but it has further uses. Ear wax is a deadly poison to insects, and its presence in the ear effectually protects it from insects. It sometimes accumulates and becomes hard, causing partial deafness; but a little warm castor oil, mixed with spirits, would remedy that, or an injection of lukewarm soapsuds.

The New Coinage Bill.

The Mint and Coinage bill which passed both Houses at the recent session of Congress is one of more than usual importance, as it completely changes the silver coinage of the country from and after the 1st of April next. The new dollar, or trade dollar, as it is called, has no connection with the rest of the United States coinage but is only to be issued to depositors of bullion on their order. It is to be 900 points fine, to weigh 420 grains, and will be worth five cents more than the gold dollar, two cents more than the silver dollar, and one cent more than the Mexican dollar. It will have its weight and fineness stamped upon it, and will be much superior in workmanship to the Mexican dollar. Should it take the fancy of the Chinese, our miners will make an advance of at least 4 per cent. in their silver in supplying them with the trade dollar. The new law also adopts the French standard of weight for all silver coins less than one dollar. The weight of two half-dollars is fixed at twenty-five grammes—equal to the five-franc piece—an increase of about half per cent., which places our silver coinage on a par with that of the current silver coinage of France, Spain, Italy, Switzerland, and most of the South American States. The establishment of the trade dollar has grown out of the fact that the silver dollar hitherto has failed to replace the Mexican dollar, which is worth two cents more, with the Chinese. A recent alteration of the stamp on the Mexican dollar has disgusted these Chinese with it, and Congress has seized the opportunity to make a dollar for them which is worth one cent more than the Mexican dollar.

The Vienna Fair.

Those who intend going to Vienna will do well to brush up their geography, for the arrangement of the building is strictly based upon the succession of the nations in making the circuit of the earth. We learn that the nave or great axis of the building is made to run as nearly as possible from east to west. The transepts, consequently, point north and south. The countries are then arranged according to their geographical position on the surface of the earth. North and South America occupy the extreme western end of the building; England and the countries of Western Europe come next, and so on until we get to the far eastern transepts, which are appropriated to China and Japan. By means of this arrangement, any one possessing the most elementary notions of geography can find his way about with perfect ease. To give an example: If a visitor finds himself in one of the transepts belonging to France, and should he want to go to the Chinese portion of the building, knowing, as he does, that China lies to the east of France on the surface of the globe, he has only to go into the nave, turn towards the eastern end of the long axis, and walk till he sees the name China hung up from the roof in large letters. If, on the other hand, he had wanted to visit the American department, he would have had to perform precisely the same operations—turning, however, to the west instead of the east.

Prison Discipline in Pennsylvania.

The forty-sixth annual report of the inspectors of the Western Penitentiary of Pennsylvania contains the following:

The combined system of congregate and separate imprisonment, as recently inaugurated in the management of this penitentiary, has thus far worked to our entire satisfaction. The convict's prison life is a graded one, his promotion depending entirely upon himself. When he enters the prison he is placed in the first or lowest grade of privileges in the solitary cell; and then, step by step, as he shows himself worthy, he is advanced, until he reaches the highest point of honor and trust in the institution, among which are attendance upon the church and Sabbath school services, the day school exercises, the congregate workshop, and the coveted benefits of the commutation law. For misbehavior he goes back on the downward scale to the place of beginning. Hope is ever placed before him as a beacon light to lure him on to a useful, honest and industrious life when he shall have returned to the world. The treatment of the convict while in prison is that of firmness combined with kindness, an exacting compliance with existing regulations, and yet a tender solicitude for the well-being. The government of the prison is intended to be of a broad and uncompromising character, unprejudiced in its execution, and free from even the appearance of partiality; never influenced by either fear or favor, and by its very inexorable character commanding the respect of all concerned.

War Strength of European Powers.

The Bosen Zeitung of Berlin recently published an interesting article on the relative war strength of the European powers. From the statistics furnished in the article, it appears that Russia is the strongest military power in Europe, having 228 regiments of infantry, with 684 battalions, 228 rifle battalions, 280 reserve battalions, 72 regiments of the Guards, 50 regiments of Cossacks, and 308 batteries of eight guns each. Germany comes next, having 148 regiments of the Guard and infantry of the line, 24 rifle battalions, 202 battalions of the Landwehr, 120 cavalry regiments, and 382 batteries of six guns each. The French army, under the new organization, will consist of 143 infantry regiments, 30 rifle battalions, 288 reserve battalions, 64 cavalry regiments, and 360 batteries of six guns each. Austria has but 80 infantry regiments, 40 rifle battalions, 41 cavalry regiments, and 176 batteries of six guns each, and Italy about the same. The weakest of the leading European powers, in a military point of view, is England, which has only 107 battalions, 22 squadrons and 34 batteries of six and eight guns each, and this number the Secretary of War, in his army estimates recently presented to Parliament, proposes to reduce quite materially. The statistics of the Berlin writer show pretty conclusively that some of the European powers, notably England, Austria and Italy, cannot make war without a loan.

THE English Attorney General proposes to reduce the number of jurymen in all except capital cases to seven, and to render valid the verdict of a majority of these.

A Neat Swindle.

The Philadelphia Press is responsible for the following: The other day at 12 o'clock m., a carriage elegant enough in all its appointments to be a private 'turnout,' drove up to the door of one of the largest establishments on Chestnut street not far from Twelfth, and from it descended a gentleman, at least so to all appearances, attired in the most fashionable manner. Sauntering inside with an easy grace, he requested to see some jewels, stating that he desired to make a large purchase. He carried in his hand a handsome case or bag, which he deposited on the glass before the clerk, who stepped forward to wait upon him. He was very particular in his choice, but at last selected about $2,000 worth of jewelry of various kinds and styles. As the clerk was about to put the numerous little boxes into one large receptacle the stranger said:

'Wait a moment; we can do better;' and opening his case, which still remained on the counter, he took from it and handed to the clerk a neat little box with a key, sufficiently large to hold all his purchases. Into this the clerk put the jewelry, and handed it back to his customer, who locked it, leaving the key in lock, and replaced it in the bag, closing the latter. Then putting his gloved hand into his breast pocket, he exclaimed in great surprise: 'Well, how forgetful I am! I have left my book and money at the hotel. I must go back and get it.—You will, of course, want to keep this. It would'nt do to trust an entire stranger with such valuables,' and opening the bag, he again took out the little box and handed it to the clerk. 'Its very annoying but I will drive right to the Continental and be back in a few moments.' With a few commonplace remarks the elegant gentleman returned to his carriage and was seen to drive away in the direction of the Continental, taking with the [illegible] and innocent little bag he had brought. They waited at the store for him a long time to come back. In fact he hasn't come back yet. At last a light dawned upon the terrified clerk, and he reached for the beautiful little box with the beautiful little key. 'Oh, it's all right, of course,' he hoped in spite of his suspicions. Something has detained the gentleman, but I may as well make sure. He is sure now. The beautiful little box with the beautiful little key contained old, worthless iron padlocks. No news of the theif. Every reader will see at once how the swindle was accomplished The man had two beautiful little boxes, with two beautiful little keys, in that innocent little bag, and of course gave the right one (that is, for him) to the clerk when he left.

Prof. Fowler's Greatest Work.

The National Publishing Company, of Cincinnati, have just issued a very important and valuable work, by Prof. O. S. Fowler, on Manhood, Womanhood, and their Mutual Interrelations; Love, Its Laws, Power, etc. It is a masterly exposition of the laws which control the relations of the sexes, and their duties towards each other, and it is not asserting too much to pronounce it the most valuable and timely publication of the age.

"Know thyself!" was the profound injunction of the ancient sage, and it is the neglect to comply with this precept which causes nearly all the misery and sickness of the world. Husbands and wives constantly feel the need of more light on the subject of their relations to each other, especially concerning the great duty for which marriage was instituted—the begetting and rearing of a family.

It is for the purpose of diffusing this knowledge that Professor Fowler has given to the world this work on "Sexual Science," which is simply an explanation of the laws which govern the sexes in their relation to each other. He lets us into the secret of preserving female health and beauty far into old age, and shows how mothers can avoid much of the suffering of bringing children into the world—a subject in which every woman is interested, and how "female complaints" may be avoided with ease and certainty. His book is pure and elevated in its style and ideas, and furnishes a practical solution of many of the most perplexing questions of life. It touches upon questions and discusses them thoroughly, in which every married person is interested. The advice which it gives to unhappy or indifferent husbands and wives is sound and practical, and its warnings to those who seek to promote pleasure at the expense of health ought to be read by every one. The terrible practice of "regulating the size of families," which prevails in many parts of our country, is shown in its true light, and we commend the chapters concerning it to every husband and wife.

All friends of morality and purity in social life will hail the advent of Prof. Fowler's book with delight, and those who seek information upon the curious and magic features of domestic life, those who would study human nature stripped of its masks and disguises, will find this volume the best hand-book in existence. Young men who value their domestic happiness, should not fail to read his remarks on the subject of selecting a wife, as the information it contains is beyond value.

The book is a real blessing to the public, and will be regarded as such by all who read it. The low price at which it is issued brings it within the reach of all and every person who wants to arrive at the sexes, should procure a copy. It is sold by subscription only, and Mr. Geo. [illegible], Spencerville, Ind., who is the authorized agent for this section, is now canvassing for it.

Tar Cordial,
NATURE'S GREAT REMEDY
FOR
Throat and Lungs.

It is gratifying to us to inform the public that Dr. L. Q. C. Wishart's Pine Tree Tar Cordial, for Throat and Lungs diseases, has gained an enviable reputation from the Atlantic to the Pacific coast, and from thence to some of the first families of Europe, not through the press alone, but by persons throughout the States actually benefitted and cured at his office. While he publishes less, so say our reporters, he is unable to supply the demand. It gains and holds its reputation—

First. Not by stopping cough, but by loosening and assisting nature to throw off the unhealthy matter collected about the throat and bronchial tubes, which causes irritation.

Second. It removes the cause of irritation of the mucous membrane and bronchial tubes, assists the lungs to act and throw off the unhealthy secretions, and purifies the blood

Third. It is free from squills, lobelia, ipecac and opium, of which most throat and lung remedies are composed, which allay cough only, and disorganize the stomach. It has a soothing effect on the stomach, acts on the liver and kidneys, and lymphatic and nervous regions, thus reaching to every part of the system, and in its invigorating and purifying effects it has gained a reputation which it must hold above all others in the market.

THE NEW LIQUOR LAW

[illegible] OF JUDGE LONG, OF THE [illegible] CRIMINAL COURT.

[illegible] an indictment drawn under [illegible] of February 27, 1873, known [illegible] New Temperance Law, for selling intoxicating liquor to be drank in, upon or about the premises where the liquor is sold." The defendant moves to quash the indictment for the reason that its allegations are not sufficient to charge the offence of retailing under the act of March 5, 1859; and contends that the law under which the indictment is drawn is not yet in force, because the section containing the emergency clause is unconstitutional in that it prevents that uniformity of operation in the law required by the constitution. The section referred to is as follows:

"Sec. 21. It is hereby declared that an emergency exists for the immediate taking effect of this act. It shall therefore be in force from and after its passage except in so far as it relates to those who hold license under the existing laws of the State.—This act shall apply to such as now hold licence immediately after the expiration thereof."

It is substantially provided in sections 22 and 23 of article IV of the Constitution of the State, that all laws "for the punishment of clames and misdemeanors shall be general, and of uniform operation throughout the State;" and it is contended that the exception or saving clause in the above section, taken in connection with the emergency clause, is in contravention of these constitutional provisions, and renders the entire section unconstitutional. This might be true if we were compelled to construct these clauses together, and decide upon the section as a whole. Such, however is not the rule of decision. A statue may be good in part, and in part void, as unconstitutional; and this proposition seems to be an controverted. Meshmeler vs. the State, 11 Ind. 482. And the constitutional and unconstitutional poovisions may even be contained in the same section, and yet be perfectly distinct and separable, so that the first stand though the latter fall. The point is not whether they are contained in the same section—for the distribution into sections is purely artificial—but whether they are essential and inseparably, connected in substance. If, when the unconstitutional portion was stricken out, that which remains is complete in itself, and capable of being executed in accordence with the apparent legislative intent wholly independent of that which was rejected, it must be sustained. Cooley's Const. Lim., 178, and cases cited.

If the words—"except in so far as it relates to these who hold a license, under the existing laws of the State," eccurring in the foregoing section, are intended only to save the rights acquired by certain persons by virtue of the contracts of granting and receiving lisence under the law of 1869, then they may simply be nugatory, because these rights are secured them, without legislation of section 4 of the Bill of Rights, where it is provided that no law, impairing the obligation of contracts shall ever be passed. The remaining clause of the section under consideration, which is as follows:—"This act shall apply to such as now hold license, immediately after the expiration thereof.' If intended also to save contract rights may be regarded as of no greater force than the clause previously quoted, If, however it is intended to refer to the penalties of the act, it is void under the provisions of article IV, section 22 and 23, already referred to. Cewdia Auditor, v. Huff. 10 Ind. 83.

I therefore hold that the section under consideration, so far as it declares an emergency, is constitutional and that law is in force.

Not The Wife's Fault.

An Irishman who had just landed, went to his sister who had married a Yankee. The couple lived very happy together, and when Pat come the gentleman took him over the place to show it to him. But at the evidence of prosperity, he said to his brother-in-law.

"Begorra, you are very happy here with this fine property to live on; me sister had good luck in getting you for a husband.'

'Yes," responded the married man, "we would be very happy but for one thing.'

And what's that? inpuired the Irish man.

'I am sorry to say returned the gentleman, "that we have not had any children.

No children!! exclaimed Pat, 'then begorra its not my sister's fault for she had two betore she left Ireland, and that's the rayson my father sent her over here to America!"

FRIGHTFUL DISASTER.

Wreck of the Atlantic.

THE CAPTAIN'S STATEMENT.

We sailed from Liverpool March 2[illegible] During the first part of the passage [illegible] had faverable weather and easterly winds. On the 24th, 25th, and 26th we experienced heavy southwest, and westerly gales, which brought the ship down to 118 miles a day. On the 31st of March the engineers report showed but about 127 tons of coal on board. We were then 460 miles from Sandy Hook, with the wind eastward. A high westerly swell, and a falling barometer. The ship was steaming only [illegible] knots an hour, and we considered the risk to great to push on, as we might find ourselves, in the event of a gale shut out from any port of supply, and so we decided to bear up for Halifax. At 1 p. m. on the thirty first, Somebro Island was distent 170 miles, the ships speed varying from 8 to 12 knots an hour, wind south with rain, which veered to the westward. At 8 p. m. with clear weather, at midnight I judged the ship to have made 122 miles, which would have placed her 48 miles south of Somebro, and I then left the deck and went into the chart rooms, leaving orders about the lookout, and to let me know if they saw anything, and to call me at 3 a. m., intending then to put the ship's head southward and await daylight. My first intimation of the catastrophe, was the striking of the Ship on Marrs Island, and remaining fast. The sea immediately swept away all the port boats The officers went to their station and commenced to clearing away the weather boats. Rockets were fired by the second officerr Before the boats could be cleared away, only ten minutes having elapsed, the ship keeled heavily to the port, rendering the starboard boats useless. Seeing that.

NO HELP COULD BE GOT

from the boats, I got passengers into the rigging and outside of the rails, and encouraged them to go forward, where the ship was the highest and less exposed to the water. The third officer, Mr. Brady, Quartermasters Owen and Speakman by this time, establish ed communication with the outlying rock, about 40 yards distent, and by means of a line got other lines to the rock, along which about 200 people passed. Between the rock and the shore was a passage 100 yards wide. A rope was successfully passed across this by which means about 50 got to land, though many were drowned in the attempt. At 5 a. m. the first boat appeared from the Island but she was too small to be of any assistence. Through the exertions of Mr Brady the third officer, the Islanders were aroused and by this time the three larger boats came to our assistance. By their assistance all that remained on the side of the ship and on the rock were landed in safety and cared for by a poor fisher man named Clancy, and his daghtuer During the day the survivors to the number of four hundred and twenty-nine were drafted off to various houses and scattered about, the resident magistrate, Edmund Ryan, rendering valuable assistance. The chief officer having got up the mizzen rigging, the SEA CUT OFF HIS RETREAT.

He stood for six hours by a woman who had been placed in the rigging. The sea was too high to attempt his rescue. At 3 p. m a clergyman, Rev. Mr. Ancient, succeeded in getting him a line and getting him off. Many of the passengers, saloon and steerage, from cold. Among the number was the purser of the ship. Before the boats went out, I placed two ladies in the life boat, but finding the boat useless, I carried them to the main rigging, where I left them and went aft, to encouage others to go forward on the side of the ship. At this juncture, and the boat rolled over to the leward. The ship at this time being on her beams end. Finding myself useless there I went to take the ladies forward but found them gone; nor did I see them afterwords. Many passengers at this time could not be stimulated to any effort to save themselves, but lay in the rigging and died from fright and exposure. I remained on the side encouraging helping and directing, until about five were landed, when, finding that my hands and legs were becoming useles, I left the ship, two other boats being close to her, embarked the remainder. On reaching shore I dispatched Brady, the third officer, off to Halifax across the country to telegraph the news of the disaster, and to obtain assistance. Mr. Morrow the Cunard line agent, promptly responded, and sent steamers with provisions, to con[illegible] the survivors to Halifax, where they will be cared for and forwarded to New York on the first opportunity, under the charge of the First and Fourth Officers. The Third officer and four men being left on the Island to care for the dead as they come to shore. Captain Sheridan a diver has received provisional authority, as to the salvage of the cargo, and materials. The Second officer was lost with No. 30 life boat

THE BOILER EXPLODED,

Early this morning the Dominion government steamer Lady Head, the Canada steamer Delta and the tug Goliah left for the scene of the wreck of the Atlantic to rueder such assistance as they could.

The Delta and Lady Head, being unable to venture near the shore, came to anchor, and the Goliah, with a life boat, went into the embark of the shipwrecked people. No time was lost. The Golich with the boats soon returned filled with men, who proceeded to git on board the Delta. All were warmly welcomed on board the Delta, and no pains were spared to make them as comfortable as possible. The Golish returned to the shore and was soon back again with just such a cargo as the first one. By 12 o'clock all those who reached the shore safely, were, excepting an officer and four men, who remained, and those who walked inland taken on board the Delta and Lady Head, the former having about 330 on board, and the latter 77. A calculation was now made by Captain Williams showing that the loss of life though immense was not so large as was reported. The Atlantic had on board 33 cabbin passengers, 800 steerage, and a crew, officers included, of 153; total, 833 souls leaving. The number

This may not be precisely corect, but nearly so.

The "Best Working Legislature" Reviewed.

The Indianapolis Sentinel calls the attention of the people to the Indiana Credit mobiler Legislature in the following words:

"As to extravagance approaching theft, the conduct of the recent Legislature is not a whit less flagrant than Congress, considerating the necessary limitation for the field to work in, A simple comparison will attest this:—The Legislature of 1870, and '71, whatever may have been its other sins stands clear on the record in the appropriations. In the tax levy in those years the rates stands at five cents on the hundred of taxables. On this easy rate ample funds were raised for all state machinery. When the opposite party came into power last year and opened the treasury at the recent special session, $800,000 were found in the vaults and finances of the State sound. Then the salaries were raised for the members and employes of the Legislative body. Some of the salaries were raised very correctly and very justly. But it was neither just nor honest, to pay these loiterers in the Legislative halls, who made their first duty to lobyists at eight dollars par day—a price one-half greater than some of the best skilled industry can command.—But even that price of injudicious and reckless extravagance could be overlooked, if in return the majority of the body had set itself into harness for zealous, active constant work. That however was not done. The different parties interested in the obstruction of laws or the success of jobs apportioned out the body between them and held needed legislation completely in check. From the simple five cent tax of 1871 and '72 under the Democratic laws and legislature they ran up the rate to fifteen-cents. There is food for reflection. Ten cents of increase by a Legislature that found $800,000 in the public Treasury. Nor is that the sorest part of the amazing profligacy.—The enormous increase of expenditures, some legitimate, but the greater part useless and partisan, has involved a loan of $200,000—added to the $800,000 in the Treasury, making a round million squandered by this one meeting of the Legislature. The list of taxable property to meet these drains upon the people has been raised to $35,000,000. These figures do not need comment. It is only necessary to explain that the corrupt band which is responsible for this prodigious robbery so secured themselves by the disfranchising apportionment law that it will be impossible for any popular rebuke to interfere with them The men who put this vast system of public robbery in operation are secure in their places so long as they choose to hold them; for the apportionment bill takes the choice out of the hands of the people and puts it in the hands of causes and rings."

THE HEAD IN A HANDKERCHIEF.

Only a handkerchief, tied to the wall;
Man at the end [illegible]'s all.

Motionless, silent, against the damp stones,
Hangs a dark bundle of dead flesh and bones.

Through the barred window the light struggles dimly,
Touching his features and painting them grimly.

Backward the garish rays hastily flit—
What has the sunlight in common with it?

Spiders are weaving their network about him;
Bluebottle flies buzz around him and flout him.

Spiders have caught the wrong fish in their net,
Bluebottles never his dead flesh will fret.

Rats in the corner are winking their eyes;
What! are they thinking that that is a prize?

Cold-bodied vermin crawl over the floor;
Often they tasted him—now they want more.

Open the door! Give us air! Give us light!
Sickens the soul at this horrible sight.

Cut the tense handkerchief there at the wall!
Useless to hold him; just let him fall.

Many a buffet he had in this world,
Many a blow at that body was hurled.

He with his own hand has struck the last stroke,
Slipping his neck from the world's heavy yoke.

Carefulness, tenderness now are in vain;
Buffets and blows cannot hurt him again.

What was his name? Says the jailer, "A myth;
Here at the jail he was registered Smith."

Relatives? "None that I could see."
Friends? "They don't have 'em—such fellows as he."

Yesterday Nobody—that was his name;
Now he is Nothing—and who is to blame?

Once was his childish cup brimming with joy.
What! was that loathsome thing ever a boy?

Gayly he started in life's merry race—
Look at the rat that has crawled over his face!

Weak were his sinews—his nerves were unstrung.
Old did you think him? The fellow's quite young.

Never a glimpse did he gain of life's crown;
Soon in the struggle fell helplessly down.

Helplessly, hopelessly. Sorrow and care
Drove his weak nature to despair.

Hunger and starvation then brought him to—what!
Call it a crime; but it surely was not.

Openly, gladly, his guilt he confessed;
That was the key to his haven of rest.

Think of his dread of the world, and his fear;
Crazed for a home, and then seeking it here!

Suicide? That is the name of the act,
Yet he was long ago buried, in fact.

Buried his heart was, and buried his hope;
Little indeed was the work of the rope.

Bury his body, now, darkly at night;
Bury it anywhere, out of our sight.

THE STORY-TELLER.

"Can I sit with you?"

"Certainly, sir."

"Nice weather."

"Splendid, indeed."

"Crops growing finely?"

"Yes, couldn't do better."

I was sitting in a passenger coach, on a Wisconsin railroad, one day, years ago, when a good-looking, pleasant-spoken man came along, stopped at my seat, and the above conversation took place, the latter part of it after I had given him part of my seat.

Now, I am regarded as a social man. I like a joke, a good bit; and I think a sour, morose man, who uses his tongue only when forced to, is bound to die of some terrible disease, and to go to some place of red-hot punishment.

On entering a railroad car I always look about for a talkative man, and then get as close to him as possible, and drain him dry, if the journey is long enough.

And I want to state one thing more: Left an orphan before I could realize the event which made me one, I got kicked here and cuffed there, and "grew up between folks," as they say, I ought to have had, at the time of which I write, a pretty thorough knowledge of human nature, and have been enabled to read in a man's face if he intended me evil. I did not pride myself on being over keen or extra sharp, but the knocking around among strangers ought to give any one a good experience.

Well, the stranger and I fell into an easy train of conversation as we rode on together, and in ten minutes I began to enjoy his company. He was a well-made fellow, finely dressed, and he wore a fine watch and a simon-pure diamond ring. I never saw a man who could talk so easily and pleasantly. It seemed that he had but to open his mouth and the words fell right out.

I had traveled in the South, so had he. I had heard the loud roar of the Pacific; he knew all about it. I had been up in a balloon, down in a mine; been blown up, smashed up, and repaired again; my new friend had experienced all these things, and was waiting for something new to turn up of a more startling nature. We agreed on politics neither had any religion, and I had never met such a railroad companion.

Did you ever meet a man, who, though a stranger to you ten minutes before, could wrest from you secrets which you'd sworn to yourself not to reveal? Well, he was just such a man. It was not long before he commenced asking me questions. He did not seem trying to quiz or draw me out, but he asked me questions in such a sly, roundabout way, that before I knew it I was giving him my history.

I was at that time just on the point of being admitted to the bar of Wisconsin, as a student of Law & Law, of Brierville. The firm were old lawyers, with a lucrative practice, and it had been talked over that in about a month I should become the "Co." of the firm. A year before a farmer named Preston, down about four miles from Grafton, had died, and his matters had been put into the hands of Law & Law for settlement. Preston had died rich. He had money in the bank, railroad stocks, mortgages, etc., and everything was settled up to the satisfaction of the relict and the fatherless.

About a year before his death, being pinched for money, and not wishing to sell anything at a sacrifice, Preston had given a mortgage on his farm for three thousand dollars. While the papers read "one year from date," there was a verbal agreement that it should be lifted any day when Preston desired. A month after, when, having the money to clear off the paper, the old money bags holding it refused to disgorge, wishing to secure his interest for a year.

I was on my way to ascertain the date of expiration. A fire among our office papers had destroyed the memoranda, and I must go down and get the date from old Scrip, who lives south of Grafton about five miles. The stranger had pumped all this out of me in ten minutes, and yet I never once suspected that he was receiving information.

"I am not positive," I added, "but I am pretty sure the time is the 13th—which would be Tuesday next."

"And then your folks will send down the money and discharge the mortgage, of course?" he inquired.

"Oh, yes, I should most likely bring it down," I replied; and it never occurred to me how imprudent I was.

He turned the conversation into other channels, and did not once attempt to pump me further. We got to Grafton at 10:30, and to my great surprise he announced that he was to stop in the town on business for a few days. I had not asked his name or avocation, while he knew everything about me.

We went to the hotel, had dinner, and then I secured a lively team and drove out, getting through with the business so that I was back to take the 2:30 express east. My friend was on the porch of the hotel as I drove up, carrying that same honest, dignified face.

"Well, did you find out?" he inquired in his pleasant way.

"Yes; it is on the 13th, as I expected," I replied.

We had lunch together, and when we shook hands and parted, I had no more idea of seeing him again than I have of knowing you. In fact he told me that he should sail for England in a week or ten days, and should not return to America. At parting he gave me his card. It was a modest piece of pasteboard, and bore the name of, "George Raleigh," in old English scrip.

Everything at the office went on as usual, and the 13th came at length. Law & Law had arranged for me to go down with the money, and I looked upon it as a business of no special importance.

"We know you are all right," remarked the senior partner, as I was about to go; "but I want to give you a word of warning, nevertheless. Don't take any stranger into your confidence until you have passed out the money, and look out who sits next to you."

It was something new for him to caution me, and I could not but wonder at it; but in the bustle of getting on board the train I forgot what he said. Ordinary prudence had induced me to place the money, which was all in bank bills, and divided into three packages, under my shirt, and next to my skin, where the deft hand of a pickpocket could not reach it.

Interested in a newspaper, time flew by, as the train flew west, and at length the hoarse voice of the brakeman warned me that I had reached Grafton. I had leaped down and was making my way to the livery stable, when I heard a familiar voice, and looked up to see Raleigh. He was seated in a buggy, and had seemingly waited for me to come up.

"Don't express your surprise," he began, as I stopped at the wheel. "I did intend to go away, but I changed my mind, and I like this section so well that I am going out to-day to look at a farm, with a view of purchasing. Come, ride up to the hotel."

We rode up, ordered a lunch, and while we were discussing it, Mr. Raleigh discovered that the farm he was going to see was just beyond old Scrip's.

How fortunate! I could ride out with him, see the farm, and return in his company, and he would be greatly pleased.

I was also pleased. If any one had told me as we got into the buggy that George Raleigh meant to return wiih my money in his pocket and my blood upon his hands, I should have believed him a lunatic. And yet George Raleigh had planned to do that very same thing.

It was a lovely day in June, and the cool breeze and the sight of meadows and green groves made my heart grow larger. My companion was very talkative, but he didn't even hint at my errand.

"Oh! excuse me," he exclaimed, after we had passed a mile or so beyond the village, and were among the farm-houses. "I should have offered you this before."

He drew from his pocket a small flask of wine and handed it to me. Now, I was temperate in regard to drinks. In fact I detested the sight and smell of anything intoxicating. But I had not the moral courage to tell him so and hand back the flask undisturbed. I feared to offend him, and so I drank, perhaps, three good swallows. He called my attention to the woods on the left as he received back the flask, and when I looked around again he was just removing it from his mouth as if he had drank heartily.

In about five minutes I began to feel queer. The fences along the road seemed to grow higher and the trees to grow larger; something got into my ears so that the rattle of the buggy sounded a long way off.

"How strange! why, I believe I am going to be sick!" I exclaimed, holding on to the seat with all my might.

"You do look strange," he replied, a shaky smile stealing over his face. "I shouldn't wonder if it was apoplexy."

I did not suspect the game he had played. His words were like an echo, and his face seemed twice as large as it usually was. My head began to spin, and my brain to snap and crack, and I was greatly frightened.

"You are bad off," he continued, looking into my face. "I will drive as fast as possible, and get a doctor."

My tongue was so heavy that I could not reply. I clutched the seat, shut my eyes, and he put the horse at his best pace. We met a farmer's team, and I can remember that one of the occupants of the wagon called out to know what ailed me. Raleigh did not reply, but urged the horse forward.

About three miles from Grafton was a long stretch of forest, and this we soon reached. The pain in my head was not so violent, and I was not so badly affected when opening my eyes. I had settled into a sort of dumb stupor, with a brain so benumbed that I had to say to myself, "this is a tree, that is a stump," etc., before I could make sure that I was not wrong. Half a mile down the road after we struck the forest, and then Raleigh turned the horse into a blind road leading back into the woods. I could not understand what he intended. I tried to grapple with the question, but could not solve it.

"Well, here we are," exclaimed Raleigh, when we had reached a point forty rods from the road.

He stopped the horse, got out and hitched him, and then came around to the wheel.

"You don't feel just right, but I guess you will be better soon," he remarked. "Come, let me help you down."

He reached up his arms, and I let go the seat and fell into them. It seemed to me as if I weighed a ton, but he carried me along without an effort, and laid me down within about a rod of the fence which ran along on one side of an old pasture. Just now the effect of the drug was wearing off and I began to feel a little better, and I got a faint suspicion that something unusual had happened. But I was powerless to move a limb; the sensation was like that when your foot goes to sleep.

"Can you speak?" inquired Raleigh, bending over me, "because if you can it will save me some trouble. I want to know just where you have stored away that money."

Now I began to realize my situation. His face looked natural again, and the load was off my tongue. I also felt that I could move my fingers a little.

"George Raleigh! are you going to rob me?" I asked, finding my voice at last.

"Well, some folks might call it robbing, but we dress up the term a little by calling it the only correct financial way of equalizing the floating currency, so that each one is provided for and no one is left out."

"You shan't have the money; I will die first!" I yelled, rising a little.

"Ah, I see—didn't take quite enough," he coolly remarked. "Well, I have provided for this."

He went to the buggy, procured ropes and a gag, and kneeled down beside me. I had but little strength yet, and he conquered me in a moment. Lying on my right side looking toward the fence, he tied my hands behind me and then forced the gag into my mouth.

"There now! you see you are nicely fixed up, and all because you acted like a fool, instead of a sensible young lawyer soon to be admitted to the bar."

While he was speaking—indeed while he was trying me, I had caught sight of the white face of a little girl looking at us between the rails of the fence. I could see her great blue eyes. There were red stains around her mouth and on the little hand resting on the rail, and I knew that she was some farmer's child searching for strawberries. I could not warn her of her danger, and I feared that she would be seen or heard. While Raleigh was tying the last knot, I winked at the little girl as hard as I could, hoping that she would move away. But she did not go.

"Well, now for the money," said Raleigh, and he began searching my pockets. He went from one to the other, removing all the articles, felt down my bootleg, and then finally passed his hand over my bosom and discovered the money.

"Ha! there it is!" he exclaimed, drawing out the packages; and he was cool enough to go at it to count out the money. As he commenced the little girl waved her hand to me. My heart went thumping, for I expected she would utter a word or a shout, but she sank down from sight, and I caught a gleam of her frock as she passed through the grass.

"You see, my young friend," remarked Raleigh, as he drew off one of his boots and deposited some of the bills in it, "there's nothing like transacting business as it should be transacted. Some men would have shot or stabbed you, but it is only the apprentices who do such work. All the real gentlemen of our calling do business as gentlemen should."

He drew off the other boot, and placed some "fifties" and "twenties" in it, and then continued:

"I have it all planned how to deal with you as soon as I get this money disposed of around my person. I shall lay you on your back and pour the balance of this wine down your throat. There's enough of it to make you sleep until to-morrow night, and by that time I shall be hundreds of miles away. As soon as I see that the drug has taken effect I shall untie your hands and remove the gag. When you come out of your sleep—if you ever do—you had better crawl out to the road, where you will be most likely to meet some traveler. I want to use the horse and buggy, otherwise I would leave them for you."

How cool he talked! He treated the matter as if it were a regular transaction in which I fully acquiesced. He had me a fast prisoner, and I felt that he could do just as he pleased. While I was thinking I saw the little white face appear between the rails again, but in a moment it faded away and its place was taken by the sunburned phiz of a farmer. He looked from me to Raleigh and back again, and I winked to him in a way which he readily understood. His face disappeared, and I felt that I should be saved.

"No, old grip won't get his tin to-day," mused Raleigh, storing away the bills in his pockets. "You will go back to Law & Law feeling out and cut up. But they shouldn't blame you—it is not your way at all. True, had you minded your business on the cars and had not been so free with a stranger, this would not have happened. I was on my way to Milwaukee, and had no thought of such rich pickings here."

"Now, in just about a minute we'll be through with this business," he remarked, trying to put the mouth of the flask between my jaws.

I rolled my head to one side and he did not succeed. He was jamming the flask against my teeth, when I caught sound of a soft step, the crash of a club, and Raleigh rolled off my body. He tried to leap up, but three or four farmers struck him down, and one of the blows rendered him senseless. Before he came to I was free of ropes and gag, and we had him nicely bound.

Over beyond the pasture a farmer and his hands were raking up hay. "Little blue eyes," only eight years old, had wandered off after strawberries, and had fortunately witnessed part of Raleigh's proceedings. She had hurried back to her father and told him "that a man was all tied up out there," and he had returned to the fence. Understanding the situation he and his men had moved around so as to secure an advantage, Raleigh's capture was the result.

When the rascal found his senses he was terribly taken back, and cursed enough for a whole Flanders army. We took him back to Grafton, and when I last saw him he was on his way to the penitentiary to serve a sentence of fifteen years.

The mortgage was lifted after all, and the gift which Law & Law sent little [illegible] kept her in dresses for many a year.

Industries of Large Cities.

The industries of the large cities and of the States, by comparison, as given in census statistics, are of much interest. Here, for example, are a few counties, embracing leading cities, giving the number of establishments, the hands employed, and the value of products:

Brooks' Assault Upon Sumner.

The Boston Commonwealth makes the following statement: "A party of gentlemen were dining with Hon. James L. Orr, in Washington, just prior to his late departure to his foreign mission, when he incidentally spoke of Brooks' assault upon Sumner. He said he had heard of the intended assault, and meant to have prevented it by being in the Senate Chamber and arresting the blow. On his way thither he stopped in the library to look at a book, which, not being readily found, detained him a few minutes longer than he proposed, and during the delay the assault was made. Brooks confessed to him before his death that he never meant to have it so deadly as it was,—intending only to 'disgrace' the Senator with the South by a flagellation,—and said he could not believe at first that Sumner was really hurt. He said, further, that he was tired of life, and wanted to die. The notoriety he won was killing him by inches; every bully and blackguard in the South thrust his attentions and acquaintance upon him; and it was too terrible a punishment to bear. Mr. Orr said he had no doubt Brooks felt the keenest regret for his part in the affair, and that he was indeed tired of life with the burden of notoriety he was obliged to carry from it. He represented him as a generous-hearted, impulsive man, who, with the idea of vindicating his relative, Senator Butler, and the 'chivalry' of his section, was induced to make the assault."

Mr. Choate Conquering a Jury.

We once heard Rufus Choate make an argument five hours long to a jury. The statement of his case, the reasoning, the appeals to the sensibilities of the jury, were over in two hours. Still the advocate continued speaking, repeating with additional vehemence what he had said before, with new illustrations and arguments. We looked at the jury in order to discover the cause of this seemingly useless expenditure of mind and force. Eleven of them were palpably convinced; the twelfth, the foreman, a hard-headed, unimaginative, unimpressible man of business, had on his face a look of incredulity. Choate devoted three hours to the task of breaking down the will of this one man, and of compelling him to admit the cogency of reasoning which was foreign to his habits of thought. He did not stop, and we then thought he never would stop until he had conquered this disbeliever. It seemed for some time that hours of talking would be of no avail. At rast, however, the hard countenance softened, the stony eyes were moistened, the lips lost their rigidity—in short, the whole man collapsed. Then Choate concluded his argument in a few quiet and telling sentences, and sat down, sure of a verdict.—E. P. Whipple.

Spiders Traveling by Balloon.

A correspondent of the Scientific American relates a singular incident. In company with other persons, he was crossing Seneca Lake on the 10th of October, when a small wave was seen near the center of the lake, caused by the moving of some insects. Upon investigating the matter, it was found that three spiders were gliding over the surface of the water, and attached to them was a single thread, the size of a knitting needle, extending in the air to the height of 30 feet, at an angle of 60 degrees, and terminating with an enormous balloon-shaped web. This latter was judged to be eight feet long and five feet wide, with stays fastened to the main thread, something similar to those of a balloon, and it was managed, apparently, by an innumerable number of insects stationed at proper intervals. The party attempted to obtain a closer view, but when within a few feet of the web, it began to rise, and the last spider, which proved to be about the size of a house-fly, was brought back by the stroke of an oar. The balloon went onward and upward until lost to sight.

Good Breeding.

An anecdote is told of a certain set of young ladies which hints at a great deal concerning the education of our "upper classes." "So far as manners are concerned," says the narrator, "I am bound to say that the worst cases of rudeness and ill-breeding that have ever come to my knowledge have not occurred in the 'rural districts,' nor among the lower ten thousand, but in those circles of America where the whole aim of life might seem to be the cultivation of its excellencies. For instance, I know a watering place, where the story is currently told of certain young ladies, who have what is called a "position in society," and who, after refusing an invitation to the house of a lady not quite admitted to such a position, yet did not disdain to go by night and sit on her piazza during the entertainment, without her knowledge, to look through the windows at her guests, and finally to partake of her supper, brought to them surreptitiously by an obsequious cavalier.

The basket is made of willow and covered with satin that was once white, but has now gone into the "sear and yellow leaf."

LAST summer was very favorable for arctic exploration. The thermometric range in Iceland and the Orkney Islands was higher than for many years previously, and Capt. THE Rev. George C. Harding, according to the Louisville Courier-Journal, is one of the most remarkable men of the age. Regularly once or twice a year he starts a Sunday paper at Indianapolis. As soon as the enterprise bankrupts him he goes to St. Louis or Cincinnati and connects himself with one of the daily papers there. And then, when he gets money enough to pay his railroad fare, he goes back to Indianapolis and starts another Sunday paper.

Good Cooking.

It has been practically demonstrated that the good health of the community depends more upon good cooking than upon anything else, and yet cooking is the only art that is nowhere systematically taught. More of practical lessons in our private schools for girls in this line would be an advantage. Home education by competent heads of families on the subject is also very desirable. If a large portion of the attention which is given to dress, of which there is now an over and silly abundance, was directed to the careful study and practice of cooking, so as to attain to excellence and economy in the art, good health would be promoted. Good dispositions would naturally follow; for dyspepsia, engendered from badly cooked food, would no longer beget bad temper, and the peace of the household and happiness of the family would be greatly improved.

CURES FOR A FELON.—As soon as discovered take some spirits of turpentine in a cup, dip the finger in it, and then hold the hand near a hot fire till dry; then dip it in again and repeat for fifteen minutes, or until the pain ceases. The next day, with a sharp knife, pare off the thick skin and you will find something like a honey-comb filled with clear water; open the cells and the felon is gone. If the felon is too far advanced for turpentine, oil of origanum, treated in the same way, will cure. If too far advanced for either to cure, the felon will still be benefited, as it will be less painful. Never draw it.

THE Pall Mall Gazette of a late date reports that sixty-seven bodies of the victims of the Smyrna cafe and concert disaster have been found, and that many more still remained in the deep mud into which they sank when the building fell into the sea. The spectacle of the poor drowned acrobats lying dead in their stage finery at St. Antoine's Hospital was very pathetic indeed.

MY LITTLE WIFE.

Our table is spread for two to-night—
No guests our bounty share;
The damask cloth is snowy white,
The service elegant and bright,
Our china quaint and rare;
My little wife presides,
And perfect love abides.

The bread is sponge, the butter gold,
The muffins nice and hot,
What though the cold winds without blow cold?
The walls a little world enfold,
And the storm is soon forgot,
In the firelight's cheerful glow,
Beams a paradise below.

A fairer picture who hath seen?
Soft lights and shadows blent;
The central figure of the scene,
She sits, my wife, my love my queen—
Her head a little bent;
And in her eyes of blue
I read my bliss anew.

I watch her as she pours the tea,
With quiet, gentle grace;
With fingers deft and movements free
She mixes in the cream for me,
A bright smile on her face;
And as she sends it up
I pledge her in my cup.

Was ever man before so blessed?
I secretly reflect,
The passing thought she must have guessed,
For now dear lips on mine are pressed,
An arm is round my neck,
Dear treasure of my life—
God bless her—little wife!

WHY don't farmers engage more largely in growing basket-wood. There is nothing that will pay better. The demand for this material is yearly becoming greater and the supply is yearly growing less. In fact, its entire disappearance is no far-off possibility. A STRANGER stepped into a North Adams, Mass., restaurant the other day, and ordered a plate of beans. On finishing his lunch he asked the price. "Thirty cents," replied the host, thinking that he had a customer from whom he could make a few extra cents. "Isn't that a devil of a price for beans?" asked the stranger. Failing to get a reduction he paid the bill and left. The next day the saloon-keeper received a telegram, the charge on which was thirty cents. On being opened, it was found to contain neither date ncr signature, but only the words: "Isn't that a devil of a price for beans?"

Financial Cost of the Franco-Prussian War.

A writer in the Revue des Deux Mondes estimates at ten milliards of francs the total cost to France of the war with Germany. The following table shows approximately the sum paid, or yet to be paid, to Germany as the indemnity or for damages

	Francs.
The war indemnity........................	5,000,000,000
Interest on three milliards (two years)	300,000,000
Cost of the German troops till July 1, 1872	273,837,000
War contributions paid by the departments other than the Seine...........	39,063,000
Taxes collected by the Germans in departments other than the Seine..........	49,149,000
Value of the requisition in departments other than the Seine..............	327,381,000
Estimate of losses in departments other than the Seine................	141,136,000
Value of articles seized without requisition..................................	264,172,000
War contribution of Paris................	200,000,000
Valuation of losses in the Seine department..................................	70,000,000
Charged in France for balance of imposts in arrears.....................	6,069,000
Indemnity to gendarmerie and others	3,000,000
Total..	6,673,811,000

In this sum of nearly seven milliards are not included national pensions, the amount of the requisitions made by the French authorities which have been ordered to be reimbursed by the law of the 15th of June, 1871, the "reparations" made or to be made in State property, the war expenses of the French army, reorganization and resupply of material, etc. It may well be conceived, then, that ten milliards will not do more than cover the actual outlay. Yet the total has been nearly paid.

EXTREMES MEET.—Monarchs have before now been known to marry village maidens, and pianists have turned abbes, but the following story, related by the Trovatore, is still more remarkable: A monk of the Order of St. Dominick has stripped off his cassock to marry the prima donna of the Florence opera. Not content with this step toward secularisation, the good brother is preparing to follow it up with a yet more decided one. He aspires to nothing less than to divide the operatic laurels with his wife. At one bound he intends to land from the altar to the stage.

A GRACEFUL man is that Scranton editor. He had a gold pen given him, but keeps it under a glass case, saying his old scissors will do well enough for his editorials.

The Winter Climates of the Far Northwest.

The climatic record of the engineers of the Northern Pacific railroad for the past winter presents some interesting data bearing upon the future of the great Northwest. From the official statements published it appears that despite the extraordinary rigors and excessive snows of the past winter, the snow-fences along that line have enabled the trains to run with but little interruption. Although the winter is one of those of cyclical cold, it has visited the Eastern States and Canada almost as roughly as the farther West. In the Rocky Mountains, east of the main divide, at Bozeman, near the summit-level of the Northern Pacific, from the 5th to the 25th of January—midwinter—inclusive, the average temperature was above the freezing point, and it is strikingly noticeable that in Montana the winter is, in point of mildness, a strong contrast to that experienced in Minnesota and Wisconsin, as also, (it might be added,) that usually felt in Canada. So marked was this mildness that the farmers in Montana began their plowing in the last days of January. But the winter climates of Oregon and Washington Territory exhibit still more striking contrasts with those of the States which border the Upper Mississippi and lakes, and, indeed, of the whole East. The bland and uniform conditions which prevail on the Pacific belt may be inferred from the fact that at Portland, Oregon, the mean temperature for January was 45 deg. above zero, with but one snow of two and a half inches, the grass growing and flowers blooming early in February, without artificial protection.

The comparatively low levels of the Northern Pacific route, its holding largely to the river-valleys of the Missouri, Yellowstone, and Columbia—all natural avenues to the Pacific ocean—together with the oceanic warmth of the Asiatic marine current, wafted over these regions by the westerly winds, explain their comparative mildness in winter. While, everywhere east of the Rocky Mountains, the winter of 1882-73 has been exceptionally cold, the Pacific seaboard has been unusually free from the biting blast and the snow-storms of the Atlantic belt.

These facts have a most important bearing on the future of the northwestern tier of Territories, and warrant the conclusion of many eminent geographers and statesmen, that these Territories will constitute an empire of wealth in themselves.—New York Times.

Masculine Kleptomania.

One of those crimes which startle people because of their utter unreasonableness, has just occurred in Buffalo. An ex-colonel in the late war, a man who fought bravely and won honor and distinction in the field and respect from his fellows, and whose private life since that time has, to all appearance, been blameless, has been caught in the act of pilfering goods from the Erie railway freight cars, and it is found that he, in connection with accomplices, has been carrying on a system of burglary and theft for some time past. On searching his residence several thousand dollars' worth of goods were found secreted. He usually chose a dark night for his operations, and selecting a portion of a train where he would be secure from observation, proceeded at his leisure to break open such cars as he thought contained the goods suitable for his purpose. He was aided in this part of his job by his nephew, while another man with a horse and wagon was stationed in the vicinity, ready to transport the stolen property to a place of safety. The company has been aware for some time that thieves were operating upon its freight cars, and on placing the matter in the hands of detectives the above result was reached. The case excites much sensation, as the person referred to was well known, and the last man, perhaps, who would be suspected of such a crime.

America at the Vienna Exposition.

From the advance sheets of Mr. Eben Brewer's official catalogue of the American section of the World's Fair at Vienna, we are enabled to present to our readers a synopsis of the number of exhibitors. The whole number of exhibitors to the American section is so far 645, which will be somewhat increased before the exhibition is closed. This addition will arise from American manufacturers and artists resident in Europe, and will forward their works from thence. Divided by States, the following resume may be of interest:

HUSBANDRY—Mormonism.

Railroads Among the Turks.

Turkey is turning her attention to railway enterprises, and though some of her complete lines and comtemplated projects might seem small to American railway kings, they indicate progression and a promise of better things. The Levant Herald says that M. Cottard, Director of Enterprise Generale for railway construction, has been inspecting a branch line from Adrianople to Dede-Agatch and the various sections of the great main line from Stamboul to Adrianople. The latter is fast approaching completion, and will be finished during April as far as the river Maritza.

An iron bridge is being built there connecting with other lines, which will effect an important and convenient railroad network. Surveys for a railroad from Shumla to Adrianople have been complted, and though the new line will be shorter than that proposed by the Roumanian Railway Company, which was rejected on strategic grounds, it will necessitate a tunnel through the Balkan Mountains of some 4,000 yards in length. General Mehemet Pasha, Chief of the Staff of the Second Turkish Army Corps, has brought to Constantinople the tracings of the new line, which is regarded as advantageous in the military point ot view, and not liable to hostile attacks from an enemy's forces moving inland from the shores of the Black Sea.

Interesting to Milk Drinkers.

It is stated of Prof. Law, of Cornell University, that, having one day during the hot weather observed a peculiar ropy appearance in the cream, which had risen upon the milk which was supplied him by a milkman, he was led to examine it under a microscope. These observations resulted in the discovery of numerous living organisms of a character quite foreign to good milk. A careful survey of the dairy whence the milk was obtained disclosed nothing wrong, the dairy-house being well kept and the cows apparently in good condition. But on looking through the pastures it was found that the only water to which the cows had access was that contained in a stagnant pool. Submitting some of this water to a similar microscopic examination, he discovered the same class of organisms as those found in the cream. The presence of like organisms was also detected in blood taken from the cows. In order to arrive at more definite results, he next obtained specimens of good milk, free from organic impurities, and into this he put a drop of water from the stagnant pool. In a short space of time the milk developed an indefinite number of these living organisms, and became similar in character to that obtained from the milkman.

No Sabbath.

In a prize essay on the Sabbath, written by a journeyman printer in Scotland, which for singular power of language and beauty of expression, has never been surpassed, there occurs the following passage. Read it and then reflect for awhile what a dreary and desolate page would this life present if the Sabbath were blotted out from our calculation:

"Yokefellow! think how the abstraction of the Sabbath would hopelessly enslave the working classes with whom we are identified. Think of labor going on in one monotonous and eternal cycle, limbs forever straining, the brow forever sweating, the feet forever plodding, the brain forever throbbing, the shoulders forever drooping, the loins forever aching and the restless mind forever scheming.

"Think of the beauty it would efface, the merry-heartedness it would extinguish; of the giant strength it would tame; of the resources of nature it would crush; of the sickness it would breed; of the projects it would wreck; of the groans it would extort; of the lives it would immolate, and of the cheerless graves it would prematurely dig! See them toiling and moiling, sweating and fretting, grinding and hewing, weaving and spinning, strewing and gathering, mowing and reaping, razing and building, digging and planting, striving and struggling—in the garden and in the field, in the granary and in the barn, in the factory and in the mill, in the warehouse and in the shop, on the mountain and in the ditch, on the roadside and in the wood, in the city and in the country, on the sea and on the shore, in the day of brightness and of gloom. What a picture would the world present, if we had no Sabbath."

Cerebro-Spinal Meningitis.

During the first half of last year eight hundred persons in New York were attacked by a singular form of disease, and of the number six hundred died. Physicians call this disorder cerebro-spinal meningitis, which being interpreted means an inflammation of the membranes enveloping the brain and spinal chord. Throughout the Northern States it is popularly known as a spotted fever, in the South as the cold plague, in Europe by various technical and local names, and in all countries as one of the most deadly affections to which mankind is subject. It frequently, as in the present instance, appears in the form of an epidemic, and its history is, that these visitations are liable to occur after longer or shorter intervals. Like epidemic diseases in general, it is, no doubt, largely preventible, and the wonder is, that with the extraordinary fatality that has always attended it, there has never been any united public demand for the investigation of its causes, or the means of staying its spread. But in spite of this astonishing difference on the part of those who are most directly interested, physicians have obtained some important facts which seem to link the origin of the difficulty with overcrowding and the prevalence of filth, conditions which at all times are too common in all cities and towns, but which, with a stupid blindness to his own best interests, man is forever tolerating. The evidence that cases of this disease originate, partly at least, through the operation of causes that lie within our reach, though not as fully as could be wished, is still very convincing.—Galaxy.

Means What He Says.

Though "confirmations strong as proofs of Holy Writ" and as numerous as the sands on the sea shore, were produced to prove that Dr. Pierce, the proprietor of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy, is in earnest and means what he says, when he offers $500 reward for a case of Catarrh which he cannot cure, yet there would be some skeptics and fogies who would continue to shout "Humbug!" "HUMBUG!" "It cannot be, because Dr. Homespun says Catarrh cannot be cured." Now, this Dr. Homespun is the identical, good-natured old fellow who honestly believes and persists in declaring that this earth is not round or spherical, but flat as a "slap-jack," and does not turn over, otherwise the water would all be spilled out of Deacon Bascom's mill pond. But astronomical science has positively demonstrated and proven that Dr. Homespun is wrong in supposing the earth to be flat and stationary, and medical science is daily proving the fact that he is no less mistaken and behind the times in regard to the curability of Catarrh. In short, it has been positively proven that this world moves, and that medical science is progressive—the opinion of Dr. Homespun to the contrary notwithstanding. That Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy will cure Catarrh, thousands who have used it can attest.

Wake Up the System.

When the physical energies droop and the mind becomes lethargic, it may be taken for granted that the digestion is impaired and the liver derelict in its duty. Upon the condition of the stomach and liver depend the condition of the blood, and upon the quality of that fluid depends the vigor of the body and the capacity for brain labor. It is, therefore, of the utmost importance to men engaged in active pursuits, who are subject to attacks of bodily weakness and mental stupor or indifference, to know from what source they can obtain immediate and permanent relief. The tonic and anti-bilious stimulating elements combined in Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, peculiarly adapt that genial preparation to cases of this kind. The rapidity with which it rouses the dormant powers of the muscular and nervous system, is marvellous. Acting first upon the digestive organs, and through them upon the fluids of the body, the nerves and the brain, it renovates, refreshes and regulates, not only the corporal powers, but the mind itself. As debility and its usual concomitant, mental torpor or depression, are often caused, and where they already exist, are always aggravated by the damp and variable weather prevalent in the spring months, persons of feeble stamina and weak nerves, should go through a course of this agreeable stimulant at this season, and indeed would derive great advantage from taking it at least once a day throughout the year.

ATTEND TO THE FIRST SYMPTOMS OF CONSUMPTION, and that the disease may be checked in its incipiency, use at once Dr. Jayne's Expectorant, a safe remedy for all affections of the Lungs and Bronchia.

Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy effects cures upon scientific principles, by its mild, healing properties, to which the disease gradually yields, when the system has been put in perfect order with Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, which should be taken earnestly, to correct the blood and system, which are always at fault, also to act specifically, as it does, upon the diseased glands and lining membrane of the nose and its communicating chambers. The Catarrh Remedy should be applied with Dr. Pierce's Nasal Douche, as this is the only form of instrument yet invented with which fluid medicine can be carried high up and perfectly applied to all parts of the affected nasal passages and chambers in which sores and ulcers exist, and from which the discharge generally proceeds.
So successful has the above course of treatment proven, that the proprietor offers $500 Reward for a case of "Cold in Head" Ozena or Catarrh which he cannot cure. The two medicines with instrument, for $2, by all druggists.

The Auburn Courier

Thursday, April 10th, 1873

The national agricultural congress will be held at Indianapolis on the 3d Wednesday in May.

Madison Indiana has one. She is one hundred and four, and walks two miles to visit her little daughter of eighty.

Senator Schurz refuses to take any of the $5,000 back pay robery voted to him, as to other members of congress, at the close of the recent session.

Potter and Roberts, two democratic congressmen from the state of New York decline to accept the $3,000 back pay which the late congress voted its members before its adjournment.

At the Vienna World's Fair there will probably be exhibited the greatest collection of American loafers, bummers and dead beats that was ever assembled together on any occasion since the present geological epoch commenced.

Parker's landing, Pennsylvania, has just passed through a terrible fire.—Seventy-two buildings are destroyed so far as heard from. The losses can not fall short of $300,000—The fire is suppesed to be the work of an incendiary.

Two murderers hung during the past week, stated on the scaffold that whisky brought them to their terrible fate. When upon the scaffold one of them siesed the rope, and holding it up before those who assembled to see them executed said: "Whisky did this for me. When any of you take a drink hereafter think of this rope and remember my fate.

General James A. Garfield, member of congress from one of the Ohio districts, who was unpleasantly mixed up in the Credit Mobiler business has been asked to resign his seat because he voted himself five thousand dollars for services all ready performed and paid for. Before going to congress he was a minister of the gospel, but after becoming a Radical politician, he fell from grace, and ioining in the ways of the world, he has managed to become the chief of congressional sinners. But resign he won't, that's clear.

We understand from good authority that Grant contemplates a scheme to reward Sheridan for his complasency, and punish Sherman for his contumacy in the matter of their different treatment of his boy Freddie. Sherman's place will be made unpleasant to him—The Secretary of War really being General of the Army now—that his high spirit will take offense and induce him to resign. Of course Sheridan then steps in. How do the Sherman boys—the friends of 'Old Tecumseh'—like this? They will probably like it as well as Sherman now likes President Grant.

Will. Moreau, the rotten scalawag, whom Senator Morton kept in his employ last fall, as an emblem of pure unadulterated, stright out democracy has recently turned up at Atlanta Georgia, Failing at three card monte, he commenced, and when last heard from, was indulging the passtime away in blowing the silver trumpet of the gospel, not particularly to call the righteous but to frighten and intimidate sinners, and thereby enjoy the favor and hospitality of the members. Like the villain he is he has been paying his addresses to, and has succeeded in winning the affections of a beautiful and accomplished young lady, and is to be married shortly, if no Providence interferes in behalf of the young lady. This scamp has already had three wives, one of whom is still living. It is to be hoped that information of his scoundrelism will reach Atlanta before another victim is made.

Blanton Duncan, a companion of Moreau, and who was in the employ of President Grant to illustrate the principles of straightout Democracy, has also imitated Moreau's desire for new fields of labor, (for it is unhealthy for men of their habits to remain long in one locality,) and moved his baggage nto Texas, where he propose to better his fortune, whenever opportunity offers.

San Bernarding Cal., claims to raise the best, sweetest, and largest oranges produced in the United States, and to excel those of Cuba. The reason of this perfection is that there is never no frost in that country.

Farmers! through the management of the best working Legislature the State ever had, the State levy for the next two years will be ONLY FIFTEEN CENTS on the hundred dollars valuation. This is an increase of TEN CENTS over that of the last two years The farmers of DeKalb county, may perhaps want to know the cause for this increase. The Goshen Democrat answers it for us and we adopt its language as our own. It says—James Ryan is not State Treasurer, But admitting that there be some necessary increase in the payment of the old canal bonds of the canal and other items does not an increase of TWO HUNDRED PER CENT, look as though it was necessary to provide for an enormous sum of money, to pay the expenses of an extravegant Legislature?—This is an enormous increase! Our Legislators seem to think the people can stand anything! Under the new appointment and assessment of property which takes place this year, there will be a large increase of the taxable property—there is no date to determine what this increase will be—but anyone at all conversent with the new Revenue law, knows that the gross amount will be very much larger—still our wise legislators fixed the sum at fifteen cents.

Our State taxes for several years have been very low. In comparison with our county and municipal taxes, a mere trifle. It has been the boast of our people, but now, with all our other berdens, a tax of fifteen cents comes on: It cannot be justified in the light of the necessary expenses of the State. It was the hardest kind of work that the levy was put at fifteen cents.—TWENTY CENTS was called for, Our member Hon. John Thompson offered to amend by inserting fifteen which was carried. We shall refer to this matter again.

A Washington letter-writer says:—Senator Wilson's returning of his $5,000 to help pay the National debt does not excite especial admiration among his brother senators. One of them remarked that it was characteristic for the greasy hypocrite that he should first draw the money from the Treasury and then return it when he found that there was a public clamor against his holding on to it. Another Senator insists that Wilson during the session kept precise account of how much each Senator drank during the day. And he charged his dead wife with censure that he himself was too cowardly to bear! Magnanimity! This is the material the Radical party make Vice Presidents of! Tell it not in Gath! publish it not in Ascalon! But if you do, and have any respect for the American Eagle, tone down as handsomely as possible, even if you have to "stretch it" a little. It is perhaps wrong, unchristain-like, somewhat demoralizing at any time to tell a gentle little fib, but as a dernier resort anything good Lord anything, to keep in the shade our national disgrace entailed by electing a mam like Wilson.

Brevet Lieut, Colonel Forthsythe who was reduced to his real rank, and ordered to his regiment to make a place for young Grant. on Sherridan's staff, enlisted as a private when the war first broke out. By active service he rose to be Lieutenant Colonel, was noticed by Sheridan and assigned to duty on his staff, and there remained until the war closed, when he was sent to the plains under Carter. There he again distinguished himself and in five days fight with twelve times their number of Indians—whipped them. In the fight nearly every man was wounded. Forsythe himself having a leg broked by one bail and another, lodged in his thigh, making him an invalid for two years. On his recovery he was again assigned to Sheridan's staff. Now he is reduced from his brevet rank and sent to his regiment to make place for a drunken young dullard who has never done a stroke of service, and who graduated "at the skin of his teeth" because he was 'anybody of that name' 'Rah for Lieutenant, Colonel Fredric Grant.

The Bonaparte family have been exiled from France by a vote of the National Assembly. This shows that, in the opinion of the Assembly, the existence of that family in France is a source of danger to the existing Government. Otherwise, like the Princes of Orleans, they would be allowed to stay in the country. There are those who have been telling us that the Imperial party have no strength in France, but this is as clear indication to the contrary.

Revival at Denver.

By a dispatch we have learned that the great religious revival which has been in progress at Denver, for the last two weeks under the direction of Rev. E. P. Hammond, continues with increased interest. Several hundred conversions have been. At the request of a prominent sporting man, two hundred tickets were distributed among gamblers saloonkeepers and prostitutes Many attended meetings occupying reserved seats. Five or six of this class arose for prayers. A committee are visiting all the saloons, houses of prostitution etc., praying with the inmates, inviting them to meetings, and are received with respectful attention. Six prisoners in jail is said to be under deep conviction. Prayer meetings are held every morning in the jail. The influence of the meetings is extending among the professional and business men.

An innocent female justice of Wyoming asked of a lawyer the other day: "Who is this Highlow Jack we hear so much about."

We were pleased to receive a call from Niel McKay, Esq., of Fort Wayne, who is here attending a meeting of Directors of the Baltimore Road. COMING.— The extensive circus and menagerie of G. G. Grady will pitch its tent in Auburn, in a few weeks, so we are told by one connected therewith. This establishment has a much greater outfit this year than ever before. Many New features have been made during the winter, and it will not be surpassed by any other show on the road.

The present popular and efficient Clerk of the city of Fort Wayne, S. P. Freeman, Esq., is a candidate for re-election. Sam has proved himself a prompt, attentive and thorough official, and there is not a person in the city more obliging and accommodating. We like to see real merit rewarded and there is no good reason why he should not be re-elected. There is no doubt, however, of this result if the voters look to their own interest.

J. P. Gilmore, a painter by trade, residing about three miles south of Kendallville, has been missing since last Friday. A search was instituted, and Monday he was found in the woods, not far from his home, hanging to a small sapling. He had made a rope out of his shirt, and when found his toes touched the ground. It is supposed the cause of his suicide was being in reduced circumstances and unable to get work. He leaves a large family.

Just see what a concentrated throb of the heart would do: A man's total outward work, his whole effect upon the world in 24 hours has been reconed about 50 foot-tons. That may be taken as a "good hard day's work." During the same time the heart has been working at the rate of a 120 foot-tons. That is to say, if all the pulses of a day and night could be concentrated and welded into one great throb it would be enough to throw a ton of iron 120 feet into the air, and yet the heart is never weary.

The Fort Wayne Gazette concludes some remarks concerning the new school law, as follows:

In short, the County Superintendent is expected to be a man of thorough education and wide experence in public school matters, and the office is one of the most important in the county.

Yes and besides being thorough and experienced, he is expected to be a liberal gentleman.

As Spring is now evidently upon us, some of our citizens will probably have an attack of spring fever (puribus lazibus) for which we publish the following simple remedy. Take a piece of timber 4x6 and ten feet in length. Saw it into four pieces of equal length, put them in pairs and cross them in the form of an X connecting them by a cross piece two or three inches in diameter. On this frame place a hard maple four-foot stick, then take a common wood saw and draw it back and forth across the stick until relief is found. Replace the stick as often as exhausted. This receipt is a family heir loom and was given us for publication by special request.

OUR GREATEST CALAMITY!

Great Destruction of Property!

Snyder and Ensley's Block in Ruins

Our church going people had scarcely passed the new brick block on Seventh street, last Sabbath evening, on their way to their various residences, when a sullen roar fell upon the air like the sound of a mighty wind, or the escape of steam from an engine. There was little effort required to devine the cause. All day, and the day before the inner foundation wall of Snyder's building, just completed gave indications of giving away and though no one prophesied that the fall would occur so soon, nevertheless, it was regarded as in a most dangerous condition. This building adjoined the Ensley block, the first division of which contained a cellar, the west wall of which next to the Snyder building, is the one that gave way. Some think that the frost and water which the wall and cellar contained were the chief causes of the fall, but there is no doubt that it was mainly owing to the miserable foundation wall which had been pitched together, without regard to mechanism or safety. Stones perhaps four inches thick and two feet wide were placed in the wall side ways, and a poor article of cement depended upon to hold them together. The best brick work in the world would not hold good over such a wall. People erecting such buildings should read the parable of the sandy foundation and that built upon the rock, if they don't know more about it than was evinced in this case.—It was only last week that we spoke of the fine establishment and many facilities possessed of Mr. Snyder in the implement trade, and now we are made to chronicle not only the destruction of his fine edifice but also a large amount of machinery which the building contained. Reapers, Mowers, Plows, Hay-rakes and other articles were crushed down to almost total destruction with the fall.

Messrs. Martin & Raseley, had occupied the second story front but a few days. Every convenience and facility was added and great pains taken to have their establishment in good shape. The whole stock of about $3,000 went down in this crash.

Mr. Ensley's west building, next to Snyder's was also totally demolished, leaving but three store rooms, of what would soon have been the finest block of buildings in the county. All crushed and crumbled because of the ignorance or lazyness and stupidity of one or two workmen.

Monday was employed in recovering from the ruins that portion of its contents which was not entirely destryed. Leather and harness and other articles from the harness shop to the amount of about $1,000 was recovered but the machinery taken therefrom was in a terribly damaged state. Nearly $5000 of the latter was destroyed.

We are glad to state, however, that Mr. Snyder, though his loss is great, does not despair. With true Spartan courage he has gone to work, with the same energy and enterprise that is said to aminate the heart of a Chicagoian and yesterday work commenced clearing away for the new and more substancial buildings.

Mr. Ensley will, of course, push forward his part of the enterprise and we trust that but a few weeks delay, at least will find the block finished and towering forth in all its glory. One thing certain it will cost enough, with a fall on the east and a fall on the west, by the time of its entire completion.

We are glad to state that about $700 were raised for Mr. Snyder last Monday and we feel it the duty of every honorable man and citizen to extend a helping hand to the unfortunate. Let all assist to the best of their ability and let the burden fall upon the many, instead of a few We may meet with disaster ourselves in a few days, months or years, and we will know then what it is to be generous in a neighbor's adversity.

That high-flyer establishment called Foster Bros., at Fort Wayne, are making strenuous efforts to make the people believe that they can sell carpets, but we know that the popular carpet establishment of John McDougal, of that city can discount them in prices and quality. If you want to deal with a fair, honorable man and get the worth of your money, go to McDougal, 75 Columbia street, and we will stand good for all loss sustained. We could not do so with the other, by a long shot.

We paid a brief visit to the extensive seed store and agricultural depot of De-Groff Nelson & Co., at Fort Wayne, last week, and found them busy, promptly filling the orders of their patrons. Their seed department is the largest in the State most of which is produced at their large farm east of the city. Hon. I. D. G. Nelson is regarded as one of the most thorough and experienced Agriculturalist and Horticulturalist in the State, as his connection with the State Board for years will attest. Any orders submitted to them from our country merchants will receive prompt attention.

BALTIMORE & OHIO R.R.

WORK COMMENCED

Work on this line of Railroad has commenced in this State. Last Monday two gangs of workmen commenced breaking ground at Avilla, and the contractors, Messrs. Squires & Higgins have been here several days making preliminary arrangements to push forward their contract of 22 miles with all speed. A contract of 8 miles has been awarded to a gentleman from Columbus, Ohio, which runs three miles west and five miles east of the junction. There can not be much done as long as the weather remains so inclement, but the contractors assure us that with good weather they will have a large force to work along the whole line. Mr. Higgins, of the above firm is an experienced Railroad man, having had large contracts in many of the Western States for a number of years past. Mr. Squires is a citizen of Defiane, and has taken a large interest in the location of this line, and from his excellent business qualities we know there will be no delay as far as he is concerned.

CRAZY.—The wife of one Eickenburg who lives in what is called the "Barracks" on Cedar Street, left her home in the storm last Monday night and crossed the the Creek in some manner, though how it is not definitely known. A search was made early on Tuesday morning, as fears were entertained that she had been drowned. She was found at Ashelman's east of town in a very scanty dress for such a storm. Her loving husband remarked that when they found her, "she would be setting on the fence like a chicken." Domestic trouble is thought to be the principal cause of her insanity.

Those wanting a good quality of onion sets should call at Beard's popular grocery store. He has a genuine article for a reasonable price.

An exchange reminds small boys who go out hunting with big guns, that our legislature passed a bill which is now the law, declaring that "it shall be unlawful for any person to kill or injure, or to pursue with intent to do so, any turtle dove, meadow lark, robin, mocking bird, blue bird, wren, sparrow, red bird, pewee, martin, thrush, swallow, oriole, yellow hammer or cat bird, or to wantonly destroy or disturb the eggs or young of the birds protected in this act."

AMUSEMENTS.

Thursday Friday and Saturday evenings of this week, Barrett & Page's popular Dramatic Company will appear at Case's Hall in several fine pieces, commending Thursday evening with Miriam's Crime. We have often witnessed Mr. Barrett in his many personations and regard him as one of the best on the stage. If the Company possesses the same comparative talent, we know that our citizens will be treated to as good an entertainment as they desire to see. Miss Florence May is also a leading actress and always pleases the large audiences which greet her everywhere. Go and see them in this new and beautiful drama Thursday evening.

Supposing your age to be fifteen years or thereabouts, I can figure you up to a dot. You have 160 bones and 500 muscles; your blood weighs 25 pounds; your heart is five inches in length, and three inches in diameter; it beats 70 times per minute, 4,200 per hour, 100,800 times per day, and 36,722,200 times per year. At each beat a little over two ounces of blood is thrown out of it; and each day it receives and discharges about seven tons of that wonderful fluid. Your lungs will contain a gallon of air, and you inhale 24,000 gallons per day. The aggregate surface of the air cells of your lungs supposing them to be spread out, exceeds 20,000 square inches. The weight of your brain is three pounds, when you are a man it will weigh about eight ounces more. Your nerves exceed 10,000,000 in number.

Your skin is composed of the layers, and varies from one fourth to one-eight of an inch in thickness. The area of your skin is about 1,700 square inches, and you are subjected to an atmospheric pressure of fifteen pounds to the square inch. Each square inch of your skin contains 3,500 sweating tubes, or perspiratory pores, each of which may be likened to a little drain tile one-fourth of an inch long, making an aggregate length in the entire surface of your body, of 201,166 feet, or a tile ditch for draining the body almost forty miles long.

Call at Beard's when you want seeds or fresh groceries. All his goods are first class, and he sells them at very reasonable figures.

Trees! Trees!

I am determined to close out my nursery stock as I am engaged in other business, and will sell good trees at low prices. I have the pair, apple peach, grape, quince, siberian crab &c. In ornamental I have Austrian pine, Scotch pine, Norway spruce. Silver popular. Lumbardy popular. Horse chestnut, &c. Come and see them and I will make the prices suit you.

I have a few of the famous Peerless Potatoes I will sell in small lots to introduce the potato. Trees will be in lot west of the Tanery and will sell from the 15th to the 20th of April.

TERRIBLE CALAMITY.

The Steamship Atlantic Wrecked on the Nova Scotia Coast—Over 700 Lives Sent to a Watery Grave.

[From the Halifax (N. S.) Chronicle, April 1.]

It is our painful duty this morning to record the most terrible marine disaster that has ever occurred on our coast—the loss of a great ocean steamship with about 730 lives. Yesterday afternoon a report became current that a steamer had been wrecked somewhere on the coast, and one or two lives lost. The report was regarded as one of the canards put afloat on All Fools' day and little regard was paid to it. Soon the report became more definite, and we knew that the steamer Atlantic, of the White Star line, was ashore near Prospect, and that several lives had been lost. Even yet the public were inclined to regard the story as

A MALICIOUS HOAX.

A little later, however, it became known that the report was well founded, and that but a small part of the story had been told, the fact being that the Atlantic had been wrecked on Meagher's rock, near Prospect, 22 miles west of Halifax, and out of about 1,000 souls on board 370 were lost. Need we say that the terrible announcement created

A PROFOUND FEELING OF HORROR

throughout the community.

Having ascertained that one man from the wrecked ship had arrived in town, a reporter went in search of him. He proved to be Mr. Brady, the third officer of the Atlantic, bruised and worn out, and almost speechless after the terrible events of the morning. Nevertheless he cheerfully gave such information as he could. The Atlantic, Brady said, left Liverpool on Thursday, March 20, for New York, and touched at Queenstown the next day to receive the mails and passengers, after which she started on her voyage across the ocean. She had a full cargo of general merchandise and a very large number of passengers. Brady could not give the number, but thought there were more than 800 in the steerage and about 50 in the cabin. These, with her crew, would probably make the total not less than 1,000 souls. She was commanded by Capt. James Agnew Williams.

ROUGH WEATHER

was experienced, but nothing worthy of note occurred until noon of Monday, the 31st, when coal being short, Capt. Williams resolved to put into Halifax for a supply of coal. The captain and Mr. Brady had the night watch up to midnight, when they were relieved by the chief and fourth officer. At that time they judged that Sambro light then bore N. N. W. thirty-nine miles. The sea was rough and the night dark. The chief and fourth officers having taken charge, Brady went below and turned into his berth. The captain at the same time went to his room to lie down. What occurred between midnight and 2 o'clock, the time of the disaster, Brady cannot tell, as he was sleeping. He was awakened and

THROWN OUT OF HIS BUNK

by the shock when the steamer struck. She struck heavily three or four times. Brady ran up to the deck add found it full of passengers. He found an ax, and with it commenced to clear away the starboard life-boat. He observed that the captain and other officers were engaged in clearing the other boats. Brady succeeded in getting the life-boat out. This was

THE ONLY BOAT LAUNCHED,

and it had no sooner touched the water than a crowd made a rush to get into it. Brady had to use force to prevent them crowding in. He put two women and about a dozen men into it, and also got himself in. Just then the steamer fell over and sank. The boat, with its living freight, was

CARRIED DOWN WITH THE STEAMER,

and all in it were drowned, except Brady.

The hull of the steamer became almost wholly submerged, and only the bow and masts remained above water. The greater part of the passengers were in their rooms below at the time, and were immediately drowned. Indeed, so soon after the striking did the steamer sink, that many of the passengers were no doubt sleeping peacefully, in blissful ignorance of all that was going on around them, and

PASSED INTO ETERNITY WITHOUT A STRUGGLE.

Of those on deck, numbering several hundred, many were washed overboard when the ship fell over, and their cries for help as they struggled in vain for life were most heartrending. Many had taken refuge in the rigging and on the bow, and were still living, but with the prospect of almost certain death before them; for they knew not where they were, and were in momentary expectation of the ship sinking further and engulfing them all. Even as they were clinging in desperation to the rigging, while the sea was washing them continually, their situation was most trying, and every few minutes some of them, benumbed by the cold and exhausted from their struggles, loosed their hold and perished.

THE CHARACTER OF THE VESSEL.

The Atlantic was built at Belfast, Ireland, in 1871; was 420 feet long, 40 feet beam, and 23 feet depth of hold, and registered 3,723 tons. She was constructed of iron, and had four masts and six water-tight bulkheads. She was fitted with eleven boilers and four cylinders on the compound principle, under which the average consumption of coal was only 45 tons. The disaster is believed to be traceable to the carrying of an insufficient supply of coal for a voyage of more than ten or eleven days.

Additional Particulars—Statements of Survivors—Thrilling Scenes.

A steerage passenged says nearly all the passengers in his part of the steerage, to the number of 128, if not more, rushed on deck at the same time. Some of the passengers who first succeeded in getting on deck were told by some of the officers in command that nothing was wrong; that they had only lowered the anchor. The passengers then went down again, and tried to persuade the rest to that effect. I think this was done to prevent confusion on deck. I came up again and had just time to go on saloon deck, about 10 minutes after the ship first struck, when she turned over toward land and sank. A number of persons clung to the bulwarks, but the sea being high they were washed off, and many drowned. Others, along with myself, who got in the riggings, swung themselves off by ropes into the water, and swam to the rock, a distance of about 50 yards. About 150, who were passengers, principally belonging to the steerage that I was in, saved themselves in this way. The Captain, who was clinging to the ship's side, passed about 100 passengers into the boat, and advised them to jump into the water and swim ashore.

Wm. Hogan, of Waterford, tells the following: I was on deck at 3 o'clock. I heard a sailor on duty call out "All's well—3 o'clock." After hearing the sailor say "All's well," I went forward to the steerage and got into bed. About five or ten minutes afterwards I heard a watchman cry out. "Breakers ahead!" and almost instantly heard a tremendous crash, and the air rushed in and blew out the lights. It was my impression a boiler had bursted. I called up some of the boys that were sleeping near me, and told them to rush on deck, that a boiler had exploded. Some of them refused to go, and said that it mattered little, thinking the steamer was out at sea, that it was just as well to meet death below as on deck. The orders were given, as is a common thing in steamships, with sailors, that the hatches should be closed, and no one be permitted to ascend to the deck. Thinking that our lives were in imminent danger we forced the hatches up. As soon as we were on deck, we ran to the side of the vessel, and I saw a rock, as I supposed, about 300 yards distant. I thought at first it was an iceberg we had struck, but immediately afterward the ship began to heave or plunge, and after three or four plunges settled, and the water seemed to be rushing in. Believing that our safety depended on our being on the side of the vessel nearest to land, I rushed to that side and caught hold of the rigging. Then the ship began to turn over gradually on her side. I got on the side of the ship and caught hold of a rope. I then heard a dismal wail, which was fearful to listen to. It proceeded from the steerage passengers below, who were then smothering. It did not last more than two minutes, when all was as still as death.

John Farley, chief engineer, says: A great number of the passengers were drowned while going from the vessel by a rope to the rock. The cold was so intense that some of them, being benumbed, were unable to hold on to the rope, and they let go, and we were unable to render them any assistance. The rock that we were on was covered with seaweed, which made it very dangerous to stand upon, and the edges of the rock were round. All on the rock with ourselves being soaking wet and cold, were unable to render any assistance to those who were in the greatest of peril. A number of them were washed off the wreck and drowned, and a number who were trying to get from the rock to the island by a line were also washed from it and drowned. We could see people falling from the ship's side and rigging. Several persons who became completely exhausted lay down on the rock and died.

One little fellow, the only child saved from the wreck, ran upon deck with a stream of passengers when the first alarm was given. His parents and other members of his family were still below, and evidently perished when the ship filled and fell over on her side. Hustled about among the struggling mass of excited humanity, the piteous screams of the poor little fellow went to the stoutest heart. He had leaped upon the back of one of the men in the hopes of saving himself, but in that frightful crisis, when everbody was intent upon saving himself, few paid attention to the wails of the boy, and the man upon whose back he was clinging as if for bare life made several ineffectual attempts to shake the boy off. The cries of the boy at last attracted the captain, who, perceiving the tenacious manner in which he was struggling for life, called out to the men who were surrounding the lines that led to the rock and safety to endeavor if possible to save the boy, and the poor little fellow was immediately passed over the struggling mass of beings and placed in the boat. Men who were exerting themselves to save their own and other lives, wept almost for joy as they saw the brave little lad safely landed on the shore.

Foxley, Chief Engineer, who remained on the rock for several hours assisting the passengers to land from the ship, says it was extremely harrowing to behold the sufferings of the unfortunate creatures even after they were rescued. Many of them became insane, frothed at the mouth, and toppled off the rock into the water and were drowned; while others were so chilled and exhausted with cold that they laid down and died. They would wander about, incapable almost of helping themselves, and perish. Some died after they had been taken to the main land. All the passengers speak in the highest terms of the gallant conduct of the Third Officer and First Engineer in particular, who remained on the wreck for hours, assisting the passengers to reach the rock. Two lady cabin passengers came on deck in the excitement, and were standing near the wheel-house. They hesitated a moment, as if panic-stricken, and returned on to the companion-way, as if looking for something, then came out, and endeavored to reach the forward part of the ship, where the passengers were sent ashore on the line. At that moment a huge wave swept over the ship's quarter. The men clinging to the rigging heard two heartrending shrieks, and, when they looked again, the women had disappeared.

These are only a few of the terrible incidents of that terrible wreck. Young men as well as old became paralyzed, and, as they clung to the rigging and to the sides of the vessel, they seemed bereft of all reason; and when spoken to by others to make some effort to reach the boat and save themselves, they would roll their eyes in their heads, stare vacantly at the speaker, and ask them in a whining tone, "What boat?" Many again who were roused out of their berths had scarce time to put their clothes on, and reached the deck to perish with cold. One cabin passenger, a young man, came up with only a vest on. He clung to the ship's side as long as he was able, and finally rolled off into the sea, frozen to death.

The latest report shows the loss of life to be much less than at first stated. Of all on board, 413 were saved, and about 560 lost. There were among the latter 350 women and children. Strong parties of men are engaged recovering dead bodies, a large number of which are those of females.

The ship is broken in two near the foremast, and the after part is buried in the water. She struck twice on the ledge, and finally held on, in a short time careening seawards, the waves dashing over the deck and sweeping off everything, smashing boats, and making general havoc. Still later accounts say the vessel's cargo was beginning to come ashore. It is a general one, the larger portion being fashionable dry goods. The whole is estimated at $500,000. The scene of the wreck is very dangerous, and many wrecks have occurred near there. Mar's Rock is ten miles east by south of Sambro light, the one which the captain sighted and took his direction from.

IT is a question whether the abolition of the franking privilege will apply to the widow of President Lincoln, who received the right of franking, on her husband's death, for the rest of her natural life.

NORTH AND SOUTH.

The North and South—that is to say, North Easton and South Bend—
Have welcomed home, ovation-wise, Oakes Ames and Nesbitt's friend;
Like children fresh from Sunday-school, the "people" lent their ears,
And smiled and cheered, as children can, delighted smiles and cheers.

Twas touching, very touching,—it was thrilling to the core,—
To see such "patriots" welcomed as they never were before;
To hear the unbought words of praise, the innocent replies,
And to know those good men didn't steal, don't swear, and don't tell lies.

O happy, proud constituents! the carping world must see
How "undiminished confidence" unlimited should be!
What admiration for the good, the noble, pure, and true
For honor, honesty, and truth,—aboth North and South,—can do!

Away with scurvy demagogues who never had a "friend!"
The "people"—yes, "the people"—of North Easton and South Bend
Know what is what, and who is who! No knave will they believe.
Who'd "palter in a double sense," and make the truth deceive!

They know that, though the air is filled with accusations dire,
The men they cheer have garments white, unblackened by the fire!
That each pure man swears from himself all stains of guilt, all shames,
That Colfax still is Colfax! and Oakes Ames is still Oakes Ames!

But one thing more is needed now—let North and South attend;
Let Colfax to North Easton go! let Ames go to South Bend;
And in each place let each repeat his speech to willing ears,
And let the "people" each man greet with practiced smiles and cheers!

POSTCRIPT.

Yet must The People painfully, reluctantly believe
That men in highest places are so low as to receive
The damning bribe; and then, to keep their foul corruption hid,
Sink to a deeper, damning depth, swearing they "never did!"

O for the days when Patriots held place without a stain!
O Truth and Honor! but, alas! your words would now be vain!
Corruption would be unabashed, and perjury 'd reply!
O for one hour of Washington, who could not tell a lie!

Collector Casey.

The President has nominated his brother-in-law, Mr. James R. Casey, for reappointment as Collector of Customs at New Orleans. This nomination is a disgrace to the Civil Service. Mr. Casey has been shown to be an officious intermeddler, and has abused his office by the assumption of dictatorial powers in relation to State affairs. In the fall of 1871, the Federal officers acting under his lead came near producing a bloody collision in New Orleans, and in relation to matters with which he had no official relation. So disgraceful were these proceedings that the House of Representatives appointed a special committee, consisting of Mr. Scofield, of Pennsylvania, Mr. McCrary, of Iowa, Mr. Smith, of New York, Mr. Speer, of Pennsylvania, and Mr. Archer, of Maryland, to proceed to New Orleans, and report the facts. By the report of these gentlemen it was shown: That, in August, 1871, a Republican State Convention was to be held in New Orleans, having no business except the appointment of a central committee; nearly all the delegations to this convention were contested; that the Federal officers conspired, in order to have the convention satisfactory to them, that their partisans should meet in the Custom-House; that forty Deputy United States Marshals were appointed to keep order, and that they obtained a force of United States troops to protect them. The result was two conventions, and the appointment of two committees. The employment of Federal troops to carry out the scheme of packing a party convention was, of itself, an act which should have been followed by the instant dismissal of the officers.

The Legislature was to meet on the first of January, 1872, and the impeachment of Gov. Warmoth was discussed. By impeaching him, Lieut.-Gov. Dunn would become Acting Governor. But, on Nov. 25, Dunn died, and the selection of his successor became important. Warmoth convened the Senate in special session to elect a successor to Dunn. Thirty-four of the thirty-six Senators were present, and Pinchback, of the Warmoth party, was elected. The legality of this special session was, however, disputed, and it was desirable to have its action confirmed at the regular session. When the Legislature met, on Jan. 1, only seventeen Senators attended, fifteen others, who were in the city, absenting themselves. The Senators present ordered the Sergeant-at-Arms to compel the attendance of the absentees. Six of these absentees were officers in the Custom-House, and all of them were lodged in the public offices, protected by Casey from the visit of the Sergeant-at-Arms. Having kept them there several days and nights, Collector Casey ordered the United States revenue cutter, the Wilderness, to New Orleans, and placed the fifteen Senators upon it. The cutter was provided with stores at the public expense, and sailed down the river. The Government officers also chartered a steam-tug to keep up communications between the Collector and the Senators on the vessel—all this at the public expense. They remained on board five days, and were then landed in the State of Mississippi, and remained there until Jan. 20. Mr. Casey testified that during these entire proceedings he was in daily correspondence with the Government. When asked if he did not think he had acted improperly thus to use the Government property and money to break up a quorum of the State Legislature, he answered that "men often make mistakes," though he justified the act.

It appears further in the reports made by this committee that Casey was an intermeddler in other and more disreputable ways. We quote:

"Mortimer Carr, a member and former Speaker of the House, says he was offered $500 to support a certain bill, and he was understood to refer to Marshal Packard, but Packard denies the statement. If Packard's life depended upon Carr's testimony alone, we would not advise any jury to convict. Carter attempted an explanation of the Governor's charge against him, which served only to convince us that the charge was substantially true. The others were silent, and Casey and Herwig prudently so. Casey is clearly proved to have been interested in, and the holder of, a corruption fund of $18,000, part of a $50,000 fund raised by himself and others to bribe the Legislature to pass a bill in which he was an incorporator. Herwig, his deputy, was, at the time, a Senator, and, when the Governor vetoed the bill, Casey unlocked his safe, in the Custom-House, and Herwig took out of it and returned $18,000. It required just eighteen Senators to pass the bill, and this fact may explain Casey's and Herwig's possession of that sum. It would divide nicely among eighteen Senators."

Immediately upon the presentation of these reports, which was in May, 1872, it was announced that the President's displeasure with Casey, because of his conduct, was so great that he had demanded his resignation, and that Casey had resigned. After the Philadelphia Convention, the President was easily prevailed upon to let the resignation remain unaccepted until Casey's time was out. It is now about to expire, and, despite this most disreputable and scandalous record, the President has renominated him. Let the country hope that there is firmness and decency enough in the Senate to reject the nomination.—Chicago Tribune.

Small Men.

Gen. Grant ought to have embraced the opportunity of the commencement of his second term to elevate the intellectual character of his Cabinet. Instead of doing this he has reappointed the old set, with the exception of Mr. Boutwell, who goes into the Senate, and whose place as Secretary of the Treasury is to be occupied by William A. Richardson, recently Judge of Probate for Middlesex county, Mass.

This is a very inferior body of men to manage the great interests devolved upon them by the positions they hold. Previous to their call to the Cabinet not one of them occupied even a second-rate place among the statesmen of the country, or was a prominent leader in the Republican party. Indeed, as to some of them, thoroughly informed politicians and journalists were not aware of their existence until the telegraph told the nation that they had been selected to preside over departments of the Government whose proper administratton requires the highest order of talents and long experience in public affairs.

Many persons have excused Gen. Grant for surrounding himself with these small men on the ground that nobody ever mistook him for a great one, and that it is not human nature to suppose that a second-rate President would select a second-class Cabinet. This, however, is not so. Gen. Harrison possessed only moderate abilities; but he had the good sense to appoint to his Cabinet such eminent statesmen as Webster, Ewing, and Crittenden. Nobody ever imagined that Frank Pierce was anything more than a respectable politician; but he made Marcy Secretary of State, Guthrie Secretary of the Treasury, and Caleb Cushing Attorney-General. President Lincoln came to Washington with no reputation as a statesman; but he conferred the two chief seats in his Cabinet on Seward and Chase, who had won a national reputation, and stood among the foremost leaders of the Republican party; while the Cabinet of Andy Johnson was, in respect to intellectual status, rather superior to that of Lincoln.

Compare these Cabinet officers with the Fishes, the Bories, the Richardsons, the Robesons, the Creswells, and the other inferior persons whom Grant has called around him, and how contemptible the small fry of the last four years look. The country perishing of corruption, and one of the prime causes of this corruption is that little men with narrow views and sordid instincts are set to administer offices which demand exalted talents, great knowledge and experience, and the most elevated purposes. —New York Sun.

MASSACHUSETTS is descending in the rank of States. Once she stood among the first. The change in the character of her population, the debasement of her once high standard, betrays itself in the acts of her people's representatives. Her venal and falsifying Wilson leaves the Senatorial for the Vice-Presidential chair, and her legislators debate only whether the wooden blunderer of the Treasury Department or the venal, jobbing, and falsifying Dawes shall ascend to his place. Her foremost Senator, Sumner, proposes to erase from the United States flag the names of battles fought under it during the civil war, a matter-of-course policy adopted by every civilized nation in modern times, and these same legislators censure him, and now after many months refuse to expunge their censure, showing thus that not the heat of passion in a political campaign, but a sodden, sectional, narrow-minded hatred, inspires their behavior and betrays their degeneracy.—New York World.

THE Western Union Telegraph Company contemplates a large and uniform reduction in rates all over the country at an early day. It is contemplated to have but ten different rates for the entire territory embraced by its wires, and to place the tariff so low that nobody can justly complain of the expensiveness of telegraphy. This reduction will not be more for the interests of the people than of the company.

Nine Times Married.

At the Central Criminal Court, in London, on March 4, William Morgan, age 49, described as a laborer, pleaded guilty to a charge of bigamy. The Common Serjeant said that he saw by a certificate before him that the prisoner had been convicted of bigamy and sentenced to four years' penal servitude. It must have been a bad case to have required such a sentence. A detective officer informed the court that from the inquiries he had made he had reason to believe that the prisoner had married no fewer than nine different women. He had further ascertained that he never did any work, but lived upon the resources of the women whom he married. The father of one of the prisoner's wives said in reply to a question put to him by the Deputy Recorder, that the prisoner had not treated his daughter with actual cruelty, still he did not behave well, and frequently stayed away from her for days together. He had also once or twice thrown water over her. The Deputy Recorder said that the conduct of the prisoner had been mean and disgraceful to an extreme degree, and he considered the case one of the very worst description. He therefore felt it to be his duty to sentence him to be kept in penal servitude for ten years.

Henry Ward Beecher on Old Clothes.

In referring to the happiness of early housekeeping, Henry Ward Beecher recently said in the pulpit:

"I would not give up the first two years of my married life for all I have now. I live in a big house, with a brown stone front, and very fairly furnished; but, after all, among the choicest experiences of my life were those which I passed through in Indiana, when I hired two chambers up stairs; when all my furniture was given to me, and was second-hand at that; and when the very clothes which I had on my back had been worn by Judge B—— before me. We were not able to hire a servant. We had to serve ourselves. It was a study every day how to get along with our small means—and it was a study never to be forgotten. I owe many of the pleasures which have run through my life to being willing to begin where I had to begin, and to fight poverty with love, and to overcome it, and to learn how to live in service and helpfulness, and in all the thousand ingenuities which love sweetens and makes more and more delightful."

THE BORDEAUX WINE TRADE.—One of the "blue books" just issued for the use of Parliament contains a commercial report on the wine trade of Bordeaux for 1871, prepared by the British Consul for that district. The report states that in ordinary years the department of Bordeaux produces 1,250,000 casks of red and white wine, each containing fifty gallons, and that about half that quantity is exported. The variations in value of these wines in different years is astonishing. The Chateau Lafitte, for instance, in a year of remarkably good vintage, sells for as much as £70 a cask, while the same wine in a bad year brings only £6, and the common wines—those which grow upon low, wet soils—sometimes sell as low as £2 a cask. In the year 1869 the first-class white wines of Bordeaux were brought up early and at a low price, and were afterward sold by the merchants at an advance of 50 per cent. These white wines, says the Consul, are not known as they deserve to be. There is no wine in the world, he says, that can compare in richness of flavor and fullness of aroma to the Chateau Yquem of 1867.

HOW TO DRESS.—One of the most important things to be considered in dress is the careful covering of the chest and back. Exposing the lungs by inadequate shielding of these portions of the body from the cold is too generally practiced, especially among the ladies. To cover the chest alone most carefully is not enough. There should be a thick covering between the shoulders.

FARM AND HOUSEHOLD.

Short-Horns Not Suited for All Places.

Dr. E. D. Moss, of St. Louis, an ex-editor of acknowledged ability, thus expresses his opinion on the short-horn mania, in Colman's Rural World:

While the short-horn fancy has put money into the pockets of wealthy breeders, its effects have been disastrous or unsatisfactory in too many instances. Farmers like to be in the fashion; they are naturally ambitious to improve their cattle by means of the magnificent short-horns, so much admired by every one; they take in the fashionable idea that they must have big cattle. If they inquire, "What improved breed of cattle shall I get?" the chances are that they will be told, "Get the short-horns, by all means; there is nothing like them." In some cases the advice is good; in more it is bad. If the object is to raise cattle for any other purpose than beef, the short-horn is not the best. If the farmer is not willing or prepared to give them the high feeding and careful attention to which they have been accustomed, they will dwindle, and he would do better to take cattle better fitted for shifting for themselves. If he live in a hilly or mountainous region, he will have indifferent to bad success with short-horns in nine cases out of ten. Elm, sycamore, cottonwood and black walnut trees grow to magnificent proportions on rich bottom lands—their natural home; they are not natural to lean, hungry soils, and cannot be made to attain the same perfection in them. It is so with the short-horns; to undertake to breed and rear those mammoth-framed cattle on poor soils and steep hillsides, is to attempt what is contrary to nature and the fitness of things, and making an exaction which nature will not endure. Yet it is done yearly and will probably continue to be done until bitter experience teaches better.

Guano—Present and Prospective.

Either there is a probable scarcity of guano in the near future or else interested parties are trying to make a "corner" in the market. Hitherto the supply for the world has been mainly drawn from sundry tropical islands, situated for the most part off the Peruvian coast. Other guano deposits exist, but owing to the frequent or periodical occurrence of rains the soluble parts of the guano are washed out, and it is only in the almost rainless climate of Peru that the deposits retain or acquire their greatest value. It is about thirty years since the civilized world began to demand guano. When the first cagoes destined for a European market were taken from the Chincha islands in 1841, the supply seemed almost inexhaustible, but during the twenty years which followed, more than three million tons were taken from these islands alone, and now there is talk to the effect that not more than 30,000 tons are left. The Guanape, Macabi and Lobos islands have still a million or more tons, but in view of the enormous consumption, this does not amount to much in the eyes of importers. The Peruvian Government has derived so large a revenue from its guano deposits that it naturally looks forward to their exhaustion with dismay, and is making explorations along the coast in the hope of discovering fresh fields. It would seem that we must make up our minds that guano is destined to disappear within the next ten years from the list of available fertilizers, but science has already done much to furnish substitutes, and we may be sure that something exists somewhere to make good the loss.—Christian Union.

Care of Horses' Legs.

Few men who handle horses give proper attention to the feet and legs. Especially is this the case on farms. Much time is often spent in rubbing, brushing and smoothing the hair on the sides and hips, but at no time are the feet examined and properly cared for. Now be it known that the feet of a horse require more care than the body; they need ten times as much, for in one respect they are almost the entire horse. All the grooming that can be done won't avail anything if the horse is forced to stand where his feet will be filthy. In this case the feet will become disordered, and then the leg will get badly out of fix, and with bad feet and bad legs there is not much else of the horse fit for anything. Stable prisons generally are terribly severe on the feet and legs of horses, and unless these buildings can afford a dry room where a horse can walk around, lie down, or roll over, they are not half so healthy and comfortable to the horse as the pasture, and should be avoided by all good hostlers in the country.

Corn Fodder.

Persons who condemn corn fodder as innutritious are invited by Paschall Morris to consider the ways of a prominent dairyman, "whose butter is excelled by no other in the Philadelphia market," and who "pretty much sustained fifty-eight cows on sowed corn from the middle of last July to the middle of October, and that, too, from the produce of three acres." He estimates that he took ninety tons of this "innutritious" substance from the space indicated, and he knows that his cows did not fall off in their milk during these months of drought, but that some increased the flow, and that the butter was fully up to the standard. There is nothing better for wintering cattle or young horses, and especially milch cows, than good, bright corn fodder, and where forage is scarce it is of great value to the farmer.

Domestic Recipes.

Pieces of horseradish added to the vinegar on pickles improves their flavor, and prevents mold.

A teaspoonful of spirits of ammonia added to the rinse water will make rusty black goods look as good as new.

Potato cut in small squares and put into cruets or bottles with the water to wash them will clean them quickly and well.

A Good Ink.—Take bichromate of potassa one part, and extract of logwood three parts; add water, bring it to a boil, and it is ready for use. In the winter it must not freeze, though if it does, boil it again and it will be ready for use again.

To Remove Warts.—Tincture of cantharides, with some drops of tincture of iodine; apply to warts with a small brush or a little stick three or four times a day. In a few days the warts will disappear.

Potato Yeast.—Cook and mash six potatoes, and add water enough to make a thin batter; when cool, add a cup of sugar, a teaspoonful of salt, and a tablespoonful of ginger, and yeast enough to raise. Set in a warm place till light; then put in bottles, and set in a dark, cool place till wanted.

Cottage Pudding.—Put a layer of bread crumbs in a pudding dish, then a layer of sliced apples, another of crumbs and apples, finishing with the bread. Strew each layer with a little sugar and a few small pieces of butter. Then take a pint of milk, two eggs, and a half cup of sugar, and make a custard and pour over it. Flavor with lemon and bake half an hour.

Washing Made Easy.—Take 2 pounds of soda ash, 1½ pound stone lime, 2 gallons of soft water; slake the lime separate; dissolve the soda ash in the water, then add the lime; boil twenty minutes; cork it up tight. For a washing use one cup in three gallons of water; soak the clothes over night in cold water; wring out and boil them twenty minutes in the preparation; rinse and blue them, and your washing is done; they require but very little rubbing. Soap them before boiling.

To Remove Stains from Hands.—Wash your hands in soap and water in which some pearlash has been dissolved. If you wish to remove the stains of dye, take a very small quantity of the oil of vitriol, and pour it into some cold water in a basin, and wash your hands in it without soap. The dye will then come off. You may afterwards cleanse them completely in hot soap and water, taking care that the acid is washed away before the soap is applied. If the vitriol water is not made very strong it will not injure the most delicate hands, nor leave any red or coarse appearance.

Horticultural Hints.

When fruit trees occupy the ground, nothing else should—except very short grass.

Fruitfulness and growth of the tree cannot be expected the same year.

There is no plum that the curculio will not take, though any kind may sometimes escape for one year in one place.

Peach borers will not do much damage when stiff clay is heaped up round the tree a foot high.

Pear blight still puzzles great men. The best remedy known is to plant two for every one that dies.

If you don't know how to prune, don't hire a man from the other side of the sea who knows less than you do.

Don't cut off a big lower limb, unless you are a renter and don't care what becomes of the tree when your time is out.

A tree with the limbs coming out near the ground is worth two trees trimmed up five feet, and is worth four trees trimmed up ten feet, and so on till they are not worth anything.

Trim down, not up.

Shorten in, not lengthen up.

If you had an arm cut off, you would feel it at your heart—a tree will not only feel, but rot to the heart.

When anybody tells you of a gardener that understands all about horticulture and agriculture, and that can be hired, don't believe a word of it, for there are no such to be hired. Such a man can make more than you can afford to give him; and if he has sense enough to understand the business will also have enough to know this.

A Dose of Opium.

The dose of opium recommended by Hahnemann is two decillionth parts of a grian. Now the diameter of the earth is about eight thousand miles. The population of the world is about eight hundred millions. A homeopathic dose of medicine is two decillionth parts of a grain. From one grain of opium divide an atomic particle, which shall bear the same proportion to a whole grain that a sphere a thousandth part of an inch in diameter bears to our globe; divide the particle among the whole population of the world; cause each person to swallow a homeopathic dose every second, and it would require twenty million years for them to swallow the particle described. Hahnemann says he has seen a drop of nux-vomica at the decillionth degree produce exactly half the effect of another at the quintillionth degree; and then he adds: "If the patient is very sensitive, it will be sufficient to smell a phial that contains one of the globules. After the patient has smelled it, the phial is to be corked up for future use."—"Doctors and Patients," by John Timbs.

A recent English work on billiards gives some interesting particulars connected with the game. It was only in 1827 that slate tables were substituted for wood and marble, and only in 1835 that India-rubber cushions took the place of flock and list. Again, it was not until 1807 that leathern tips were invented for cues, which rendered side-strokes possible. Ahout 1818 the side-stroke was discovered by one Bartley, the proprietor of billiard rooms at Bath, England. Bartley had a marker named Carr, to whom he confided his secret, and Carr, when pressed to reveal it, produced boxes of what he called "twisting chalk," to the use of which he attributed his powers, and which he sold at seventy-five cents each.

A Danbury boy having heard that a cat will invariably strike on her feet from whatever distance dropped, borrowed a cat and made the experiment from a bedroom window. Unfortunately the cat dropped before he was ready, and in a spasmodic effort to recover her, he lost his balance, and rolled out of the window after her. How she struck nobody knows, but how he struck was quite evident to the entire neighborhood an instant after.—News.

The New Pension Law.

The new pension law contains several provisions which are of general interest. All persons who have lost a leg above the knee, and are so disabled thereby that they cannot use an artificial limb, shall be rated in the second class, and receive $24 per month. All persons having lost the hearing of both ears are to receive $13 per month. Section 5 provides that the rate of $18 per month may be proportionately divided for any degree of ability established for which the second section makes no provision. The old law provided for no rates between $8 and $18. In the organization of the Pension Bureau important changes are made. The new law provides for the appointment by the President of a Deputy Commissioner of Pensions, with a salary of $2,500 per annum. The efficiency of the bureau is increased by a provision for the appointment of a duly qualified surgeon as a medical referee, with salary of $2,500 per annum, who shall have charge of the examination and revision of the reports of examining surgeons and such other professional matters as may be referred to him by the Commissioner. The new law adds two years to the limitation under which pension claims may be established. Fees for medical examination have been increased to $2 excepting in case of the Board of Examiners, each member being entitled to receive only $1.

Domestic Experience.

Putting a hoop on the family flour barrel is an operation that will hardly bear an encore. The woman generally attempts it before the man comes home to dinner. She sets the hoop up on the end of the staves, takes a deliberate aim with the rolling pin, and then, shutting both eyes, brings the pin down with all the force of one arm, while the other instinctively shields her face. Then she makes a drive for the camphor and unbleached muslin, and when the man comes home she is sitting back of the stove, while a burnt dinner and the camphor is struggling heroically for the mastery. He says that if she had kept her temper she wouldn't have got hurt. And he visits the barrel himself, and puts the hoop on very carefully, and adjusts it so nicely to the top of every stave, and only a few smart knocks apparently are needed to bring it down all right; then he laughs to himself to think what a fuss his wife kicked up over a simple matter that only needed a little patience to adjust itself, and then he gets a hammer, and fetches the hoop a sharp rap on the side, and the other side flies up and catches him on the edge of the nose, filling his soul with wrath and his eyes with tears, and the next instant that barrel is flying across the room accompanied with the hammer, and another candidate for camphor and rag is enrolled in the great army that is unceasingly marching toward the grave. —Danbury News.

Dangers from Science.

They propose now to burn metals by electricity on steamboats to save bulk and cost in fuel. Practicable, no doubt, remarks the Boston Transcript; but what becomes of Jim Bludso and his Prairie Bell, and all that tar-barrel school of lurid light literature? Who will show us, under the new dispensation of chemicals, a hero who can approach him in profanity or polygamy? Indeed, we doubt if the public could be electrified to the same extent as the picture shown in the strongest calcium light of the most heroic disciple of Tyndall, clinging wildly to the negative pole of a battery, his hair on end, by turn shouting the formula for sulphuric acid and denouncing the calculus, while his craft slowly but steadily and gracefully yielded to the law of gravitation! We have no quarrel with science. Let her demolish at pleasure what little there is left to live for. Let her go on as she begun, conquering and to conquer. Let her bring the poles together if she will, and bind them round and round with the equator. But let her not eliminate Jim Bludso from his place in letters. We cannot spare him.

Fence-Posts.

A Wisconsin correspondent of the Rural New Yorker makes the following bold declaration as to fence-posts:

We have, in Wisconsin, a simple preparation that will make a basswood fence-post as good to last as red cedar, at a cost of 2½ cents per post. It is claimed that the post, after it is saturated, will never rot any more. An experiment of eight years with some of our frailest timber seems to prove the assertion. I mention it and give you the recipe if you are interested in making any fence: One part corrosive sublimate; six parts arsenic; sixteen parts salt; one-fourth pound to a post. Bore three holes with an inch auger, equal distance, so as to leave four equal spaces in the post; plug the holes with a corn-cob; don't go to whittling out pine plugs. If your corn is too small, import some from Wisconsin.

The awards at the Vienna Exposition are to be of seven classes, not gold or silver medals, but parchment certificates. The highest will be a "diploma of honor," given in pure or applied science or education. The second is the "diploma of progress," to be given to inventors who show appreciable progress in exhibitions compared with those of former exhibitions. The third is a diploma of "merit" for articles of remarkable cheapness or excellence. The fifth is for "good taste;" the sixth is a "co-operative medal" for workmen contributing to the excellence of any article by their skill; and the seventh is the "diploma of recognition," which is a secondary class to those of the second and third orders. Special classes connected with female employment will be judges partly composed by ladies.

"Giving In."—It is better to yield a little than to quarrel a great deal. The habit of standing up, as people call it, for their (little) rights is one of the most disagreeable and undignified in the world. Life is too short for a perpetual bickering which attends such a disposition; and, unless a very momentous affair indeed, where other people's claims and interests are involved, we question if it is not wiser, happier and more prudent to yield somewhat to our precious rights, than to squabble to maintain them. True wisdom is first pure, then peaceable and gentle.

The ingenuity of a woman is beyond all earthly comprehension. A Danbury lady becoming tired of bothering with wood, besought her husband to get a coal stove and devote the rest of their life to that fuel, but he wouldn't do it. He said wood was cheaper, and he might as well be chopping it and saving the money. Having exhausted her eloquence without any effect, she hit upon a very simple device. She extended her clothes-line over his chopping-block. After supper he adorned himself with his ax and went out for fuel, and five minutes later came tearing into the house without his hat, and with his mouth half full of blood, lacerated gums and broken teeth. A bright and cheerful coal fire now illuminates that home.—Danbury News.

The Cheeky Man.

Impudence, or sumthing like it, iz the leading trait in most suckcessful men's karacters.

All the nice things that hav bin sed in favour of modesty, fail tew stand the test when brought into the pull and haul ov every-day life.

Bold assurance, while it may often disgust us, will win 9 times out ov 10.

We all ov us praze the modest, but our praze iz only a kind of pitty, and pitty will ruin enny man.

Enny man will liv four times az long on abuse, and git phatt, az he will on pitty.

Grenade, a New Dye-Stuff.—A secondary product of the manufacture of fuchsine, employed for some time in dying woolen goods, under the name of cerise, aniline, orseille, etc., has of late contained impurities in the form of insoluble foreign substances which has suggested the effort to render it sufficiently pure to warrant its use with the finer fabrics. A dye-stuff named grenade has been produced at the factory of Knosp, in Stuttgart, which is said to give a pure garnet-brown, free from the dirty bluish-red tint of cerise and other substances substituted for archil, and which, by combination with picric acid, turmeric, etc., can be made to give any shade of brown. The brilliancy of the color surpasses that of genuine archil. It is applicable to woolen, cotton, silk, leather, and wooden articles, by use of different mordants, and is practically cheaper than cerise, by reason of low first cost, and absence of insoluble residue. Dr. Reimann predicts for it a permanent place among dye-stuffs.

Ideas of the Soul.—The Egyptians taught that the soul, being immortal, underwent numerous transmigrations, passing from one animated body to another until its cycle of existence was fulfilled. The soul is represented in the hieroglyphs by several signs, as a basket of fire, a heron, a hawk with a human face, and a ram. Its nature was divine, but after death it passed to the great Judgment in the Hall of the Two Truths, where it was tried before Osiris and the forty assessors or demons of the head, whose verdict determined its future destiny. This depended upon the sins he had committed during life, and which more or less interfered with its "transmigration" through the necessary cycle of existence till its ultimate union with the Deity and reception into the Egyptian heaven.

Houses should be thoroughly ventilated every day. In the morning, the skylight, or the landing window, the back door, and the front door should be opened for a couple of hours, the front door being guarded the while from intrusion by means of a door-chain. Now, by adopting this simple plan, you get a thorough current of pure air into your house, which would make it sweet for the remainder of the day. Air—pure air—is one of the grand essentials of health; but, alas! although it is so cheap and so plentiful, it is a rare commodity. Impure air is the pabulum upon which many diseases live and thrive! Many people never open their windows from week's end to week's end —the rooms in consequence smelling foul, musty, and frouzy.

Georgia Plantations.

Not far down the Atlantic coast, and along the Ogechee river, are the remnants of some famous rice plantations. Sherman, in his march, made sad havoc with the buildings, which have not been reconstructed. In the war were killed most of the men. One of these plantations, comprising 6,000 acres, with a sugar-mill which cost $60,000, is now occupied by two ladies—the last male member of the family having been killed during the last day's engagement about Richmond—and these ladies are supported now by Northern friends, and can be bought out for $90,000. Another plantation, for which, before the war, $90,000 in gold was declined, has recently been purchased by a Canadian for $12,000.

Luxury and Poison.—From experiments made by eminent physicians in France, it is shown that the article ordinarily made there under the name of "ice cream" is mainly manufactured of corn starch, French clay and poisonous coloring matter. The beautiful carmine which pervades the treacherous compound comes from the cochineal bug. A continued course of such poisoning produces the most direful maladies. First, dyspepsia, then scrofulous eruptions, accompanied by a loosening of the teeth and a dropping out of the hair. This agent of destruction is not confined to the street corners alone. It is sold as well in the innumerable gilded saloons and places of fashionable resort.

Curative for Small-Pox.—Dr. Furley states, in the London Lancet, that he is in the habit of vaccinating every actual case of small-pox that comes under his care, with the effect of arresting the disease in nearly every instance. He asserts that the common method of operating is not efficacious, and that it is necessary to inject the lymph into the circulation. For this purpose he uses a hollow needle with a bore sufficiently large to admit of the introduction of a vaccine tube. The process consists in passing the point of the needle thus charged with a tube of lymph under the skin, and forcing the lymph directly into the blood of the diseased patient.

Washing Woolen Clothing.—Articles of woolen clothing, washed in ordinary soap and water, not only shrink, but acquire a peculiar fatty odor, due to the decomposition of the soap by the lactic and acetic acids present in the perspiration, and consequent precipitation of the greater part of the fat of the soap in the fiber of the wool. According to Prof. Artus, both of these effects can be prevented by steeping the articles for several hours in a warm, moderately concentrated solution of washing soda, then, after the addition of some warm water and a few drops of ammonia, washing them out and rinsing them in lukewarm water.

Untiring efforts are making to have the Vienna Exhibition building ready by the opening day, the 1st of May. Some of the galleries are quite finished, and only need to be fitted up to be ready for the exhibitors. The immense dome, the largest ever attempted, is described as being to other domes what the Great Eastern was to other ocean steamers. In addition to the main building, there is a great detached gallery for machinery, and a separate department of considerable size for works of art; while many smaller structures are scattered through the grounds.

Ironing Shirt Fronts.—In a first-class laundry starch is made in the usual manner; to a pail of starch a whole sperm candle is used. When the linen is dry, it is dipped in the cold starch and ironed in the ordinary way; then it is dampened with a wet cloth and the polish-iron passed over it. This is an ordinary smoothing-iron, ground off so that the edges are all rounding. To this last manipulation the linen is indebted for the peculiar laundry gloss which all admire so much, but which many housekeepers have vainly striven to leave upon the wristbands and bosoms of their husbands' shirts.

The "Baptist Year-Book" for 1873 gives the statistics of the Baptist Church, as follows: In the United States there are 853 associations, 10,720 churches, 11,892 ordained ministers, and 1,585,232 members. The Sunday school statistics show 9,412 schools, 653,742 scholars. The aggregate contributions reported are $4,026,527.04. There are 46 periodicals, of which 2 are German and 1 Welsh, and 1 French. There are 9 theological seminaries, 34 colleges and universities, and 57 academies, with over 500 instructors and 9,000 students.

The Secretary of War has appointed a commission of four army engineers to make an examination and report to the department as to the practicability, without detriment to the interests of navigation, of bridging the "channel between lakes Huron and Erie." This will lead to a survey of both the St. Clair and Detroit rivers, and, at least, will prepare the way for the settlement of the questions whether a railway bridge over either is practicable, and at what point it should be built.

Mr. Spurgeon has a weakness for hating artists and their work. Pictures, he holds, are a formidable means of winning souls for Satan, and does not hesitate to pronounce against them. But even a man of his influence overrates it, if he thinks for a moment to unsettle the universal love for these lessons on canvas, which the world, from its beginning, has felt.

The ex-Empress is described as being slim and stately, as well as tall. Her complexion, as far as is apparent to the public, has escaped sallowness, if it has not that alabaster whiteness it possessed in earlier days. Her eye continues clear and piercing.

Tree Planting.

The report of H. K. Vickroy, orchardist and gardener at the Champaign (Ill.) Industrial University, who has had charge of the forest plantations thus far, shows that he planted in 1771, 7 acres with 14 varieties of foreign trees, comprising 36,749 trees of 1, 2 and 3 years of age, and, in 1872, 1½ acres more with 4,083 trees, making a total of 40,832 trees, or, including 4,000 larch, 1,000 Austrian and 1,000 Scotch pine, replanted 46,832 trees. All the trees except the evergreens were planted 2x4 feet, or 5,444 trees to the acre.

The following table, compiled from the more detailed report of Mr. Vickroy, gives the species planted, the number of trees of each, the percentage living and the average growth of the trees planted in the first year:

Species.	No trees.	Per cent. living.	Growth, inches.
Ash, green	3,360	98	6
Ash, white	14,974	95	6
Catalpa	1,351	100	12
Elm, white	690	100	12
Chestnut	1,361	50	6
Larch, European	10,890	25	6
Maple, white	680	98	12
Osage, orange	1,361	98	24
Pine, Austrian	680	2	..
Pine, Scotch	680	2	..
Walnut, white	1,361	99	6
Willow, white	1,361	98	24
Pine, white	2,722	20	3
Spruce, Norway	1,361	98	3

The catalpa, white elm, white walnut, green ash, white maple, Osage orange, white willow and Norway spruce were not diminished in number to exceed two per cent., although most of them were planted in the very dry season of 1871; but the Austrian and Scotch pines were about annihilated, and the European larch and chestnut made but a poor showing. The Osage orange and white willow made the best growth, and stand just even in vitality and vigor, while the timber one is of little value and that of the other is among the best.

The cost of an acre of each of these species of trees up to the end of the first year, including cost of trees, planting and cultivation, is as follows:

Ash, green	$161.38
Ash, white	69.16
Catalpa	113.00
Elm, white	97.12
Chestnut	162.98
Larch, European	63.86
Maple, white	145.78
Osage orange	46.08
Pine, Austrian	149.36
Pine, Scotch	149.16
Pine, white	144.34
Walnut, white	99.94
Willow, white	56.26
Spruce, Norway	190.05

The most costly tree, it will be seen, is the Norway spruce, next to which stands two other evergreens, the Austrian and Scotch pines, for which a comparatively high price has to be paid.

The cheapest tree is the Osage orange, next to which come the white willow, European larch and white ash. Thus the Osage orange was not only one of the healthiest and fastest growers, but also the cheapest, making three points in favor of that species.

Coming now to the second year, 1873, we make the following table of the species two years planted, showing the per cent. living, the average growth, and the cost of acre of each to the close of the year 1872, including cost of tree planting, replanting, and cultivation:

Species	Per cent. living	Average growth.	Cost per acre.
Ash, green	98	30	$173.48
Ash, white	93	36	75.88
Catalpa	100	43*	134.48
Elm, white	100	42*	116.62
Chestnut	4	..	166.38
Larch, European	30	24	97.47
Maple, white	98	58	151.60
Osage orange	98	61*	65.98
Pine, Austrian	30	4	302.26
Pine, Scotch	20	4	260.76
Walnut, white	99	24	122.84
Willow, white	98	48	79.06

*These varieties were cut to the ground in the spring in order to get a straight growth.

The most expensive acres are those set with evergreens, but compared with the result obtained, the chestnut has provéd the less satisfactory. The cheapest tree, as well as the most vigorous, is still the Osage orange, with the white ash and white willow succeeding it.

If we may regard the ratio of percentage of living plants as the "survival of the fittest," the argument is strong against the planting of conifers, excepting the Norway spruce, for forests in our Champaign county, and overwhelmingly against the chestnut. Mr. Vickroy is of the opinion, however, that if the chestnut trees were protected for a time by other trees they would succeed.

The showing thus far is also strongly in favor of the Osage orange and white ash, both valuable timber trees, and rather against the white willow and white maple trees that have been encouraged because of their supposed easy and rapid growth.

Many more years, however, will be needed to settle these questions conclusively.

How Much will Keep a Horse.

A horse weighing from ten to twelve hundred pounds will eat about six tons hay, or its equivalent, in a year. And we suppose the real point to get at is, whether one can keep his horse cheaper on some other product than hay. This is an exceedingly difficult question to answer—it depends so much on circumstances. We shall not attempt to answer it fully at this time, but will merely say that, in our opinion, three and a half tons of corn stalks and two and a half tons of corn would keep a horse a year in fully as good condition as six tons of good hay. We may estimate, also, that it will take three and a half tons of oat straw and two and a half tons of oats to keep a horse a year. A bushel of oats weighs thirty-two pounds, so that it will take over 155 bushels and three and a half tons of straw to keep a horse a year. It would take about two acres of good land to produce this amount.—American Stock Journal.

A Few Queries.

A few of those radicals who swear "by Colfax' are preparing an 'ovation' (whatever that may be), to be tendered on the return of the great Credit Mobiler,

Well we expect that on that august occasion, he will make a neat little speech. For the benefit of the "outside barbarians," who don't "swear by Colfax," we submit a few queries for the suggestion that it would be eminently proper for him to give them a 'candid' reply.

1st. Did he not give his "townsmen' to understand on the 26th of September last, that he had nothing whatever to do with the Credit Mobiler fraud.

2nd. Had he really forgotten at that time his purchase of the stock from Ames ?

3d. Did he not know that when he purchased the stock from Ames at 100 a share. that it was worth $200 in the market ?

4th. Why should Nesbitt send him that $1,000 remittences in April July and November, by draft, and yet, "in order to keep it secret,' send the $1,000 in June by letter enclosing a green back ? Prof. Fowler's Greatest Work.

The National Publishing Company, of Cincinnati, have just issued a very important and valuable work, by Prof. O. S. Fowler, on Manhood, Womanhood, and their Mutual Interrelations; Love, Its Laws, Power, etc. It is a masterly exposition of the laws which control the relations of the sexes, and their duties towards each other, and it is not asserting too much to pronounce it the most valuable and timely publication of the age.

"Know thyself !" was the profound injunction of the ancient sage, and it is the neglect to comply with this precept which causes nearly all the misery and sickness of the world. Husbands and wives constantly feel the need of more light on the subject of their relations to each other, especially concerning the great duty for which marriage was instituted—the begetting and rearing of a family.

It is for the purpose of diffusing this knowledge that Professor Fowler has given to the world this work on "Sexual Science," which is simply an explanation of the laws which govern the sexes in their relation to each other. He lets us into the secret of preserving female health and beauty far into old age, and shows how mothers can avoid much of the suffering of bringing children into the world—a subject in which every woman is interested, and how "female complaints" may be avoided with ease and certainty.

His book is pure and elevated in its style and ideas, and furnishes a practical solution of many of the most perplexing questions of life. It touches upon questions and discusses them thoroughly, in which every married person is interested. The advice which it gives to unhappy or indifferent husbands and wives is sound and practical, and its warnings to those who seek to promote pleasure at the expense of health ought to be read by every one. The terrible practice of "regulating the size of families," which prevails in many parts of our country, is shown in its true light, and we commend the chapters concerning it to every husband and wife.

All friends of morality and aurity in social life will hail the advent of Prof. Fowler's book with delight, and those who seek information upon the curious and tragic features of domestic life, those who would study human nature stripped of its marks and disguises, will find this volume the best hand-book in existance. Young men who value their domestic happiness, should not fail to read his remarks on the subject of selecting a wife, as the information it contains is beyond value.

The book is a real blessing to the public, and will be regarded as such by all who read it. The low price at which it is issued brings it within the reach of all and every person who wants to arrive at the sexes, should procure a copy. It is sold by subscription only, and Mr. Geo. Brvinger, Spencerville, Ind., who is the authorized agent for this section, is now canvassing for it.

Beyond the Mississippi.

Thousands have already gone, and thousands more are turning their eyes towards new homes in the fertile West. To those going to Missouri, Kansas, Colorado, Utah, Wyoming, Nevada, Oregon or California, we recommend a cheap, safe, quick and direct route, via St. Louis. over the Missouri Pacific Railroad, which runs its fine Day Coaches and Pullman Sleepers from St. Louis to principal points in the West, without change. We believe that the Missouri Pacific Railroad has the best track and the finest and safest equipment of any line west of the Missipi, and its connections with roads further West are prompt and reliable. The Texas connection of this road is now completed and passengers are offered a first class, all-rail route from St. Louis to Texas, either over the Missouri, Kansas & Texas R. R. via Sedalia, or over the Atlantic & Pacific R. R. via Vinita. For maps time tables, information as to rates, &c., we refer our readers to S. H. Thompson, Eastern Passenger Agent, Columbus, Ohio, or E. A. Ford, General Passenger Agent, St. Louis, Mo. Questions will be cheerfully and promptly answered !

WISHART
PINE TREE !
Tar Cordial,
NATURE'S GREAT REMEDY
FOR
Throat and Lungs.
It is gratifying to us to inform the public that Dr. L. Q.C. Wishart's Pine Tree Tar Cordial, for Throat and Lungs diseases, has gained an enviable reputation from the Atlantic to the Pacific coast, and from thence to some of the first families of Europe, not through the press alone, but by persons throughout the States actually benefited and cured at his office. While he publishes less, so say our reporters, he is unable to supply the demand. It gains and holds its reputation—
First. Not by stopping cough, but by loosening and assisting nature to throw off the unhealthy matter collected about the throat and bronchial tubes, which causes irritation.
Second. It removes the cause of irritation of the mucous membrane and bronchial tubes, assists the lungs to act and throw off the unhealthy secretions, and purifies the blood
Third. It is free from squills, lobelia, ipecac and opium, of which most throat and lung remedies are composed, which allay cough only, and disorganize the stomach. It has a soothing effect on the stomach, acts on the liver and kidneys, and lymphatic and nervous regions, thus reaching to every part of the system, and in its invigorating and purifying effects it has gained a reputation which it must hold above all others in the market.

A Thrilling Episode in the Life of Buffalo Bill.

(From the Danbury News.)

Buffalo Bill was in Hartford Con., the other day, and while visiting Colt's armory, the large number of spectators who had assembled to see the famous scout, desired him to favor them with an exhibition of his skill as a marksman. Bill gave the chew of tobacco he had in his mouth to a small boy to keep it warm, a small piece of white paper was put up on a barn door fifty rods distent, B. Williams siezed a fine new rifle, spit on his hands, and in a manner so often described by Ned Buntline, raised the rifle, until the stock touched his nose, fired, and a picket was knocked off of the fense ten feet to the right of the barn. "This rifle barrel is crooked," said Bill, so saying he hit it across a stone to straighten it, then shot again, this time barking the shins of an old pie woman on his right flank. A third trial and he hit the barn fair in the centre, and the shout that arose from the assemblage attested the joy of the spectators at his success. Bill is just as good an actor as he is a marksman, which is very remarkable in these days of bribery and corruption.

How Sal Disgraced the Family.

A traveler in the State of Illinois, some years ago, came to a log hut on the prairies, near Cairo, and there halted. He went into the house of logs It was a wretched affair, with an empty packing box for a table, while two or three old chairs and disabled stools graced the reception room, the dark walls of which were further ornamented by a display of dirty tinware and a broken shelf article or two

The woman was crying in one corner, and the man, with teare in his eyes and a pipe in his mouth, sat on a stool, with his dirty arms resting on his knees, and his sorrowful looking head supported by the palms of his hands. Not a word greeted the interloper.

'Well,' he said, 'you seem to be in awful trouble here; what's up?

'Oh, we are almost crazy, neighbor said the woman, 'and we ain't got patience to see folks.'

'That's all right,' said the visitor, not much taken back by this polite rebuff, 'but can I be of any service to you.

'Well we've lost our gal; our Sal's gone off and left us,' said the man in tones of despair.

'Ah, do you know what induced her to leave?' remarked the new arrival.

'Well, we can't say, stranger, as how she's so far lost as to be induced But then she's gone and disgraced us, remarked the afflicted father.

'Yes, neighbor, and not as I should say it as is her mother, but there warnt a pootier gal in the West than our Sal she has gone and brought ruin on us on her own head now." followed the mother.

'Who has she gone with?' asked the stranger.

'Well, there's the trouble. The gal could have done well, and might have married Mortin Kehoe, a capital shoemaker, who, although he's got but one eye, plays the flute in a lively manner, and earns a good living. Then look what a home and what a life she has deserted. 'She was here surrounded by all the luxury in the country,' said the father.

'Yes, who knows what poor Sal will have to eat, or wear now.' groaned the woman.

'Who is the feller that has taken her away.'

"Why she has gone off and got married to a critter called an editor, lives in the village, and the devil only knows how they are going to earn a living.

What Horace Greeley Said.

A year before Horace Greeley died he said:

He said that 100,000 die annually by strong drink, and that total abstainers are no more fanatically than a man who puts out a fire that is consuming his own house.

He said that every glass of strong drink taken shortens life—that he has been a total abstainer for forty years, and that if he had taken but one drink a day for those forty years, his life would be shortened by several years, and that he would now have been in his grave. In his childhood he was sickly, but now at sixty years of age he has a better hold of life than at five years old.

He said that if the sale of liquors were stopped in New York and Brooklyn, every policeman might be dismissed and there would be less crime than there is now in spite of the police-[illegible]

Mericulors Agility.

(From the Louisville Courier Journal, April 2.)

In the afternoon exhibition of the International Circus, in the Exposition building yesterday, and while the Leslie brothers were in the progress of their daring trapeze performances, a mishap occurred which, but for an extraordinary display of presence of mind might have resulted fatally. The three brothers was forty or fifty feet above the floor on the trapeze, one of them hung to the bar by his feet, and holding the hands of another brother who hung suspended by them. The latter was to turn a summersault while in this position throwing his feet upward which his brother in turn was to sieze, and a most extraordinary feat would have been accomplished. But Lew Leslie the one in question, had miscalculated the distance or the other brother had missed his hold of his feet, and only one foot was caught. Unable to hold by one hand alone, the brother next to the trapeze, was obliged to relinquish his grasp, and young Leslie fell headlong almost to the floor, but not quite—for when within a dozen feet from the hard flooring, by an almost superhuman effort, he turned a summersault in the air, and reached the floor on both feet in safety. The audience had held its breath in dreadful suspense, and rose almost as one man to greet the successful issue of the dangerous fall with rapturous cheering.

An Experiment That Failed.

I am not sure whether I did right or wrong, I am sure that I meant right. It was on this wise, Believing implicitly that the bending of little human twigs should be accomplished during the early stages of their life, I concluded to commence on Vieve. My intention was to give her a lesson on firmness. Accordingly I filled a box with chestnuts, and placed it within her reach, saying: "Now Vivie dear, you must not touch them without my permission.'

"Well den I gess I'll not,' was the reply of the brown eyed three year-old gazed wistfully towards the sweet temptation, I gave her about a dozen.

"In my 'ittle potit fank 'oo.'

I went to my work and labored with all the cheerfullness of an inventor, who is pretty sure his machine will work.

During the afternoon it occurred to my wind that those nuts were lasting a remarkable long time, assuming the blandest tone for the occasion, I asked—

, Vieve, have you eaten all of those chestnuts.

"No I fink not.'

'Where do you get so many, my darling.'

I dets em out 'o my potit.

Well here are more than I gave you at first,' I said as I examined the dainty receptacle. Oh Vieve have you been disobeying me, and getting some out of the basket?

"I 'spects I have.'

"Are you sure?'

"Yes, I's pitty sure.'

"Oh, dear Vivie," said I, with the feelings of one who discovers his invention to be a failure, "this makes mama feel so sad. I do not like to punish you, but what must I do? I must have my little girl to mind me. Oh what shall I do?'

The small girl looked very reflective.

'Mama' she presently said in solemn tones, I gess that 'oo had beter pray now.

Believing the suggestion a wise ond embodying all r wisdom of the entire affair, I ache upon t. Returning to my ocupation after our session had adjourned, the first thing that caught my attention was a scrap of an old newspaper, which contained the following sentence:

He through intention or neglect throws before another a temptation is providing he is overcome equally guilty.

I put away the box of chestnuts and am waiting further light.—National Baptist.

We learn from an exchange that a Kansas dentist offers to pull single teeth for a bushel of potatoes. This is not so interesting as if he would pull a bushel of teeth for one potato, or if a Kansas tooth had pulled a potato for a bushel of dentists. Hardly anything is so wonderful that there is not something more remarkable.

The new postal law which goes into effect June 1st will compel the pre-payment of postage on papers sent to subscribers in the county and elsewhere. This will have the effect to induce publishers to require subscriptions to be paid in advance. It also prohibits the free circulation of exchanges. It was necessary to make this change, to demonstrate that Radical officials are in favor of rigid economy when they deal with the people. In regard to themselves however, it is quite another matter. Consequently, each member, our friend Williams with the rest, voted to steal five thousand dollars. The President is not at all to blame for not voting this measure, since the pillage was coupled with an appropriation bill, and he had to choose the least of two evils—sanction the plunder or defeat the appropriation! If it had been Old Hickory, we are inclined to the opinion that "by the eternal," he would have smashed both evils.

The Republicans Afraid to Investigate Tweed.

It was shown in the Erie investigation, the other day, that sometime in the year 1872 William R. Tweed drew from the Erie Railway Campany some $431,000 for what was called legal expenges incurred in Albany, prior to March 24, 1871, these expenses being as there is every reason to believe, mainly bribe money given to members of the Legislators.

It is remarkable that this Committee which has been exploring the affairs of the Erie Railway Company having tumbled on the testimony respecting Tweed have not summoned him before them, and apparently having no intention of doing so. All men can see, not only from this proceeding, but that of the other committee appointed especially to investigate Tweed's transactions, that the Repphlican majority in the legislature dare not take him in hand. He has told them that "if he was pushed some one would get hurt," and upon this menace, a legislature elected professedly in the interest of reform, has not the courage to deal with this notorious robber of public money and corruptor of legislation.

The Republican party as represented at Albany dare not investigate William Tweed.—N. Y. Sun.

The only conveyence between the pretty Welch towns of Aberystwith and Aberayren, is a two-horse waggenette. First, second, and third class fares are booked by this primitive conveyance, and the following distinction is made between the passengers: First class passengers are allowed to retain their seats throughout the journey; second class have to go out and walk up the hills which are numerous and steep, after the fashion of Welch hills; third class have not only to get out at the steep places but have to assist in pushing the vehicle up the hills. This arrangement is said to work very well but the distence is not great. It must be understood that the first, second and third class tickets are originally issued from a station on a line of railroad, whose terminus is Aberystwith. John Smith.

John Smith—plain John Smith—is not veay high sounding; it does not suggest aristocracy. It is not the name of any hero in die away novels; yet it is good strong and honest. Transferred to other languages, it seems to climb the ladder of respectability.—Thus: In Latin it is Schannus Smithus; The Italions smooth it down to Giovanni Smithi; The Spaniards render it Juan Smithus; The Dutchman adopts it as Hans Schmidt; The French flatten it out to Jean Smeet; and the Rusian sneezes and barks out Jonloff Smitelaski; Then John Smith gets into the tea trade in Camden he becomes Jovan Shimmit. if he clambers about Moun, the Islanders call him Jon Smithsen; if he trades among the Tustaterias, he becomes Ten Qua Smittia; in Poland he is known as Ivan Schmittitwiski; should he wander among the Welch mountains they would talk of Sihon Schmidd; and if he is of a clasic turn, and wanders among the Greek ruins, he turns to be Jean Smikten; and in Turkey he is utterly disguised as Yoe Seet; in America he is called John Shith.

THE STRANGE COUNTRY.

I have come from a mystical Land of Light
To a strange country;
The land I have left is forgotten quite
In the land I see.

The round earth rolls beneath my feet,
And the still stars glow;
The murmuring waters rise and retreat,
The winds come and go.

Sure as a heart beat all things seem
In this strange country,
So sure, so bright, in a glow of dream,
All things flow free.

It is life, all life, all awful and plain,
In the sea and the flood,
In the beating heart, in the wondrous brain,
In the flesh and the blood.

Deep as death is the daily strife
Of this strange country;
All things move up till they blossom in life
And tremble and flee.

Nothing is stranger than the rest,
From the pole to the pole—
The world in the ditch, the eggs in the nest,
The flesh and the soul.

Look in mine eyes, O man I meet
In this strange country!
Come to mine arms, O maiden sweet,
With thy mouth kiss me!

Who goes by with a crown on his brow?
King Solomon?
He is a stranger, too, I vow,
And must journey on.

O wondrous faces that up start
In this strange country?
O identities that become a part
Of my soul and me!

What are ye building so fast and fleet,
O humankind?
"We are building cities for those whose feet
Are coming behind.

Our stay is short; we must fly again
From this strange country;
But others are growing, women and men,
Eternally."

Ay, what art thou, and what am I,
But a breaking wave!
Rising and falling, swift we fly
To the shore of the grave.

I have come from a mystical Land of Light
To this strange country!
This dawn I came; I shall go to-night;
Ay, me! ay, me!

I hold my hand to my head and stand
'Neath the air's blue arc;
I try to remember the mystical land,
But all is dark.

And all around me swim shapes like mine,
In this strange country;
They break in the glamour of gleams divine,
And they moan, "Ay, me!"

Like waves in the cold moon's silvery breath
They gather and roll—
Each crest of white is a birth or a death,
Each sound is a soul.

O what is the Eye that gleams so bright
O'er this strange country?
It draws us along with a chain of light,
As the moon the sea!

BERLAPSADES.

No one could explain it! And, if it had the street-sweeper's son or rag-picker's brother, very likelp no one would have cared to explain it! But Bonbon Berlaps! that was quite another affair.

It was in the year 2500! The world had steadily advanced! Even "society" had been discovered to be not altogether idea-proof! Consequently there were many social changes. It was regarded as an axiom, that the simplicity of a thing was in direct proportion to its truth and strength. People spoke very much as they felt, and often acted with reference to what they believed. Flirtations, for example, were comparatively unknown. Young men and women fell in love with each other, and married in Arcadian fashion. Extremes met. The fresh simplicity of the young world, and the drilled, trained, and organized common sense of the highly-advanced world were, on many points, identical. The writings of Trollope and Thackeray, found in the possession of lovers of the antique, were quoted as burlesques, and the few who maintained that these books were the copies and not the caricatures of their day were ridiculed into silence.

In such a phase of existence Bonbon Berlaps' complaints excited very much such scientific interest and curiosity as did the first case of diphtheria or neuralgia.

Bonbon Berlaps was a person of importance. Republican forms obtained everywhere, but neither legislation nor culture could do away with the natural inequality of men, although their varying gifts were turned to better advantage. There were still the masses and men of distinction. In right, both of his birth and talents, Berlaps was ranked among the latter. He had also a fine presence! He also inherited money! And, although thirty years old, he was unmarried, and likely to remain unmarried! A great many points of interest to center in one man, even in the remodeled society of the year 2500!

His bachelor condition was not due, however, to any want of interest in female society. On the contrary, his normal condition was this sort of interest—his liking for an agreeable woman came as readily as a mushroom—but just as surely, when everybody settled himself comfortably, and said, with a sigh of relief, "At last Berlaps is really going to make match of it!" the "interest" was suddenly succeeded by a blank sense of weariness, and puff! ardor, admiration, and affection, were gone like the snuff of a candle! He cared nothing more for the lady! No one could explain it. The cause of these seizures, as unaccountable and inconvenient as those of Tennyson's Prince, remained a mystery, but here were the facts. The blank and weariness followed the "interest" as surely as a shadow does its substance. There was no getting over that; and Berlaps, who could make nothing of his case himself, by the advice of his friends, finally had recourse to the doctors.

In 1878 a man, who should have consulted a physician on such grounds, would very likely have taken his first step toward a lunatic asylum. But, what 1873 must let slip perforce as too subtle and intangible to hold, the year 2500 could grasp firmly, and analyze or dissect. Doctors were called, and prescribed successrully for sulks, want of stability, speculating manias, scandal-mongering, extravagance, and similar complaints, and Berlaps' case received immediate attention from the most learned practitioners.

Here arose a difficulty. Berlaps' disease had no precedent, and what are the most learned practitioners without a precedent? Cripples caught without their crutches! They looked wise, and talked vaguely, but Berlaps' case stood where they found it, till one of their number, who, being less distinguished, was still obliged to do a little thinking, suggested that Berlaps should keep a diary, note his symptoms, and report at the end of three months.

Berlaps took up the suggestion. It was not easy to see the connection between a diary and a gentleman's liking for ladies; and, just at that moment, besides, in his secret heart, Bonbon fancied he had found a permanent cure for his troublesome symptoms in the lovely Lucy, in whom he had commenced to feel a violent interest. There was a neatness, a daintiness, a freshness, a womanliness about her inexpressibly attractive. He fancied her hanging on his arm, hovering over his sick-bed, presiding at his table, and his fancy always made a pleasant picture of her. Nevertheless, it is so very natural to want something for your money, that Berlaps took up the suggestion. He bought the diary, a splendid affair in Russia letter.

"What are you noting there?" asked Miss Lucy, spying it.

"A list of your perfections," returned Berlaps, very much nearer the truth than people are apt to be when answering such questions; for the diary contained little else in fact, till one fine morning when he suddenly found nothing else to add. The old blankness and wearines were upon him. He struggled bravely against it, but there was no disguising the truth: Lucy had ceased to interest him.

Berlaps' diary acquired an instant significance. He comprehended its prescription. Fixed symptoms recurring periodically must have a fixed cause, and the diary was the detective that, sooner or later, would pounce upon it. He re-read it anxiously. It consisted entirely of notes on Lucy, who had proved positive perfection up to the 15th inst. On the luckless evening Berlaps had asked her if she liked "Moon on Meadows," a work that every refined person must enjoy. Lucy declared it "stupid; for her part, she could see nothing in it!" then came to an abrupt pause, and blushed violently, as her mother shook her head disapprovingly at her. Berlaps saw the blush and the nod, connected them together, and noted them in the diary. On the 17th inst. Lucy told him artlessly that "since he had spoken of it, she had read 'Moon and Meadows,' and liked it very much, it was so different from what she fancied. She must have been thinking of some other book when she made that first criticism." On the 19th, Berlaps experienced the weariness and blank so dreaded. Could it be, after all, the subtle recoil of an exquisite nature from whatever was false or unlovely? The diary argued that way.

If it is a melancholy idea that one is too good for this world, it is not altogether an unflattering one. In the light of this new explanation, Berlaps found a certain piquancy in his trouble unknown to him before. He had, besides, a turn for scientific inquiry, and was not at all unwilling to originate and solve, perhaps, a new problem for his century. Henceforth it was not only the gallant, but the savant, who went among women, note-book in hand, drifting honorably passive to his symptoms, only recording them all, and giving each young lady a fair chance at him, till the old weariness announced the end of her reign; and, on the principle of "The king is dead, long live the king!" Berlaps installed her successor. In each case the modus operandi proved invariably the same, and the diary never wavered, but pointed steadily to one conclusion. The finale of each Berlapsade, as they got to call Berlaps' peculiar seizures, was invariably preceded by some such melancholy discovery as that made by the help of "Moon on Meadows."

Ida confessed, in an unguarded moment, that "she detested plain sewing, and lady-like pursuits." May said "people were 'cheeky,' and things were too 'thin.'" He stumbled on Amy when scolding her little brother, and boxing his ears in a furious passion. An accidental peep into Belle's boxes proclaimed her a sloven. Kate vowed that "she preferred her own way, right or wrong, and would be ruled by no man." Nellie promised she would give her picture to no one but him, and gave one to Jack Merrill. Lettie made people stare, and smoked cigarettes. Mollie asked him if Dickens was living or dead, and why people talked about him. Could Berlaps doubt, could the doctors, could anybody doubt, the stern ultimatum of the remorseless diary? The weariness, the coldness, the blankness felt by Berlaps, was simply his moral and spiritual recoil from what shocked and pained him. He was the average man of the period. His standard was the average standard, and, tried by it, no young lady could stand the test.

No one did doubt it, and straightway there was a profound sensation. The study and culture of human nature was the hobby of the age, and its peculiarities, failures, and triumphs, were watched and recorded with the same precision and anxiety as the wars and political changes of our own time. Such a deficiency as that insisted upon by Bonbon's diary was regarded as a national humiliation. Extracts from the diary were copied in all the leading journals, with appropriate comments, read aloud by taunting, teasing, malicious males, hotly contested by indignant women. Theories and suggestions were advanced on all sides. Contending opinions did battle. The pet subject of magazinists, the resource of hard-driven newspapermen, the text of sulky bachelors and churlish husbands, was Berlaps' diary. High authorities got by the ears about it. Finally the National Academy appointed a day for its discussion, the Academy to decide on the victor; after that the matter would be held to be settled. The Academy was one of the superstitions of the year 2500. There was no appeal from it.

The day arrived. A vast and splendid audience, representing the fashion and intellect of the city, were assembled. The debate commenced.

Now, there are few themes that inspire the speaker (masculine) with so much personal enthusiasm as this of female deficiencies. In it he has invested, ten to one, his daily grumble, his hourly reason for his own shortcomings. It is his extinguisher for the soaring ambition of his womankind; his rein for the frisky feminine members of his society; his unanswerable retort against all argument; his un-get-over-able reason for the enjoyment of his supremacy and prerogative. He is at home with the subject, and on the best of terms with it; and he speaks with that ardor that only personal interest and strong conviction can supply. Is it wonderful that the gentlemen of the Academy brought such a storm of eloquence, such an array of extracts and data, and drew such direful conclusions that, before the debate was half over, the ladies were past pouting, the men convinced, and not a doubt existed in any mind as to the final vote of the Academy? Nevertheless, the year 2500 cherished an almost superstitious reverence for the possible virtues of that side known as the other side of the question; and, at a given hour, orators were called for it. There was a dead silence for an instant, and then arose a lady, Belle Bayadere, one of the ladies pilloried in Berlaps' diary.

The audience regarded each other significantly. The doctors, in their gowns, smiled pityingly. Berlaps moved uneasily, and wished from his heart for authority to restrain the foolish girl from making herself ridiculous. She commenced. You might have heard a pin drop. And her very first word disarmed criticism.

"I rise," she said, with a deep blush, "with no intention of haranguing this assemblage, far less of attempting to refute the learned gentlemen who have preceded me—such presumption is beyond me—but simply to ask a question, knowing that wisdom is always gracious to the humble inquirer. I have somewhere read that we as often reproduce the traits of our remote ancestors as of those directly preceding us. I would ask, therefore, if it is possible to find, in a man of our day, not the peculiarities of his parents or living relatives, but those of some forgotten predecessor, say of the nineteenth century?"

By common consent, all eyes turned at once on Dr. Isaac Ichthyosaurus, the Darwin of the year 1200. Straightway that gentleman rose, nothing loth, and explained to Miss Bayadere, to the audience, to the reporters, to ignorance in general, sitting at his feet. He began with the Creation, and, omitting very little on the way down, wound up with an appeal to the Future that ought to have made that abstraction shake in its buskins, and sat down in such a blaze of glory as is due to a man who had taken a whole hour to say "Yes," and called heaven, earth, and the sea to witness it.

The audience turned once more toward Miss Bayadere. That young lady, who had listened with modest deference, resumed, with an engaging smile, that somehow made Berlaps horribly uncomfortable:

"After the admirable and exhaustive argument you have just heard, I have hardly courage to mar the effect on your minds by adding another word of my own; and yet, in the interests of science, I venture on one more question, knowing that often the fool and the child stumble, from absolute ignorance, on the solution that the wise man has sought in vain. In those ancient burlesques, known as the novels of Trollope, Thackeray, Read, Mrs. Edwards, and many others, my tutors tell me, are to be found, glancing through the satire, a very fair record of the manners and customs of their time; and, to my astonishment, these authors repeatedly describe the strange symptoms that are now peculiar to Mr. Berlaps, and that we call Berlapsades, ununder the name of Flirtations, as everyday occurrences, and common to the majority of young young men. As Dr. Ichthyosaurus has just proved the extreme probability of such a case, shall we not suppose that among this majority were some of Mr. Berlaps' ancestors, and that Mr. Bonbon Berlaps' trouble is an inheritance from some nineteenth century Berlaps? If this seems reasonable to you, we have at hand, I think, a sure means, with Mr. Berlaps' consent, of proving or disproving the theory. In the nineteenth century, a flirtation piqued the curiosity, flattered the vanity, and engaged the love of amusement; but when the friendship advanced to the place where it must take the name and responsibilities of love, it ceased, because an impossibility was demanded. Love exacts tribute from the whole nature, and that was yielded already, to serve stronger passion, or overmastering thought, holding unsuspected possession. The crowning glory of our scientific progress has been the invention of the Pensograph, by which any individual can stand face to face with the portrait of his ruling thought or passion, and study it at his leisure. Now, what I would suggest is simply this: if the principle of Berlapsades and Flirtations is the same, and Mr. Berlaps consents to be pensographed, the Pensograph will settle the matter beyond a doubt."

The audience shouted, "A Pensograph! a Pensograph!" Berlaps grew scarlet. Miss Bayadere, quite unmoved, looked toward the learned doctors, waiting their assent, as if there were not as much curiosity under their silk gowns as under those of the ladies (only the professors call it science), and she were not certain of their consent, the sly, malicious creature! The pensographic apparatus was brought into the hall, and arranged on the stage. I make no attempt to describe it! The mental and scientific conditions of our day are such that description would be impossible; enough, that its results were given in pictures, and that these results had been proved by numerous scientific tests to be accurate, and the exact likeness of the person or thing best loved, or the idea, that ruled the individual pensographed. If Berlaps had wished, opposition would have been useless, and, to tell the truth, he himself was not a little curious. The audience awaited the end with hushed attention. The professors watched the process closely, as men responsible for the transaction. Miss Bayadere stood, quiet as before, till the artist drew out the plate, and, glancing at it, handed it to her, with a slight smile. Glancing in her turn, she smiled also, and then, in a clear, triumphant tones, that rang through the whole building:

"What is good," she said, "is only excellent, while we do not compare it with what is better; and her lies the secret of Mr. Berlaps' perplexities. He loves already! Here is his ideal! when we behold it, we can no longer wonder that all others failed to satisfy him, and brought him only weariness and blank!"

She held up the plate. The audience looked and roared, the ladies darting meanwhile malicious glaces at the unfortunate Berlaps, ready to sink through the platform, out of the public view. Even the professors shook with laughter. On the plate glowed an engaging likeness of Bonbon Berlaps himself. Bonbon Berlaps' ideal was—Bonbon Berlaps!—Appletons' Journal.

The Railroad Wars.

Mr. C. C. Bonney, of Chicago, has an able paper in the Lakeside Monthly for April on the railway question, and the evils connected with the management in this country. The writer comprehends the evils of our railway system under the following heads:

"Recklessness in the conduct of railway trains, and a coarse and brutal disregard of the comfort and safety of the traveling public. But for the efforts of men like Pullman and Wagner, railway travel would be scarcely endurable.

"The remorseless plunder of the producing classes by unjust discrimination and exorbitant charges.

"The corruption of Government to procure extraordinary favors by special legislation."

After explaining what the legislator has it in his power to do, and expressing his doubts as to the hope for any reform from this quarter, Mr. Bonney expounds the probabilities and possibilities in the case of the other legal remedy against incorporate extortion, viz. the Court of Chancery. He insists on the fact that railways are too powerful to be affected by any ordinary law-suit, and that gigantic remedies must be provided instead. He explains what the Court of Chancery could and ought to do in the following language:

"It should entertain suits by representations of persons and communities residing along the line of any railroad, to compel the company to perform its duties as a corporation and common carrier, and, 'adapting the practice and course of proceedings to the existing state of things,' the court should apply its tremendous powers to enforce the faithful performance, by railroad companies, of the obligations imposed by the contract of incorporation, which, we are told, is too sacred to be violated by any State sovereignty. This course may, in a fit case, put the road itself into the hands of a receiver; may ascertain all the facts, by means of inquiries by its masters; may enforce its orders by attachment of the bodies of the refractory, and by the sequestration of their estates. Even a railway king may be made to conduct himself with humility in the presence of a tribunal whose rise was distinguished by 'frequent interpositions to protect the weak and defenseless from oppression and wrong,' and whose powers have been illustrated and applied by a long line of the most illustrious names that adorn the history of our race."

Failing everything else, the writer states that the people may resort to the right of eminent domain. By this the State gave the railway the right of way; and by this, according to our writer, the State may resume the right and take the railway itself at any moment. In this way the public will pay for the right of way, a moderate compensation, to be determined in due course of law. Mr. Bonney gives his facts and authorities in a labored and carefully prepared argument. In conclusion the writer sums up his case as follows:

"It is appalling to think that in the richest valley in the civilized world the farmers burn grain for fuel, and can hardly realize enough for their produce to pay taxes and keep their buildings in repair; while the transportation companies count their wealth by hundreds of millions, and treat with haughty contempt the municipal and State authorities, by whose grace they 'live, and move, and have their being!' The first thing for the railroads to do is to change their policy, and work with the people, and not against them. It will pay much better in the end not to 'kill the geese that lay the golden eggs;' nor transform the birds that furnish feathers for the railway nest into eagles that conquer and kill. There is no reason for antagonism between industrious farmers and faithful carriers. But railway managers must change their policy or give up their occupation. The land grant business must be restricted. The watering of stock must be stopped. Wall street combinations and 'corners' must be discontinued. The accommodations and conveniences of transportation must be largely increased, and at the same time the rates of freight and fare must be very much reduced. Reform is the order of the day. The trumpet voice of an indignant, determined, and intelligent public demands reform in railway management, and if the railway kings of this country have indeed the foresight with which they have been credited, they will make peace while they can. No King Canute can stay the rising sea; no Mother Partington can sweep back the advancing ocean with her broom."

Curious Bets.

Lord Mountfore and Sir John Bland staked twenty guineas a side upon the lives of two noted men, the former backing Beau Nash to outlive Colley Cibber. The comedian died in 1757, at the age of 86, and the Beau in 1761, aged 87; but before the first event came about both the wagerers committed suicide. At the house of Sir Mark Sykes the conversation turned upon the dangers to which Bonaparte was exposed, and the host offered to take a hundred guineas from any one of the company, and pay back a guinea a day as long as Bonaparte lived. The Rev. B. Gilbert accepted the offer, and paid down his hundred guineas. For three years he received his guinea a day regularly enough, then the baronet grew tired of his bad bargain, and refused to continue his payments. The clergyman brought an action to compel Sir Mark to fulfill his agreement. The Court decided that as the wager created an undue interest in the preservation of the life of a public enemy, and, on the other hand, held out an inducement to plot his assassination, it tended to produce public mischief, and was therefore illegal. Wagers have sometimes proved fatal to the unconscious subjects of them. Sir Thomas Hoste, of Aston, riding home from the hunting field with some friends, extolled his cook's punctuality in such extravagant fashion that he was badgered into risking a considerable sum upon it. Unluckily, for the first time the cook was behind time with his dinner. Enraged at the jeers of his visitors, the irate Sir Thomas made for the kitchen, took up a cleaver lying too ready, and with one blow killed his unhappy servant.

A Porcine Raid.—A flock of wild boars entered a French village recently and took refuge in a garden. The inhabitants armed themselves with guns, spades, and whatever offensive arms they could lay hands on, and tried to destroy them. One of the boars, the largest of the herd, jumped over the palings of the garden, rushed through the village, entered a house and rushed into a room in which an old woman of 80 was lying in bed. Her son, who was the best shot in the district, pursued the animal and overtook it as it had its paws on the side of the bed; he cried out to his mother not to be afraid, fired at and wounded the beast, which then rushed through the window, but another sportsman who happened to be outside killed it on the spot. The other wild boars had also been hunted from the garden by the peasants, one of whom was attacked by an infuriated animal, and was so severely injured that his life is in danger.

Two Remarkable Men.

Francis Bacon, in his boyhood, gave extraordinary presages of his future greatness. He highly delighted Queen Elizabeth with the smartness and intelligence of the answers he used to give to her questions on various subjects. It is said, that once when she asked him how old he was, his reply was ingeniously complimentary: "I am just two years younger than your Majesty's happy reign." He was sent to Trinity College, Cambridge, in his thirteenth year, and such incredible progress did he make in his studies that before the age of sixteen he had run through the whole circle of the liberal arts as then taught; and, even at this early period he began to perceive those futilities and imperfections in the Aristotelian philosophy, which, for the service of learning and of mankind, he afterward so effectually exposed and exploded. In the nineteenth year of his age he published a work, "On the State of Europe," which displays conspicuously the industry, guided by deep penetration, which characterized his youthful mind. He places everything in the light which best shows its nature as a political element. He estimates the different weights, in the scale of national importance, with an inductive and philosophic soberness—with a justness of discrimination, and a nicety of tact and acuteness which gives us a perfect knowledge of the subject.

James Crichton was another human prodigy. Before reaching his twentieth year he had run through the whole circle of the sciences, and was a master of ten languages; which, from his vast memory, were as familiar to him as his mother-tongue. Nor was his fame confined merely to literary excellence; he seemed to combine the most discordant qualities, and without a rival in all corporal exercises. It is recorded of him, that in fencing he could spring at one bound the length of twenty feet on his antagonist, and could use the sword in both hands with equal dexterity. He had also a fine voice, and great skill in playing on musical instruments. His person and countenance were alike eminently beautiful, which served to set off all his accomplishments; for even virtue never fails to be still more acceptable in a graceful form. For the victory he gained on the 4th of February, 1579, over the learned men of the University of Paris, he had conferred upon him the title of "Admirable." The very next day he attended a tilting match at the Louvre, where, in the presence of the Court of France, he bore away the ring fifteen times successively. The last adventure in which he was engaged displayed his extraordinary spirit and skill in feats of arms. Roving about the streets of Mantua one night during the carnival, and playing on the guitar, he was attacked by six men in masks. His courage did not desert him on this critical occasion; he opposed them so stoutly that they were glad to fly; and their leader, being disarmed, threw off his mask and begged his life. How must it have wounded the sensibility of Crichton to discover in the supplicant Vincentio di Gonzaga, the son of the Duke of Mantua, whose preceptor he had been chosen. Instead of merely granting the forfeited life—which was all that ought to have been required—he fell on his knees, apologized for his mistake, and, presenting his sword to the Prince, told him that his Highness was always master of his poor existence, and needed not to have sought his death by treachery. The brutal Prince, either irritated by the affront which he had received, or stung with jealousy, grasped the proffered instrument and plunged it into his tutor's heart.

The Buchanan County Bulletin has found two more hog stories under the snow. Gov. H. Weston, eight miles south of Independence, lost a hog Jan. 8, weighing 140 pounds. On the 14th of March, sixty-nine days after, Mr. Norton, in passing over his stack, stepped into a depression and heard a grunt. Upon investigation he found that identical hog, alive, but reduced to thirty pounds in weight. He had worked his way about four feet into the stack, and during his two months and ten days hibernation had nothing to eat except the straw and chaff surrounding him. Isaac Hubbard, of the same county, discovered at the bottom of a melting drift a pig, which was snowed under the memorable 7th of January, thus making seventy-six days, during which he had been imprisoned without sustenance, save that to be derived from a stack of old, half rotted straw. It weighed eighty pounds when he disappeared and twenty pounds when resuscitated, is yet alive, and gaining like a quarter-horse.—Des Moines Register.

A Peculiar Business.—An occupation pursued in various parts of Texas, and peculiar to that State, is the business generally known as "cattle skinning." A few daring fellows will band together and scour the country at all hours for the purpose of "skinning" any luckless steer that may be found out of sight of his owner. They drive them off sometimes into the brush or a ravine, shoot them down, jerk their hides off and leave the carcass for the wolves and buzzards. This has become a real science in Texas, and many are making money at the business. The hide of a good steer will bring $6, and, as it is all clear money, it is bound to pay. Efforts are being constantly made to catch these "skinnists," but they are so sharp they always elude capture.—Boston Globe.

Blucher.—When the special messenger arrived to inform Blucher that Napoleon had escaped from Elba, and that his services would be immediately required in the field, they were astonished to find him literally running round and round a large room, the floor of which was covered with sawdust, and in which he had immured himself, under the delusion that he was an elephant. For the time, it was feared that Blucher was hopelessly insane, or that he was so far suffering from the delirium tremens that his active co-operation in the anticipated campaign would be impossible; but when the urgent news was brought him, he at once recovered himself, and proceeded to give his advice in a perfectly sound state of mind, the tone of which was thus, as by a sudden shock, restored to him

TEST OF FRIENDSHIP.

BY JOHN G. SAXE.

Some years ago, when I was young,
And filled with hopes and pride and folly,
Ire sorrow came, and o'er me flung
Its gloomy pall of melancholy,
had a friend of just my years;
I loved him with a deep devotion;
His griefs and joys, his hopes and fears,
Produced in me a like emotion.

I toiled for years to win a name,
Through sleepless nights and days of trouble
To learn this truth at last, that fame
Is but an empty, air-blown bubble.
My friend sought wealth and often wrote
That he was rich and loved me dearly;
And always closed his friendly note
With "Yours most truly and sincerely."

And once he wrote "My dear old chum,
If you are short—now don't be silly—
Just drop a line and name the sum
To me, your friend and crony, Willie."
But still I had a foolish pride
To keep from him my little pinches;
We like, if possible, to hide
Our wants from one that never flinches.

And thus I labored late and long,
Until my hopes and nerves were shattered,
Until my health, which, never strong,
Gave out, and then my friends soon scattered;
For they had learned that I was poor;
Now penury is not disgraceful;
But to the rich it shuts the door,
And makes its victim seem distasteful.

And now, I thought, since health has flown,
My ancient, wealthy friend will aid me;
A small amount, a trifling loan
From one so true will not degrade me.
For still he wrote, that better far
He loved me than a blood relation;
He talked about his "lucky star,"
His wife and means, his wealth and station.

Then with a faltering pen, one day,
(I had not nerve to do it boldly,)
I wrote, "I have my rent to pay,"
Nor dreamed that he would take it coldly.
I waited long—I watched the mail,
Till all my clothes were growing seedy;
It came at last; I read in jail
"I've nearer friends just twice as needy."

Thus ended one of boyhood's dreams,
As many a dream before has ended;
Friendship is rarely what it seems—
With money, often closely blended.
I left my books, and earned my bread
By earnest, patient, healthful labor,
And slept serenely in my bed,
Nor owe a dime to friend or neighbor.

The moral here is easy shown,
If they who read will only heed it:
To test a friend just ask a loan
Of money when you really need it.
Another lesson may be learned,
Unaided by the light of science:
That gold and fame are only earned
By patient toil and self-reliance.

Humorous.

When a young voyager makes his way to the top of the Pyramids we presume he is enjoying the benefits of a foreign climb.

Many ladies give as an excuse for marrying for money that they seldom find anything else in a man now-a-days worth having.

An editor's pistol having been stolen, he advertises that if the thief will return it he will give him the contents and no questions asked.

A member of the Mexican Congress opposed a railroad bill the other day, "because," said he, "it will ruin the pack-mule business."

"Tommy, you're a pig," said a father to his little boy; "now, do you know what a pig is, Tommy?" "Yes, pa; a pig's a hog's little boy."

The latest verdict recorded was upon a gentleman who expired in a fit a inebriation. The jury returned: "Death by hanging—round a grog-shop."

The most infallible way of preventing a kitchen door from creaking, is said to be to engage a servatn girl whose sweethearts come to the house to see her.

A young man who was caught straining his sweetheart to his bosom the other night, justifies himself on the ground that he has a right to strain his own money.

A bookbinder said to his wife at the wedding, "It seems that now we are bound together, two volumes in one, with clasps." "Yes," observed a guest, "one side highly ornamented with Turkey morocco, and the other plain calf."

"I am not used to begging," said a little girl to a lady of whom she had asked alms, "because only two weeks ago my father was a merchant!" "Why, child, how could he be reduced to poverty so soon?" "My father took a bad two-dollar bill at his peanut stand, and it ruined him," sobbed the child.

The St. Louis Journal says: "A young man came into the office of this paper with a manuscript poem. It began with 'The snow, the snow, the beautiful snow.' His friends may get the body by applying at the basement and paying for the dry goods box containing the remains of the deceased."

This is told of a father who was one evening teaching his little boy to recite his Sunday school lesson. It was from the fourteenth chapter of Matthew, wherein is related the parable of a malicious individual who went about sowing tares: "What is a tare? Tell me, my son, what a tare is," asked the anxious parent. "You had 'em!" "Johnny, what do you mean?" asked the father, opening his eyes rather wide. "Why, last week, when you didn't come home for three days," said Johnny, "I heard mother tell Aunt Susan that you were on a tare."

Another clever gentleman has bee deceived by the hydrants. It was New Year's, and he was rejoicing under the influence of about one thousand drops of joy. He ran against a hydrant while homeward bound, working long longitudes. He happened to mistake the hydrant for a colored boy. "Skuse me, sonnie," said he, patting the hydrant paternally; "didn't mean to run down 'cause you was black. Grow up (hic) and be a useful man. Imitate (hic) my example," and here he laid a quarter on its nozzle and went on with a lighter heart and the satisfaction that he had made one poor soul happy.

To Cure a Sheep-Killing Dog.—Under the heading, "How to Do Dogs," the New York Times gives this suggestion, which it credits to the Rural Sun: If you have a good dog that kills or runs sheep, and don't want to shoot him, build a pen fifteen feet square and run a pole across the top, and then pick the largest and oldest buck in the flock, put him in the pen, get your dog with a collar around his neck, and rope to draw over the middle of the pole, so that the dog will have his fore feet swinging off of the ground a few inches. Get out of the pen and let the buck give him two or three good butts, and then turn him loose. This is a sure cure. I tried it on my father's dogs when I was a boy; never knew them to even cross a field where the sheep were grazing.

Taming the Indians.

Peleg Perkins lived in Denver, Colorado. He was a philanthropist of the most positive and enthusiastic type. Unlike other modern philanthropists, he did not use his wonderful genius in promoting woman suffrage, anti-cruelty to animals, teetotalism, news-blacks and boot-boys' homes, or any such trivial enterprises. His philanthropy always bubbled up in behalf of the poor, pitiable, painted, peripatetic Indian. He contended that the Indian was a human being, and hence susceptible of being civilized, christianized, and worked over into a useful citizen. It was only necessary, he declared, to furnish the poor, down-trodden copper-skin with blankets, trinkets and tracts, and place him under good influence generally, and the noble red man would soon become the pride of America. And Peleg longed for an opportunity to unfurl this fact to the public, in a practical way, that would convince the most skeptical. Paradoxical as it may seem, the object always uppermost in his mind was "Lo."

He had not been a resident of Colorado many months before resolving to put this philanthropic theory into practice. He arranged for a little missionating expedition among the Utes, who were numerously encamped in the mountain passes not far away from Denver. His wife protested, but he was determined to go, and to go alone, and unarmed. Even his faithful old jack-knife, which for years had served him so well in carving plug tobacco into little "bricks," of the proper size to fit his chewing machine, was taken from the owner's pocket and laid on a shelf. He would scorn to carry any kind of a weapon, when going on a mission of love. Filling his carpet-bag with tracts, such as he thought would suit the literary taste of the noble Utes, he kissed his weeping wife and nine children, and started for the mountains. Towards night he reached a large encampment of Utes, who received him with unmistakable demonstrations of delight. They shook him by the hand, they laughed, they shouted, they danced and sang songs—all in their own peculiar language, however, which Peleg had not yet learned. After a hearty supper, of rare bear meat and boiled roots, the whole party, including the philanthropist, prepared to retire for the night. Peleg now opened out his carpet-bag, and dragging forth a half bushel of tracts, scattered them freely among the dark-eyed subjects; then, lying down on a rock, he fell asleep, flanked on either side by a muscular young chief. He awoke late in the morning, and found the camp lively enough. Men and women were moving rapidly to and fro, and there was evidently some important event at hand. A large quantity of dry wood had been piled up around the trunk of a green tree, and at the base of the pile lay a quantity of the identical tracts which the philanthropist had distributed a few hours previous. Over Peleg's prostrate form stood the two young chiefs, brandishing their tomahawks and scalping-knives. Soon a couple of "Lo's" seized the bewildered missionary, and with strong pieces of deer skin, bound him hand and foot; at the same moment another gentle aborigine, with flint and steel, touched off the tracts. Then, and not till then, did the horrid suspicion flash through the mind of the captured philanthropist that the Indians were preparing to roast a man about the size of Peleg's wife's husband.

Let us draw a blanket over the scene that followed. Peleg Perkins no longer lives in Colorado. I will not undertake to say where he does live. I only know that his heart-aching widow is consulting numerous spiritual mediums in the hope of ascertaining his whereabouts. But wherever he is, it is safe to conclude that Peleg's views concerning the philanthrophy business as applied to the gentle savage are somewhat changed.—Ralph E. Hoyt.

A Child with a Horseshoe Nail in Its Lungs.

In our issue of March 13 we published a notice to the effect that a little daughter of Mr. A. Meredith, who resides on Rough Creek, in this county, swallowed a horseshoe nail, promising to give further details of the failure or success of an operation to extract it. 'Squire Zack Carnes informs us that the operation was performed in Louisville by Dr. Yandell, with twelve physicians present, all of whom tried their skill to get out the nail. Drs. Rogers and Kalfus, of Louisville, Dr. Cowan, of Europe, and Dr. A. S. Catlin, of Rough Creek Springs, were present. Dr. Yandell cut a hole in the windpipe, just above the breast-bone, about an inch in length, and, introducing his instrument, found that the nail had located in the right lung. All their skill failed to relieve the child of the dreadful nail. A tube has been inserted, through which the child breathes, it now being about twenty days since the operation. Dr. Catlin, of Rough Creek, still attends the case. But little hope is entertained of her recovery. The child, however, is able to get up and walk a little, but it is growing weaker daily, and it will not, cannot, be long before death relieves her of a misery almost unendurable, and which human skill failed to reach and allay.—*Elizabethtown (Ky.) The Boston Traveller says that twenty-four years ago a gentleman in one of our suburban towns packed several eggs in a box of oats and put them in an out-of-the-way place in the attic of his store, with the intention of testing their condition at the end of a year's time. Forgetting all about them, nearly a quarter of a century had passed when, yesterday, in overhauling the contents of the attic, he came upon the box of eggs in its hiding-place. Upon breaking the eggs, the shells of which appeared sound, the whites were found to have totally disappeared, while the yokes remained, dried and quite hard. The oats in which the eggs were packed were as sound as on the day when they were put in the box, and the gentleman has planted several with a view of discovering whether they retain their vitality. In the box was found a memorandum giving the date on which the eggs were deposited.

How Davis Escaped.

The Charleston Daily News is responsible for the following revelations made by Judge Clifford, last week, at a dinner party given in that that city by Col. Richard Lathers to a number of distinguished Northern gentlemen, who, at Col. Lathers' table, met some of the leading gentlemen of South Carolina. The News remarks, after referring to the conversation on the Webster-Parkman murder, in which Judge Clifford prosecuted as Attorney-General of Massachusetts:

Another event of great historical interest in which Judge Clifford participated was the solemn consultation of a small number of the most able lawyers of the North at Washington, a few months after the war, upon the momentous question as to whether the Federal Government should commence a criminal prosecution against the Hon. Jefferson Davis for his participation and leadership in the war of secession. In this council, which was surrounded at the time with the utmost secrecy, and which has never yet been described, were United States Attorney-General Speed, Judge Clifford, the Hon. William M. Evarts, and perhaps half a dozen others, who had been selected from the whole Northern profession for their legal ability and acumen, and the result of their deliberation was the sudden abandonment of the case by the Federal Government in view of the insurmountable difficulties in the way of getting a final conviction, which were revealed by their patient study of the law bearing upon the case. Mr. Hoadley, then and now a near neighbor and intimate friend of Judge Clifford, relates that before the latter set out for Washington to join this conference he paid him (Mr. Hoadley) the compliment of calling upon him to consult upon the momentous question which he was about to assist in solving, and it was agreed between them that unless it were clear that the conviction of Mr. Davis would follow his trial, and that the law and the facts on the side of the prosecution would be irresistible in the Supreme Court as well as in whatever court of original jurisdiction the case might be initiated, it would be the part of wisdom and true statesmanship as well as policy not to begin the prosecution. The conference took place, and was long, learned and profound. The Federal Constitution, the law of nations, the decisions of the Supreme Court in the trial of Aaron Burr, and other causes celebres, having more or less bearing on the case then under consideration, and the whole list of State trials in the history of the civilized world, were studied, weighed, analyzed and dissected. The council was divided upon some points and agreed upon others. Some were at first strenuous for prosecution, others who had weighed the subject more carefully insisted from the first upon the futility of such a course, and finally the wiser counsels of the latter prevailed, and the proposed prosecution of Mr. Davis was, as will be remembered, suddenly abandoned, although it may doubtless be news to many of our readers to learn that this sudden change of policy was the direct result of this solemn conclave. After the council had adjourned, and Judge Clifford had returned to his home, Mr. Hoadley inquired the result of their deliberations, and Judge Clifford made a striking and characteristic reply in something like the following language: "Remarkable as the fact may appear, we find that the laws of the United States are not so constructed as to afford any certainty of punishing high treason or rebellion, and Mr. Davis if arraigned under them cannot be brought to conviction. Perhaps it is that the men who framed our fundamental law and system of government, and who were then fighting for liberty, with halters about their necks, did not pay much attention to the question of punishing in the future the acts which they were committing themselves."

Dogs.

At a recent meeting of the St. Louis Farmers' Club, Prof. Tracy read a paper on dog husbandry, in which he favored diminishing the number and improving the quality of these animals. He believed our dog population was equal to one-fifth the number of human beings. As the latter numbered nearly 40,000,000, we have 8,000,000 dogs. This is, at least, 5,000,000 too many. To keep this number of useless dogs requires food that would fatten 5,000,000 hogs, each worth at the present low price $12, or in the aggregate $60,000,000. This does not show the entire expense of keeping worthless curs, as sheep raisers will testify. "The trouble is," he writes, "not that we have dogs, but that we have too many of them, and the poorest man will generally have the largest number. If you go out into some of the frontier districts, where you can see the unchinked and undaubed cabin of the genuine pioneer, a man who does most of his plowing and hoeing with a gun and fishing pole, you will probably find in the brush near the cabin a half dozen urchins, and for every child there will be an ugly cur. No flock of sheep could live in safety within two miles of these hungry brutes, with their fierce, wolfish instincts. The same state of things is found throughout the Western country. The wolves are all gone, but the sheep-grower must protect himself against the savage inroads of his neighbors' dogs."

How to Get the Front Door Opened.

There is no end to the effectiveness of a good knocking on the outside of a house. We remember one cold, bitter, miserable winter night when we came home late—and yet not so very late either, but it was so cold that everybody had gone to bed in the big house in which we lived, and to which we had no latch-key. At the bell we pulled, we pulled, and we pulled, and the more we pulled the more nobody came. At last we were about giving up in despair and going to the station house or a hotel, when a policeman came along. "You can't make 'em hear, eh?" said he. "Now, just wait a minute." And then he stepped into the street and picked up a brick from a pile near by. With this he knocked, apparently very gently, on the wall of the house. The effect was magical! As the dull, drum-like booming resounded through the house, every window was thrown open, and heads popped out on every story. A dozen people were ready to let us in, if we would but knock no more.—Scribner's.

King of the Blood.

For Swelled Neck and Enlarged Glands. Case.—For several years past I have been badly afflicted with Goitre, or Swelled Neck, and it had become so bad that an effort to raise my arms above my head produced a choking sensation, which was almost unendurable. After trying several remedies with no benefit, I was advised to try Kino of the Blood, which I did, and the effect has been almost miraculous. I took nearly seven bottles, and it has not only cured my neck, but greatly benefited my general health. I have not felt so well for years. I have been troubled from childhood with fatty tumors on my arms, and I can see the wonderful effects of your medicine upon those, for they have already begun to diminish, and I think that if I continue on with the medicine, they will entirely disappear.

Collapse of the Nerves.

There is nothing more disheartening than nervous debility. In extreme cases of this class the sufferers do not care whether they live or die. A feeling of hopelessness comes over them, and in some instances, where the threatening symptoms are not met by prompt and proper treatment, lunacy or idiocy ensues. Yet nervous debility is not a dangerous complaint if wisely dealt with. A medicated stimulant is the remedy needed, and in Hostetter's Stomach Bitters this specific for the complaint is presented in its purest and most potent form. Nervous disease is usually complicated with other ailments. It frequently involves biliousness, constipation, irregularities of the bowels, indigestion, and great mental depression. In the spring of the year, owing to the effect of chilling fogs, searching winds, and other unhealthy atmospheric phenomena, upon the external nerves, persons who are subject to nervous affections often suffer acute distress, both of body and mind, from this cause. It is, therefore, advisable for all who are liable to these troubles, and to the other bodily ills above mentioned, which so frequently accompany them, to commence the regular use of Hostetter's Bitters early in the season. The severe nervous and bilious attacks, with which they might otherwise be visited, can by this means be certainly avoided. As a nervine, gentle aperient, and anti-bilious medicine, the Bitters have no equal.

Died Suddenly of Heart Disease.

How common is the announcement. Thousands are suddenly swept into eternity by this fatal malady. This disease generally has its origin in impure blood filled with irritating, poisonous materials, which, circulating through the heart, irritate its delicate tissues. Though the irritation may at first be slight, producing a little palpitation or irregular action, yet by and by the disease becomes firmly seated, and inflammation, or hypertrophy, or thickening of the lining membrane or of the valves, is produced. How wise to give early attention to a case of this kind. Unnatural throbbing or pain in the region of the heart should admonish one that all is not right, and if you would preserve it from further disease, you must help it to beat rightly by the use of such a remedy as shall remove the cause of the trouble. Use Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery before the disease has become too seated, and it will, by its great blood-purifying and wonderful regulating properties, effect a perfect cure. It contains medicinal properties which act specifically upon the tissues of the heart, bringing about a healthy action. Sold by all first-class Druggists. 634

Nowadays there is little sympathy expressed for a man who neglects to insure his property and loses it by fire. So it will be, some day, with the wife and mother who is left destitute simply because she failed to urge her husband to insure his life for the family. Women should investigate life insurance. It is their helper in the day of need. It costs but little, and guarantees a fire on the hearth and meat in the larder down through the distant years. The Old New York Life Insurance Company, at 346 and 348 Broadway, New York, will send full particulars on application.—[Com.

WHEN WRITING TO ADVERTISERS, please say you saw the advertisement in this paper.

The Auburn Courier

Thursday, April 17th, 1873

The office of the Detroit Tribune was destroyed by fire on last Sunday morning.

* * *

General Jefferson C. Davis now in Indiana, has been directed to immediately assume the command vacated by the death of Gen. Canby.

* * *

There is now a question which the people of Indiana would like to solve. It is a small one, a very small one, but nevertheless it is a question. Which is the deader individual poor Nesbitt who sleeps in Greenwood, or poor Colfax who takes his hash at South Bend? No horn will wake one to continue a few more thousand dollar checks, while considerable prejury might make the other in readinees for another reception.

* * *

We have frequently elected the Governor of the State of Connecticut, but never before have we had the Legislature, owing to the rotten borough system that prevails there. Every town in the State that was in existnnce before the year 1800, has two members. All towns organized since 1800, have but one. Thus, cities like New Haven and Hartford, with 40,000 or 50,000 each, have no more members than a town that has but 1,000 inhabitants.—The large cities and towns are generally Democratic, and thus it has worked against that organization. The Democrats having now got the Legislature, can take steps to abolish this absurd inequittable apportionment, and substitute in its place another based upon population. This done, the Democrats will, in a majority of years, have a reliable ascendency in the Legislature of Connecticut.

* * *

The State and municiple elections on Monday indicate results not unexpected, and yet quite singular. In Republican strongholds, the Democrats by coalescing with the reform republicans have obtained substantial victories, and in democratic strongholds, the republicans have met with marked victory by uniting with reform democrats. There has been a systematic breaking away from party dictation, and a spirit of dictation, and a spirit of indipendence exercised that has proven fruitful of great good. In this sign there is hope for the country.

The election of Mr. Ingersol as Governor of Connecticut, by a majority of 4,000 is a democratic and libeaal gain since the Presidential election of 8,000. The most gratifying feature of the contest, is the change in the legislature, which is reform on joint ballot, and will ensure a change in the "rotten borough" system.

In Cincinnati, by coalescing with the reform, republicans, the democrats elected a mayor, the first in twelve years, and secured a fair portion of the city officers. Circleville and Toledo both elect democratic mayors, by the same arrangement and many members of the constitutional convention were secured in this way.

* * *

John W. Ray. a prominent and worthy citizen of Indianapolis has complied from official reports a startling array of "facts and figures for the people,' that are worthy of consideration at the present time, showing that the new temperance law has not been passed too soon, and the necessity of its immediate and strict enforcement. The facts and figures are as follows.

Fighteen counties with 84,861 voters support 1,179 saloons, and furnish our prisons with 465 of the 744 convicts in the State.

Sixty-five other counties support but 968 saloons, and with a voting population of 154, 842, furnish but 248 of he 744 States prison convicts.

Nine counties without a saloon in their limits, having 22,366 votes furnish but 31 convicts an average of 1 to 715.

Two hundred and eighty six of the convicts of 1872 report themselves temperate, 208 intemperate, and 165 moderate drinkers. Estimating the labor of the convicts at home at $300 a year it would be worth 123,609,44 more than the $99,598,56 earnings of convict labor in prison. In the single county of Marion, with one convict to ninety-five voters, there are twice as many saloons as convicts, and the criminal expenses chargable to liquor amount to $46,809,26.

To keep Indians quiet requirrs considerable Ingin-annuity.

Civil Service Reform.

George William Curtis has resigned his position on the Civil service Board, because, to use what the Post says, are his own words, "he regards several important appointments, recently made as a virtual abandonment of the civil service reform.'

The World says that this resignation and this plain avowel of its cause, can not obliterate the aid which Mr. Curtis in Harper's Weekly, gave to the re-election of Grant as a civil service reformer, but they vindicate him from the unjust estimation of these who saw only steel-pigeon's work doing, and are the best apology which the case admits of, for that crime against the country's prosperity and its character to which Mr. Curtis was an assessory—the re-election of Grant.

Senator Morton.

It has been supposed that Senator Morton was entirely clear of the Congressional Salary Steal, and many encomiums have been written upon this subject to his credit. He did not vote on the Bill at all, being absent, but the impression is out that he would have voted against it if he had voted at all

The Congressional Globe has printed since the adjournment April first, contains some remarks about the Senator, which places this matter in quite a different light. We have not space this week to quote largely on this subject, but we cannot forego publishing the following.

Senator Edmund voted to strike out the clause increasing the salary to $6,500, Morton said:

"I move to strike out so much of this amendment as referes to Senators and representatives in Congress, and delegates from the Territories. If I have my salary increased, I want it substantially increased. I want it increased in such a way that it will amount to something. The increase here, giving $6,500 for a salary in lieu of mileage, stationary and newspapers, would be a increase to me of about $800. I prefer letting it stand as it is rather than to have such a change as that will make.

The Senator then goes on to give some items of expense of living in Washington, saying that no man can live on the salary proposed, and farther remarks:

"Mr. President, if we are to increase our salaries, let us make it a substantial and reasonable increase. I prefer to leave this question to some future session of Congress.

That don't look like not being in favor of an increase.

The fact is this. Senator Morton knew when he asked the legislature to send him back to Washington just what the salary was and was extremely anxious to get the office at the salary, and it comes with poor grace from him or any other man, to say, after being elected, that they do not get enough pay.

The whole of them are guilty.

Gen. Canby Killed by the Indians.

New York, April 12th—The following is a portion of the Herald's special about the massacree of Gen. Canby and the Peace Commissioners, dated Lava beds, April 11, 3. p. m.: Between 11 and 12 oclock this morning the Peace Commission party, consisting of General Canby, A. B. Meacham Dr. Thompson, Mr. Diar Riddle, the interpreters and squaws. Bogus Charley and Boston Charley, went out to a designated spot where they met Captain Jack, Black Jim, John Schonchin, Schak Nasty, Jim Ellins and Hawker Jim. They had no guns with them, but each had a revolver at his belt. This, however was not much noticed as at previous occasions when they had their guns with them. They sat down in a broken circle, and General Canby, Meacham and Dr Thompson sat together, faced by Captain Jack, and Schonchin Diar stood by Jack holding his horse, with Hawker Jim, and Schack Nasty Jim to his left. Meacham opened the talk, and gave a long history of what they wanted to do for them, after which Gen. Canby and Dr, Thompson talked for sometime. Capt. Jack then talked in an apparently good strain and when he finished he stepped back to where Meacham's horse was hitched. John Schonchin then began to talk, and while he was speaking Diar snapped a cap, missed fire, and looking around saw Capt. Jack with his pistol pointed at Gen. Canby: This was a signal for a general massacree, and a dozen shots were fired. Capt. Jack fired again at Canby, and the noble old gentleman ran off to the left, but was quickly killed. Instantly Meacham was shot at by Schonchin, and wounded in the head. He tried to draw his derringer when two Indians ran up and knocked him down. Dr. Thompson was killed almost instantly by two shots in the head Riddle ran off, and it appears that they did not shoot at him at all, but knocked his wife down. Diar, Riddle and the squaw retired in safety to the camp. The body of Gen. Canby was stripped of every vestige of clothing, and laid about 100 yards to the south with two shots in the head.

INDIGNATION OVER GENERAL CANBY'S DEATH.

San Fransisco April 12.—The news of the murder of Gen. Canby and Dr. Thompson reached Jacksonville and caused intense excitement. The people are loud in their denunciation of Secretary Delano and hold him responsible. He was burned in effigy there to-night.

V. A. BEARD.

E. E. Williams, of the firm of Wood & Williams, has returned from New York where he has been for two weeks past purchasing a large and beautiful stock of dry goods for their popular establishment.

We have our eye upon a few subscribers who seem to have a chronic attack of indifference as to their subscriptions. We will wait but a few days longer and if they don't come to time, we'll publish them in a black list with full pedigree

We trust that the necessary steps will be taken soon for the rebuilding of the new block destroyed a few days ago. The piles of brick and broken timbers are unsightly, and it will be a great relief when they are cleared away and work again resumed.

It is surprising to see the piles of goods that are being carried from the deservedly popular store of Wood & Williams. They are courteous to their customers; wide awake and ever ready to show goods at bottom prices.

Our old friend Gengnagle, the popular saloonist of Butler, has gone back on us in other words, he has ceased taking the COURIER, because of its temperance proclivities. This makes us more in favor of the new law, because it seems to hit hardest in the right place. Let the galled jade wince.

Postal cards will be a convenience to people who wish to tell you all they know. Smith says to his landlady "Any letters for me to-day?" And she answers "Only two postal cards, but there is nothing particular on them."

The most sanguine expectations are promptly realized by administering Smolander's Buchu, if you would completely eradicate kidney bladder and glandular diseases, diabetes, gravel, incontinence or retention of urine, female irregularities, and maladies of the urino-genital organs.

WANTED—A man with the small pox to collect subscriptions due the COURIER There are a very few who have never paid us a cent and we would want the above person to visit them personally and board it out if no other way and not be responsible for accidents.

BOOTH—The greatest of tragedians, Edwin Booth, appears at Colerick's Opera House, next Saturday evening. We trust that the Saginaw road will run a special train back that evening, as a large number of our citizens will attend if they can return the same evening. A train running as far as Angola will certainly get out a crowd.

Wood & Williams say that their room is so full of goods that they have concluded to sell every day except Sunday until they thin them out, so they can fairly breathe.

OBJECTS.—Our friend, John Reesch, objects to our placing the responsibility of the destruction of Ensley & Snyder building upon him because he done the stone work. The fact is the cellar was full of water all winter, the wall was not large enough in the first place, but having orders to build it just so, ought to relieve him to some extent, at least, from the blame. We are assured by a number that Mr. Reesch is a gook workman, and has always given satisfaction, where he has had exclusive control of the work. If our mechanics are to do as their employers dictate, they should not be held responsible. The water in the cellar thawing and freezing alternately for several months, certainly did no good, and therefore no one person should be held accountable for things over which he had no control. As we do not wish to injure anyone, we make this statement in justice to Mr. Reesch.

The Pulpit.

The Rev. Mr. Fisher, a talented clergyman from Ohio, preached at the Presbyterian Church last Sabbath to a large congregation. He is a pleasing and eloquent speaker, and throws that life and zeal into his sermons that makes them interesting to all. It certainly will be gratifying to our citizens if our Presbyterian friends can secure his services, at least for the current year.

The text for the occasion was, "Their rock is not our rock, even, our enemies themselves being judges."—32 chap., 31v. Deut. The word rock is used in a figurative sense, occurring seven times in the same chapter, and used frequently thro'-out both old and new Testaments. Moses used it in reference to the God of Israel. The Almighty was clearly its significance, and in the comparison used in the text had special reference to Him in distinction to those whose rock was Belzebub and the various images then in vogue.

The speaker dwelt upon the rock of self righteousness, and characterized the actions of some Christians as keeping a book account with the Almighty. They gave Him credit for sunshine and health, and prosperity, and charged Him with their attendance at churches, their donations to different benevolent objects. We want that religion that is not only with us in health and prosperity, but will take us by the hand in the dying hours, and lead us through the dark and chilly waters to the green pastures beyond. In the language of Balaam, "Let me die the death of the righteous." How many in their dying hour have confessed that their rock was not the rock of hope. Col. Ethan Allen admitted his rock was not this rock at the death-bed of his daughter, when he told her to take a mother's teachings as the good and the true. [illegible] Payne after he had preached and written his infidelity, cried out in his last moments that his was not this rock. Paul stood firm upon this rock and died full of hope and martyrs innumerable had found comfort in their last moments.

John Wesley, in his dying moments gave forth a glorious evidence of the hope for all who stand upon this rock. Stand upon this sure foundation and say with Bulaam, let me die the death of the righteous, singing with the spirit,

"Rock of ages cleft for me
Let me hide myself in thee."

SEDAN BREVITIES.

Sedan is blest once more with a good hotel. Our popular townsman, Dr. D. A. Sebring, who will make an accomplished landlord, has taken charge of the hotel. The Doctor has spared no pains in refitting the building and to make it an accommodating place for the traveler. With the assistance of his aimable lady, who understands how to serve the best 'hash' in the very best style, they will make it a first-class hotel.

Last Saturday evening quite a sensation was created by two of our young sters who got their pugilistic propensities aroused to such a degree that a lively "mill" was started in front of Haines' store; resulting in a few blows, a wrestle a fall, &c.

TREES.—T. C. Eison has a quantity of Fruit and ornamental trees on hand which he will dispose of at the lowest prices. Those wanting trees should call immediately at his old residence on Jackson street.

Our friend Pinchin, of Butler is getting his gun stocked at Edgerton, and stops off there occasionally to see how things are getting along. Of course, at each successive visit he feels highly elated over the prospects of soon having a smooth bore of his own, and dwells with considerable enthusiasm upon the coming event. Pinchen, be careful. We believe with the old woman, that a gun is dangerous even without a stock, lock, cock or barrel.

BALTIMORE & OHIO R. R.

Meeting of the Directors.

Last Wednesday the officers of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad met at this place for the election of a Board of Directors for the current year and the awarding of contracts. The following gentlemen were elected:

W. C. Quincy, President, Columbus O.; Wm. Keyser, Baltimore, Md., Geo. R. Dennis, Frederick, Md., John Gardner, Norwark, A. P. Edgerton, Fort Wayne, J. K. Cowan, Baltimore.

The following contracts have been let for the graduation of the line, from Defiance to Syracuse:

Section 88 to 97—T. B. Townsend.
" 98 to 108—F. Flach.
" 109 to 118—Squires & Higgins Bro
" 119 to 126—Michael Haviland.
" 127 to 138—Squires & Higgins Bro
" 139 to 146—McKay Brothers.
" 147 to 160—Eaton, Lease & Co.

Section 88 is at Defiance, 160 at Syracuse 143 at Albion, 131 Avilla, 124 Auburn, 107 Hicksville.

Two contracts for cross ties were let:

Section 145 to 197—J. G. Burrett & Co.
" 97 to 106—F. E. Travis.

We were informed by Mr. Randolph, Chief Engineer, that the work would be pushed forward as fast as men and money could do it, and that the iron for the road was already contracted for.

Gangs of workmen are already on the line in this county and it wont be long until the entire line to Syracuse will resound with the hum of busy industry.

DRAINS.—The late heavy rains have convinced our citizens generally that the system of drainage in Auburn don't amount to much. Now, this is one of the features that a live and enterprising corps of officers can remedy to every one's satisfaction. There is no question but that first of all a channel must be made for Cedar Creek, opposite our town. The benefits arising from an achievement of this kind cannot be estimated. With this accomplished we do not have a great swamp bordering upon our town, while our facilities for drainage are largely increased.

Then a drain should be constructed, sufficiently large from Kahlman's addition in the north-west part of town, down near the Rickle, Martin, Altenburg and Ashley property, clear through the south part of town. This will relieve the ponds of stagnant water that often accumulates in various localities adjacent thereto. Other drains can be added from time to time, but the above we regard as the most important now.

In order that these great interests of our place may receive proper attention, ought we not have the very best men in our place, those of experience, and live wide a wake, for officers? Some of our Republican friends seem disposed to go to work without regard to party, and elect those to office who will work to the great interests of the place and push forward the various enterprises, economically and to the credit of all. We know that the Democrats will second a movement that looks to our general improvement and vote for the best men. The town election will soon be at hand; let a selection of the best be made, and let them be pledged to do something for Auburn.

We learn that Messrs. Sutermeister & Becker, of the firm of Sutermester, Becker & Bond, are making plans for the large college buildings to be erected at St Louis, Mo., and Columbus, Ohio. These gentlemen have attained a fine reputation as architects and superintendents of public buildings and private residences—Fort Wayne Gazette, April 10.

In speaking of the firm of Sutermeister & Birkner, architects in yesterday's Gazette, the latter name was mistaken for Becker. Mr. Birkner came from New York City last summer, and has the reputation of being a very fine architect. These gentlemen are getting out some excellent work which will greatly enhance the beauty of our city.—Ft. Wayne Gazette, April 11.

The firm of Sutermeister, Becker & Bond, Fort Wayne, is one of the strongest in the west in their line. Mr. Charles Birkner is a member of the firm, and both him and Capt. Sutermeister rank with the first architects in the country Messrs S. B. & B. are making extensive additions to their buildings and machinery by which they will be enabled to turn out manufactured stone and marble rapidly and at low prices.

From the Kendallville Standard.

Another Suicide.

It is our duty to record the particulars of another suicide this week. This time the victim of self-destruction is a man known as J. P. Gillmore, of Auburn, DeKalb county. The facts, as we gather them, are briefly as follows: Gillmore was a married man, and, some months since, had completed a term of service in the penitentiary. Immediately on regaining his freedom, he sought out his wife, and the two were again united in marriage. They commenced life anew in Auburn. The subject of this notice, we are informed, was over 40 years of age, and for some time had poor health. His funds having all been exhausted, nothing but a scanty living remained in store for the pair, and they resolved to part. Accordingly, last Friday, Gillmore took leave of his wife, and, packing up a few garments in his valise, started for this city. After leaving his humble cottage nothing was heard of him till Sunday evening, when he was found hanging to a tree, four miles south of this place. From the appearance of the body, it is thought the deed was committed Friday afternoon After reaching the grove the unhappy man proceeded to a ravine, and there put into execution a plan he had hastily formed for self-destruction. His valise contained a shirt, which he took out and proceeded to tear into strips. He then carefully tied the pieces together and stepping upon a log fastened one end to a limb. A noose was adjusted, and in another moment J. P. Gillmore was dangling in the air. An inquest was held last Monday, by Judge Randall, and a verdict returned in accordance with the above facts.

Editors' Association.

The regular semi-annual meeting of the Northern Indiana Editorial Association, met at Ligonier, on the 11th of April 1873.

The meeting was called to order by the President. On motion M. B. Hascall, of the Goshen Democrat, was appointed Secretary.

The following members were present:

J. B. Stoll, Ligonier Banner,
A. Beals, St. Jo. Valley Register,
T. C Mays, Auburn COURIER,
C. K. Baxter, Waterloo Press.
Ed. Malloy Elkhart Observer.
John B. Connor, Kentland Gazette.
H. S. Fassett, South Bend Union,
W. M. Starr, Goshen Times.
M. B. Hascall, Goshen Democrat.

The minutes of the last meeting were read and adopted.

On motion of C. G. Powell, the constitution was read.

On motion, the name of the association be changed to the "Editorial Association of Northern Indiana," and to composed of the counties of Steuben, Lagrange, Elkhart, St Joseph, Laporte, Porter, Lake, DeKalb, Noble, Whitley, Kosciusko, Marshall, Stark, Pulaski, Jasper, Newton and Fulton.

Mr. Connor offered the following:

Resolved, That we do not recognize the right of the Legislature to regulate the price of legal advertising; but inasmuch as the General Assembly, by the late act upon the subject, adopted and enacted, the rates heretofore adopted by this Association, we accept and re-adopt the said rates.

On motion of T. C. Mays, the following resolution was adopted:

Resolved, By this Association, that in estimating a square of 250 ems, of legal advertisements, lower case ems be the standard of measurement.

On motion of J. B. Stoll:

Resolved, That in order to avoid misunderstanding with reference to fractional squares in charging for legal advertising, at the rates fixed by the Legislature, publishers should estimate the whole number of ems, and charge at the rate prescribed by law.

To which, on motion of Mr. Conner, was added,

Provided, That all legal advertisements of less than a square of 250 ems, be rated as a square.

Platt McDonald presented an account of $10.50 for a record book and recording the proceedings of the Association, which was allowed.

On motion of Capt. Conner, that Mr. Beal be continued as a Committee to settle with Mr. Chase, the former Secretary.

Resolved, That the Association decide on an excursion to Duluth, Minn., about the last of June next, by steam boat, and to return by rail, provided the proper arrangements can be made.

Resolved, That the privileges of the excursion be extended to none except editors and publishers of this Association, who have paid their dues for the current year. On motion.

Resolved, That the next meeting be held at Elkhart, on the second Friday of October next.

Adjourned.

NEWS SUMMARY.

The East.

THE lobby of the New Jersey House of Representatives was the scene of a disgraceful row on the morning of the adjournment of the Legislature. In a debate the day before a member named Carse had called the Hon. James M. Scovill "a perjured man" and "a scoundrel," and when Mr. Cole and John Hood, members, met in the hall they engaged in a war of words. Scovill came up, and, mixing in the quarrel, Cole called him "a liar," and was immediately knocked down by Scovill. The Speaker ordered all the doors to be closed, but before it was done Carse rushed into the fight, and Scovill knocked him down also, and he was badly punished while he was down. The Mayor of Trenton interposed, and prevailed upon Scovill to leave the State-House, and the fight ended. Cole's face was much disfigured....It is proposed to take all the bodies of the Atlantic victims to Halifax and bury them together in a public cemetery, and erect a monument over them. The City Council, on application of the Provincial Government, has resolved to place a lot in the cemetery at the disposal of the friends of the dead. One hundred and seventy bodies have so far been recovered....Nixon, under sentence of death at New York, is completely broken down, and the prison officers say if he does not die of fright he will have to be carried to the gallows. May 16 is is the day set for his execution.... Henry Briceland, the murderer of John Allingham, has been sentenced to be hung at Washington, Pa....The Hon. Richard Yates, of Illinois, ex-United States Senator, and recently appointed a Government Director of the Union Pacific Railroad, was arrested in Philadelphia, a few nights since.

Others clamored to be returned to the island, to await less exhausting employment....The New York East Conference has appointed a committee to make arrangements, in concurrence with committees in other sections of the country, for the proper celebration of the one hundredth anniversary of the first Methodist Conference in America.

THE Genesee valley and other parts of New York have been visited by serious floods, involving great destruction of property, and, in some cases, of human life. At Rochester, an incident of the overflow resulted in a sad calamity. A large number of persons were standing on an unfinished wall by the side of the river watching the rise of the waters, when the wall was swept away, and ten or fifteen persons precipitated into the stream. Several of them were carried over the falls and drowned....The election in Connecticut resulted in the success of Ingersoll, the Democratic candidate for Governor, by a majority of 3,609 votes, over the Republican and Prohibition candidates. The Congressional delegation stands exactly as in the last Congress, namely: First District, Hawley (Rep.); Second, Kellogg (Rep.); Third, Starkweather (Rep.); Fourth, Barnum (Dem.); while the Democrats have a majority in the Legislature. ....Peter Gilsey, the largest real estate dealer in New York, is dead.

GEN. JOHN W. WOOLEY was found dead in his bed at the Newhall House, Milwaukee, a few mornings since. It is believed his death was caused by an over-dose of chloroform.... A most remarkable accident occurred in Pike county, Ill., a few days since. John Bailey was engaged in thrashing wheat with a ten-horse machine. The ground being soft, a large quantity of straw had been thrown on the track to make solid walking for the horses. A journal in the machine became so hot as to set the straw on fire, and the flames spread so rapidly that in a few minutes the machine, a large quantity of thrashed grain, and several ricks of the golden cereal were consumed. Five horses were burned to death, and several others made useless by being cooked to a crisp. One man had most of his clothing burned off, but was not fatally injured....Advices from the seat of war in the Modoc country represent the situation as unchanged. Capt. Jack is master of the situation, and still defiant.....The suggestion of the name of D. W. Adams as a granger candidate for Governor of Iowa auses considerable fluttering among the party managers. The organization of new granges continues without abatement. Nearly 1,200 are now organized, and the number is rapidly increasing. He has retired generally from business, spiritual and commercial, and it is said he will join the new Mormon colony in Arizona.

The Democratic leaders assert that the measure practically disfranchises 150,000 Democratic voters of the State. This, they claim, is a palpable violation of the Fourteenth Amendment, in that it abridges the privileges and immunities of citzens, and they say that they will appeal to Congress for a restoration of them....The following is the letter of George William Curtis resigning his position on Civil Service Board:

WEST NEW BRIGHTON, N. Y., March 18.

MY DEAR SIR: As the circumstances under which several important appointments have been recently made seem to me to show an abandonment both of the spirit and letter of the civil service regulations, I respectfully resign my position as a member of the Advisory Board of the Civil Service. In so doing I beg to assure you of my warmest wishes, and of the continuance of my most earnest efforts for the success of your administration. Very respectfully and truly yours,

THE ANTI-MONOPOLY WAR.

"Do the Railroads Control the State, or Does the State Control the Railroads?"

The following is the closing portion of the able speech of Senator Castle before the Illinois Farmers' State Convention, at Springfield:

To-day comes up the great question whether the State is superior to the charters they grant, or has parted control over them; and this question is the foundation upon which you must build. Now, there are equally able, honest, intelligent, pure-minded and clear-headed lawyers upon either side, and what the people need and must do, is to select those for their judiciary who believe, upon principle, as they believe; not men who are pledged to certain specific action, but those who hold honestly the same beliefs of right as do the people; whose sympathies are with the people, rather than with chartered corporations.

The people of this State, in common with the people of our whole Union, have now a grave responsibility thrust upon them. While I concede the necessity of railroads; while I believe the prosperity of our State and nation is most intimately woven into that of the railroad system, I yet believe they are fraught with gigantic evils, and unless we of this generation continue this contest until we win the victory by forcing these roads to owe their allegiance to State enactment, the time will come with the next generation when these corporations will force the State to own their dictum and do their bidding. Already we have near $250,000,000 of money invested in railroads in this State alone, while its indirect influence is almost without limit; while in the Union we have nearly $4,000,000,000 in the same interest and controlled by a few men who now control the legislation of several States.

Now if this interest has grown in forty years to an income of $455,000,000 last year, what we can expect in the future, when all these gains are to come from the producing classes of our nation? May we not well feel a sense of responsibility while we press forward in this contest for the supremacy of the State over the creature of its creation?

In this contest, the judiciary are a mighty power, and it behooves you to look well to it that you elect men who are in sympathy with the toiling millions.

No doubt designing men will desire to be hoisted into power through the excitement of to-day, but do not be deceived as between an honest man who denies your faith, and the dishonest man who clings to it. Take the honest man always.

Now, fellow-citizens, do not forget the main question; do not be led off upon side-issues; settle first the question: "Do the railroads control the State, or does the State control the railroads?" and to this contest invite all men of kindred interest, without regard to name, occupation or position. Let the aim be single, and the bands of a common interest and a common brotherhood bind together, until these corporations acknowledge the supremacy of law and yield unqualified obedience thereto.

How Railways are Managed—A Specimen Case.

Favoritism toward officers of railway companies is not among the least evils of present railway management. It is a notorious fact that a few years' service as a railway official generally results in ample fortunes to those individuals who secure such positions of service. Does any man know of such an officer who has not a nest well feathered, a fine house and lot in a city, a well stocked farm (for those men know the value of real estate, when procured at favorable figures), or government bonds, or railway shares, or some other good paying investment? We do not wish to charge what would be untrue, that railway officials all steal outright. But we do mean to insinuate that they have opportunity beyond those of ordinary business men. As an instance, it is charged that Mr. B. F. Allen, of Des Moines, Iowa, who is a director of the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific railroad, has been buying and storing twelve cent corn, along the line of that road in Iowa, and that on the opening of navigation, he will be enabled to get special rates for transportation on his own road, and that his chances for reaping a rich return will be better than that of a man who has not the road to (in a measure) back him in his enterprise. We do not charge that this is true, but such is the report, as yet undenied, that we have seen. And no one doubts that this sort of thing is being practiced all the time on all our roads to a greater or less extent. Such favored individuals can get cars when the ordinary shipper is denied them; he gets better rates, and thus practically controls the markets. It is not always supply and demand that rules these matters.—Prairie Farmer.

Curiosities of Human Life.

Care has been taken to make the following statements accurate, the best authorities having been consulted in their preparation:

LENGTH OF HUMAN LIFE.

The average length of life is	28	years.
One-fourth die before the age of	7	"
One-half before the age of	17	"
The rich live an average of	42	"
The poor live an average of	30	"
One of 1,000 persons reaches	100	"
One of 500 persons reaches	80	"
Six of 100 persons reach	65	"

The average duration of life is greater now than ever before. According to Dupin the average length of life in France from 1776 to 1843 increased 52 days per annum. Macauley states that in 1865 the deaths in England were as 1 to 20; in 1850, 1 to 40. The rate of mortality in 1781 was 1 to 29; in 1853, 1 to 40.

OF THE SEXES.

There are more males than females born by 4 per cent. At the age of 20 there are more females than males. At the age of 40 the preponderance is again on the other side, and there are more males than females. At 70 the sexes are again even. Between 70 and 100 years there are 15,300 more women than men, or an excess of 5 per cent. The mortality of women is greatest between the ages of 20 and 40. After 40 years of age the probabilities of longevity, as is shown, are far greater for females than for males.—Phrenological Journal.

The Lost "Atlantic."

Wm. E. Cramer, of the Milwaukee Evening Wisconsin, says of the lost steamer:

During the past three years we have crossed the ocean in two steamers, the Cambria, of the Glasgow line, and the Atlantic, of the White Star line. They have both since gone to the bottom, the Cambria with 159 passengers, and the Atlantic with 730. A captain has a deal to do with the safety of a ship. If he is a first-class man, permeated with a thorough sense of duty, the chances of safety on the sea are about equal to those on the land. Capt. Craig was the commander of the Cambria in 1869, and when his vessel entered the dangerous channels between the north of Ireland and Scotland he was so very careful that he would not permit any other officer but himself to stand on the lookout. And there, with glass in hand, he would remain for hours. Capt. Perry was the commander of the Atlantic when we crossed the ocean in January, 1872. As the vessel approached the American coast his watchfulness was unceasing by night and by day, because, he said, "here there is real danger." When the vessel was in the deep sea he left far more to his subordinates, who were trained men, but when nearing the coast he felt that he could trust no one with the responsibility but himself, and all the passengers experienced a feeling of security under the guidance of so tried, so skillful and so thoughtful an officer. We know nothing of Capt. Williams, of the Atlantic, but, on nearing the coast, we think a first-class captain would have considered it a breach of duty to be in his berth.

The Atlantic is built of iron and cost $750,000 in gold, and has been in service only two years. She is doubtless insured in Liverpool, but no insurance, however large, can repay the company for the prestige which they will lose by this terrible disaster.

The War on Monopolists in Iowa.

A correspondent writes from Fairfield, Iowa, as follows to the Chicago Times:

Visiting in several localities of the State, ranging from the Mississippi river on the east to the Missouri river on the west, and conversing with farmers, mechanics and merchants, I learn that the movement among the farming portion of the population in Iowa, in the organization of what is termed granges or lodges, of the Patrons of Husbandry, for protection against monopolies, and in opposition to high tariffs and high taxes, is one of greater magnitude than it is at first supposed to be, by what are termed the "middle men" of the country. There are, at the least calculation, 1,500 granges or lodges in Iowa, with a membership in the aggregate of not less than 100,000—a power to be feared and felt when once aroused to action, determined and resolved as they are to have their rights respected and their privileges granted them. The sneer thrown at them by certain classes to the effect that their organization is weak, without brains, and therefore not to be feared, is having the tendency to unite them more closely in point of action, and to bring to the surface that talent which heretofore has lain dormant.

If the brainless noodles who thus sneer at them could be present at their meetings and listen to the manner in which they discuss all matters pertaining to their rights and interests, they would, most likely, go home convinced that they were slightly mistaken in their estimate of the men who are sneeringly termed "grangers."

"Revolutions never go backward," we are told, and in this revolution in the sentiment of the wealth-producers [illegible] country relative to the action [illegible] wealth absorbtionists or consume[illegible] truthfulness of the proposition [illegible] fully demonstrated. Iowa will [illegible] hands with Illinois and all other [illegible] on this question of "vested r[illegible] asking nothing but what is righ[illegible] refusing to submit longer to [illegible] wrong; and it is the opinion o[illegible] correspondent that before the con[illegible] through with the railroad kings [illegible] forced to come to Egypt for corn.

"Fall of Man."

How it strikes the Danbury [illegible] man, is appended: "You are g[illegible] looking at something very intent[illegible] it happens—perhaps you are sm[illegible] yourself. Then your left foot sh[illegible] to one side with a suddenne[illegible] creates a sickness in the famil[illegible] commences to form on your sp[illegible] perspiration on your brow, an[illegible] scalp lifts enough to permit a [illegible] cold air to pass under. The o[illegible] goes out at this juncture, yo[illegible] snaps violently to the front, and [illegible] a faint impression on your mind [illegible] world is about to come to an e[illegible] nobody in charge. Miles of [illegible] spin out from you like lightning. [illegible] story buildings jump over your [illegible] quick succession. People d[illegible] suddenly and with appalling [illegible] Then your eyes close, your c[illegible]ness wanes, and your soul goes [illegible] one expiring quiver, and—an[illegible]rive. You get up and move off with a sickly attempt at a smile, feeling at the time that the back of your head is laughing from ear to ear, and finding that the hardest thing is, not the sidewalk, but to keep from rubbing yourself."

What Newspapers Do for Nothing.

An exchange, speaking of newspapers and what is expected of them, very forcibly remarks that "there is no business in all the wide world so subject to sponging as the art or trade of printing a newspaper. Public corporations, societies, and associations in general have peculiar ideas about papers. They think they ought to print, puff, and publish all for nothing; that is, "free gratis." In other words, they seem astonished if asked half price only for cards of thanks, tributes of respect, personal communications, or anything else that only interest a few persons, and not the general reader. They think it costs no money to advertise, puff, etc. And thus one and another will sponge. They forget that it takes money to pay compositors, to buy ink, type, and paper; lastly, they forget even to thank you for gratuitously puffing their business or serving the public."

THE NEW POSTAGE ACT.

The Abolished "Free Matter" List.

It is important for the public to know what is included in the law known as "the repeal of the franking privilege."

All mail known as "free matter" under existing laws, on which postage must be paid after June 30, by reason of this repeal, is classed under twelve heads, as follows, viz.:

1. All mail to and from the President and Vice-President.
2. Official communications to or from Cabinet or bureau officers, chief clerks, or franking officers of each of the executive departments.
3. All letters or printed matter to or from members of Congress, Secretary of the Senate, or Clerk of the House of Representatives.
4. Petitions to Congress.
5. Copyright matter to the Librarian of Congress, if so marked on the package.
6. Smithsonian Institute mail.
7. Exchanges between publishers, one copy of each publication not to exceed sixteen ounces weight.
8. Weekly newspapers to actual subscribers within the county where published.
9. Notices from postmasters of refusals to take publications.
10. Dead letters returned to writers.
11. Medals, certificates of thanks, or other testimonials awarded by Legislatures to their soldiers.
12. Under a special act of Congress, passed some years since, all mail matters to and from Mary Lincoln, widow of Abraham Lincoln, during her natural life.

Those persons now having the franking privilege are the President, Vice-President, Senators, Representatives, delegates, Secretary of the Senate, Clerk of House, Cabinet and bureau officers, all their Cabinet clerks, postmasters, for official communication only, as also collectors of internal revenue, and Mrs. Lincoln.

Under the present law free matter is carried at a cost of about $1,250,000, while the estimate made for amounts required to pay actual necessary official postage for the ensuing fiscal year is about $3,500,000.

The changes in the law will be especially onerous on the library of Congress and the Smithsonian Institute whose advantages in this respect have never been abused, and were always used in the interest and diffusion of knowledge. Another change which will be of great inconvenience, is that relative to returning "dead letters" to their writers, when known. The English postoffice follows the rule we have, and collects when the letter is delivered. The only matter that can be sent under the amended law after the 30th of June next, with pre-payment, is newspapers sent regularly. Postage is to be collected on them quarterly when delivered. Present regulations remain in effect.

A Much-Needed Invention.

There was still one draw-back to the sewing machine. Running one was a sort of treadmill operation, and it has been charged caused physical exhaustion, which produced new weakness and diseases. This only inconvenience has been set to rights by a California inventor. He has contrived an appliance of water power, which entirely relieves the human muscles from unusual strain. He runs the sewing machine by water, and the appliance of the power is neither expensive nor cumbersome nor in any respect inelegant. The following description will give an idea of the contrivance:

Its simplicity is only equaled by its [illegible] and convenience. The at- [illegible]

[illegible] Association of Producers and Consumers," to meet in New York as soon as I can get enough interested in it to make it a success, and I wish to have the State of Illinois fully represented, and hope you will send us a large delegation also. I would thank you to invite all bodies in Iowa, Wisconsin, Missouri, and wherever there is an organization having this subject of "cheap transportation" at heart, I want them to be present, as many as possible. Come one and all. I have said that a bushel of corn can be carried from the Mississippi river to Boston or New York for six cents per bushel, and when the National Association meets I intend to lay a plan before that body, showing how we can accomplish that object (carrying for six cents per bushel) in three to five years' time, or perhaps less. This I will accomplish, and I look to the West for aid in that effort. Please notify all the Western organizations that you know of in your State, and others, of my wish, and have them communicate with me, with names and addresses, that I may publish them in my call. Hoping to hear from you soon, I am truly yours for "equal and exact justice to all and free railroads for transportation."

MRS. MYRA CLARK GAINES, who is certainly the most remarkable litigant of the century which her life promises to compass, has won what seems to be a decisive victory. THE Supreme Court of the United States has just rendered a decision to the effect that it is competent and constitutional for Government to tax people for the use and benefit of a railroad company. Decisions of this flagitious character are not calculated to encourage many anti-monopolists to look to our Great Father at Washington for relief from the grasp of railroad monopolies.

THE latest dog story comes from Maine. It relates how, after a heavy [illegible] fall, a young Belfast girl was en[illegible]voring to make her way along the [illegible]et to a house at which she was em[illegible]ed, when a strange dog, a large [illegible]foundland, came to her aid. [illegible]HE opponents of prohibition will [illegible]lly use Maine as an argument of [illegible]r doctrine, after reading the state[illegible]t of the Attorney-General regarding criminals of that State for the last [illegible]n years. In 1866 there were com[illegible]ed to the various prisons of Maine criminals. In 1871 there were 152, [illegible] in 1872 just 100. According to this report, [illegible]rophobia comes and goes in periods. [illegible]rty years ago it seems to have had a [illegible]son of prevalence; for in the five [illegible]rs of 1838–42 there were 73 deaths [illegible] England and Wales from this dis[illegible]e, averaging nearly 15 a year—the [illegible]ge being from 7 to 24. The causes of death for the next four years were not made the subject of abstract, but there seems to have been a period of but few deaths from hydrophobia, as there were only five in 1847, and seven in 1848. In the seven years, 1849–55, the deaths rose to 111, averaging 16 a year. In the next eight years, 1856–63, the deaths from hydrophobia fell to 26, averaging only three a year, and ranging from 1 to 5. In the next seven years, 1864–70, this malady prevailed again, and the deaths were 132, averaging 19 a year, the largest number, 32, being in 1770.

FARM AND GARDEN.

Success in Farming.

Success in this pursuit depends largely upon the muscular and mental activity of the representatives of this noble class of the world's workers. The time was when the rich, fresh soil of the older States, backed by the grand old forests themselves, yielded an abundant harvest by force of muscular effort on the part of the husbandman, in connection with favorable isothermal and hygrometrical conditions. To-day, over a vast area, in the aggregate as large as the largest of the Eastern States, the surface soil, which has been harassed beyond endurance, yields scarce enough to entitle the product to the name of a crop. Treading in the footsteps of their fathers, and farming in the time-honored way of their grandfathers before them, the surface-soil has become almost exhausted of many essential elements of plant food. As may be inferred, this will be found to be the case the most frequently in these communities where the least number of agricultural books and papers are read. As a rule, the most successful farmer is the reading one; for it is only in this way that he can keep himself sufficiently posted to keep up with the times, or to keep abreast of the spirit of the age in which we live.

An agricultural community without papers and books adapted to their varied interests, is like a ship at sea without compass or rudder. We doubt very much whether a farmer in a farming community can afford to let his neighbors do without at least one agricultural paper; for we find that our reading communities make more money, have better homes, richer lands—have attained a better social condition and are better off in every conceivable way—than those who do not read books and papers.

Books and papers beget a spirit of progress. They are the leaven which infuses life, vigor and a spirit of progress and inquiry into every farming community. They go before and lead the way to farmers' clubs and fair associations. We repeat, then, that it is our candid belief that if every farmer would see that his neighbors took at least one good agricultural paper, and were furnished annually with the State and United States agricultural reports, even if it required a little trouble on his part, it would result in the best pecuniary results, not only to himself, but to the whole neighborhood, as the increased value of the lands and improvements in the neighborhood would be in a direct ratio to the amount of intelligence and enterprise therein. The farmer of to-day, as well as the coming one, should be educated in agricultural science, and then reduce his knowledge to practice. It has so long been customary to associate mental activity with physical inactivity that we are apt to think that this must necessarily always be so.

Our young men still look with longing eyes toward our cities; first, because their country homes are, in by far too many instances, as unattractive as it is possible to make them; secondly, because of a misunderstanding of the real difficulties which are incident to a successful career in our principal cities. This may continue to be so for a long time, yet it is to be hoped that farmers and their families will set about a thorough reform in making their homes more pleasant and attractive, by encouraging reading, the cultivation of fruits and flowers, music and sociability, tree planting for ornament and utility—in fact, work a complete reform in what by far too many farmers consider unimportant and trivial matters, which nevertheless have a powerful influence in shaping the future careers of their children.

In order to make farming a success, not only muscle, but brain and heart must each take part. Education in the line of some chosen pursuit is now in order. Happily farm work now requires a greater range of mechanical ability than formerly, and we have reason to believe that many other faculties which have heretofore seemed out of place on the farm, will soon be called into requisition in order to enable the farmer to achieve a full measure of success. Successful farming, as we understand it, implies not only constant pecuniary gain, but a constant increase in the acquisition and introduction into our system of farming of newer and better ideas than we formerly possessed.

Farming in the Moon.

A farmers' club in Central Illinois, as we learn from the Secretary, has been discussing the subject of the influence of the moon on vegetation. The particular point in the discussion was in regard to the proper time to sow wheat in order to gain the greatest amount of good from the influences of the moon. As is usual when this subject comes up, there were some who denied that the moon exerts any influence on growing crops, while the others affirmed that it did exert a powerful influence, and one which farmers should avail themselves of.

No intelligent person, or persons possessed of a large share of common sense, we think, believes that the moon exerts any occult influence on vegetation in any stage of its development. There is, however, some reason for believing that the moon's rays do not influence the growth of vegetation, and observation seems to confirm the idea that established plants do make a more rapid growth during the period of the moon's greatest light, than during that of her greatest obscuration—all the circumstances being equally favorable. It is also claimed to be a fact, and there is some reason for the belief, that very tender plants, for example young wheat plants, do best if allowed a period of rest during the night, in which they recuperate, as babies and young ducks do; while hardy young plants like the sprouts of potatoes and other bulbs, which have something to feed upon directly, do better if their growth is pushed during the whole of the day and night.

Admitting both of these premises to be true, the conclusion would be this: If we could regulate the weather in respect to warmth and dryness, or be reasonably assured that they would be favorable during the whole of the season when planting and sowing must be done to insure a crop, we would sow their seeds when plants are very tender at the start, so that they would break ground during "the dark of the moon," to the end that they might have the "night's rest" so grateful and recuperative to all who work. On the other hand, we would, everything being favorable, and good weather being insured, plant potatoes, and some other crops which are hardy at the start, so that they would come up "in the light of the moon," in order that they might make the fattest growth possible. But there are "so many ifs in the way" that we do not believe it is practicable to take advantage of the favorable action of the moon's influence, if, indeed, it exerts influences especially favorable or unfavorable; and our convictions are, that the farmer who puts off seeding when the land is in good condition in order to plant or sow during the right time of the moon, will be quite likely "to beg in harvest," and have wise people laugh at him for his folly.—Prairie Farmer.

Cheap Poultry Yard.

Set posts firmly in the ground, six feet high, eight feet apart. Take No 6 wire, and stretch from post to post outside, fastening with staples made of wire driven into posts. Place three wires one inch apart, one foot from the ground; another at three feet ten inches from the ground; another three at the top of posts. Take common laths and weave in, leaving three inches space between sides of each. This makes the fence four feet high. Then take other laths, picket one end, and chamfer the other like a chisel blade, and interweave among the top wires; then shove the chamfered edge down beside the top of the bottom lath, lapping under wires two inches. This makes a cheap, durable, pretty fence, that is seven feet and ten inches high, and fowl-tight. Wires should be left somewhat slack, as interweaving the laths will take it up.

Lime in Crops.

There is said to be carried off from the soil nine pounds of lime in twenty-five bushels of oats, and fifteen pounds in thirty-eight bushels of barley. There are thirty-five pounds of lime in two tons of rye grass, and one hundred and twenty-six pounds in two tons of clover, and one hundred and forty pounds in twenty-five tons of turnips, and two hundred and seventy pounds in nine tons of potatoes. Some soils contain abundance of lime for a thousand years, while others require an occasional application of lime as a fertilizer.

Value of the Potato.

Prof. Tyndall illustrates the value of a single potato by supposing that every potato in the world but one were destroyed; that one would contain in itself the possibility of again stocking the world with an invaluable article of food. If one potato would produce, when planted, only a crop of ten potatoes, in ten years the total product of the produce of this one potato would be equal to ten thousand millions, which would be sufficient to stock the whole world with seed. The real value of that single potato, then, would be such that it would be better that the city of London or New York should be totally destroyed than that tuber should be lost to the world.

Rules for Farmers.

1. Take good papers and read them.
2. Keep account of farm operations.
3. Do not have implements scattered over the farm, exposed to snow, rain and heat.
4. Repair tools and buildings at a proper time, and do not suffer a subsequent three-fold expenditure of time and money.
5. Use money judiciously, and do not attend auction sales to purchase all kinds of trumpery, because it is cheap.
6. See that fences are well repaired and cattle grazing in the meadows, or grain fields, or orchards.
7. Do not refuse to make correct experiments, in a small way, of many new things.
8. Plant fruit trees well, care for them, and of course get good crops.
9. Practice economy by giving stock good shelter during the winter; also good food, taking out all that is unsound, half rotten or mouldy.
10. Do not keep tribes of cats or snarling dogs around the premises, who eat more in a month than they are worth in a whole lifetime.
11. Read the advertisements, know what is going on, and frequently save money by it.

THE Prairie Farmer "hits the nail fairly on the head" in the following timely words of good counsel to the men who have enlisted in the war for emancipation from the monopoly slavery: Says the Farmer:

"The second danger is diversion from the true objects of the organization. If allowed to do so, politicians will rend it in fragments before next fall's election. Journals in the interest of party are already attempting to ride the 'machine' straight into one or the other of the party camps. The movement knew no party in the beginning; it knows no party now, save its own, and it would seem that it should never know any other. Keep it on its level way, and no party will hope to win, or even to exist, without all the reforms asked for inscribed upon its banners and pledged in its platforms. No candidate for office can hope for election, or to live out a reasonably long political life, without pledging himself—and carrying out the pledge, too—to eternal opposition to monopoly abuses, to Credit Mobiliers, to 'salary grabs,' to further land 'slides' and to be in favor of official integrity and economy, and exact justice to all in the management of public affairs."

The vital necessity of the anti-monopoly movement is expressed in the words: "It knows no party save ITS OWN." It is, and if it hopes to prevail must continue to be, an Independent party, striking for emancipation from the monopoly power; a party that place-hunting politicians cannot sell out to the State of Pennsylvania, nor to Tom Scott, nor to Tammany, nor to any custom-house ring, nor to any philosopher of spoliation in a white coat.—Chicago Times.

THE Turkish Government couldn't exactly get the hang of a comic journal, but suspended it.

Chinese Executions.

The Chinese Government is based on two fictions: first, that the Emperor is the Son of Heaven; second, that he is the parent of the Chinese people. In harmony with these principles, loyalty to the state is inculcated, not only as a religious but as a filial duty. But all sentimental fictions are liable to abuse, equally in politics and religion. The code of Draco was not more cruel than the parental discipline of the Chinese Empire. Passing by the palace of the Tai-tou, with its ostentatious imperial banners, we turned a sharp corner, and entered a long, narrow, cheerless street. Here, no gay sign-boards or banners relieved the flight. The shops are somber, and there are few travelers. It is the malefactor road—the street through which the condemned convicts pass, from the palace to the place of execution. It was almost night when we were admitted, under a strong but low gateway to a close area a hundred feet long, scarcely more than twenty feet wide; on one side low stone buildings; on the other a high blind wall; a walk paved with large flat stones in the middle of the court. A potter was noiselessly at work shaping vessels, some to be used for receiving the blood, others the hands and feet, and others the heads of the victims. Sometimes only a single execution takes place, but usually short delays are made for the convenience of bringing several executions together. They vary in number from two to fifty, and, in times of political disturbance or flagrant piracy, fifty and even a hundred executions take place at once. Dr. Grey, who has studied Chinese history carefully, is of opinion that no field of battle, ancient or modern, has witnessed so much violent destruction of human life as this Aceldama. The customary form is decapitation. When the condemned come within the gate, they march up the paved walk and take their places, kneeling inward on either side. An imperial officer at the upper end of the court reads, in a distinct voice, a rescript of their names, crimes, and sentences. A practiced executioner, with a long sword which he wields with both hands, proceeds down the line. The culprits stretching their necks forward, the executioner, swinging the instrument in continued circles, completely severs a head at every blow. The heads fall into vases filled with lime; nevertheless, the pavement is besmeared with blood, and the effluvia rising from this horrible place taint the atmosphere of the most distant parts of the city. We saw crosses leaning against the wall, prepared for inflicting punishment in that form, and many baskets, each of which contained a head ready to be transported to the city gates, and to distant parts of the empire.—Seward's Travels Around the World.

Marriage in Fancy Costume.

A very singular marriage was lately performed in the Brooklyn Academy of Music by the Rev. DeWitt Talmage. The Reverend Talmage is pastor of the "Tabernacle" Presbyterian congregation, numbering over 12,000, including 3,000 young ladies. The church was lately burned down, and the congregation were holding a fair in the Academy to raise money to build a new one. There is no doubt they will raise it. Among their attractions at the fair was a marriage in masquerade costumes of one hundred years ago. The managers of the fair advertised for proposals for such a wedding, and there were about fifty applicants for the honor. One couple had to be selected, and this was done by lot. The other forty-nine couples will have to get married in the usual way or give up the enterprise altogether. The lucky couple were James Willetts and Minnie Willetts, of Stamford, Ct., who had previously been loving cousins. The night was fixed and advertised, and this is a copy of the ticket that admitted the anxious throng of spectators to the Academy on that occasion:

YE GRAND WEDDYNGE
In ye Antient Costume,
AT YE ACADEMIE OF MUSICK,
On ye evening of Thursday, ye
27th daye of ye Monthe of March, A. D. 1873,
At Eight o'clocke.
Parson TALMAGE, of ye Tabernacle meeting-house, will unite ye couple in ye holy bonds.
Price hereof,
Four Yorke shillings to ye Weddynge and ye Faire.

The costumes were supposed to represent the New England styles of one hundred years ago, but were in reality a mixture of all sorts of clothes of a good many ages. The marriage masqueraders marched into the hall in procession, two and two, about thirty in number, and upon the stage, where they could be viewed at length and breadth. They formed a semi-circle of more colors than a rainbow. The Reverend Talmage at length appeared dressed in black. The bride and groom stepped out from among their merry friends, looking very serious. The preacher took his place before them with his back to the rest of the audience, and he married them there. The party then went to a wedding feast of pork and beans that had been spread for the occasion. The performance was a decided success, and will raise the new Tabernacle several feet. The congregation are going to present the couple with a piano and a sewing machine as wedding gifts.

THE Connecticut pigs are really becoming alarming. One specimen was born in Bethany, last week, with two sets of legs and four ears. Two of the four fore-legs grow out of the back of the head, and cannot, therefore, be very useful to the possessor for pedestrian purposes, though they might serve well enough as horns. This richly formed creature has two sets of teeth, and his mouth is also provided with a double roof. But loveliness like this, of course, soon faded. The porcine cherub but just glanced at the world, just understood that he was a native of Connecticut, and would certainly be made to show if he lived. He preferred death—he died, and who can blame him?

"SIX feet in his boots!" exclaimed Mrs. Beeswax. "What will the impudence of this world come to, I wonder? Why, they might as well tell me that the man had six heads in his hat."

WHEN the new Postoffice in Boston is completed, the various newspapers will receive their exchanges direct by pneumatic tubes.

The Carrier-Pigeon.

The speed of the carrier-pigeon has been generally overrated. Careful experiments have shown that thirty miles an hour is the average, although in a few well authenticated instances thrice that speed has been attained. In 1808 an English gentleman laid a wager that his pigeon could fly thirty-five miles an hour. To decide the question, three of the trained birds were taken exactly that distance from his residence, and let loose in the presence of witnesses. They arrived home together in just fifty-three minutes, or seven minutes ahead of time. In the year 1838, during the great annual trial of carrier-pigeons at Ghent, twenty-four birds were let fly at Rouen, 150 miles distant, at five minutes before ten in the morning. Their flight was carefully timed. One of them reached Ghent in one hour and thirty minutes, having traversed the distance at the marvelous rate of more than ninety miles an hour. Sixteen made the journey in two hours and a half. Several were never heard from. In the East wonderful stories are told of their speed and endurance. The traveler Lithgow tells us that one will carry a letter from Babylon to Aleppo in forty-eight hours, the places being thirty days' journey apart by the slow modes of travel used in the East. But the stories of early travelers are to be taken with many grains of allowance. Although for a short distance, or in exceptional cases, the carrier-pigeon may attain a much greater speed, thirty miles an hour is probably its average. It could not sustain a long flight with greater velocity.

Even this speed cannot be maintained without rest, for the carrier-pigeon has not the endurance which belongs to many birds of passage. It always descends at night for shelter and repose, and hence it can hardly fly across a wide expanse of water. To this was partly owing the failure of the attempt to use them for conveying intelligence from the Arctic explorers, and partly to another cause. Some writers chiefly poets and romancers, would have us believe that the carrier-pigeon finds its way home from remote places by a sort of instinct; but this is not the case. Its flight is guided by sight alone. When let loose from confinement it rises to a great height in the air by a series of constantly enlarging circles, until it catches sight of some familiar landmark, by which to direct its course. If flown on a foggy day it soon becomes bewildered, and either returns to the place of flight or is lost. Let loose from a balloon on a clear day, and too far above the ground for objects thereon to be discerned even by its piercing vision, instead of rising, it drops perpendicularly, like a plummet, until it nears the earth, when it begins to wheel round in a descending spiral, constantly in diameter, evidently for the purpose above mentioned, of ascertaining its locality and discovering some indications for the direction of its course.

Singular Tragedy in Kentucky.

A late Louisville paper says: "One dark night in November last David Bailey was shot and killed by a young householder in Bath county, Ky., named Geo. Shrout. Shrout was indicted for murder in the first degree, but the trial, which has just been concluded in the Bath Circuit Court, resulted in his acquittal. From the evidence it appeared that Bailey, when drunk, had a habit of growling like a dog. On the night of the killing he had been drinking freely, wandered out to the house of Shrout and endeavored to obtain admittance.

Shrout was awakened by the noise and came down to the door, taking his shot-gun with him. Opening the front door he saw a dim object in the darkness, and calling out to it, received no answer. He then gave warning that he was about to shoot, but the object only replied by a series of loud growls. Shrout then fired, and was horrified to hear the cries of a human being. He seems to have been badly frightened, and without examining further, locked the door and went up stairs again. Bailey was mortally wounded, and lay groaning before the house until some passers by brought him back to town, where he died in a few hours. Shrout was arrested the next morning. At the trial a statement as above was given, and substantiated by the mother of the accused, who was at the side of her son at the time. The jury brought in at once a verdict of not guilty. The event created great excitement in the vicinity, as both parties were well known. Bailey left a wife and seven children.

What to do in Case of Accident.

Prof. Wilder, of Cornell University, gives the following short rules for action in cases of accident, which it will be found useful to preserve or remember:

For dust in the eyes, avoid rubbing; dash water into them; remove cinders, etc., with the point of a lead pencil.

Remove water from the ear by tepid water; never put a hard instrument into the ear.

If any artery is cut, compress above the wound; if a vein is cut, compress below.

If choked, get upon all fours and cough.

For slight burns, dip the part in cold water; if the skin is destroyed, cover with varnish.

Smother a fire with carpets, etc.; water will often spread burning oil and increase danger. Before passing through smoke take a full breath and then stoop low; but if carbonic acid gas is suspected walk erect.

Suck poisoned wounds, unless your mouth is sore; enlarge the wound, or, better, cut out the part without delay; hold the wounded part as long as can be borne to a hot coal or end of a cigar.

In case of poisoning, excite vomiting by tickling the throat or by warm water and mustard.

For acid poisons, give alkalis; for alkaline poisons, give acids—white of egg is good in most cases; in a case of opium poisoning, give strong coffee and keep moving.

If in water, float on the back, with the nose and mouth projecting.

For apoplexy, raise the hand and body; for fainting, lay the person flat.

SOME of the spring bonnets are of the most curious description and style. They form almost a point over the forehead, and are a fine combination of lace, feathers, flowers, jet and hair-pins.

Origin of the Names of States.

Maine was called so on account of the people there always keeping an eye on the main chance.

Vermont—well the Green Mountains were named after Vermont.

New Hampshire—Old ham was sold in the adjoining States, but if you went there you got new ham—sure, hence the name—New Hampshire.

Massachusetts—When slaves were owned there the mistress of a household caught one of them chewing tobacco. She was about to order him punished, when he said, "Massa-chews-it." She commuted his sentence to hanging, and immediately gave a name to the State.

Rhode Island—Named after "Aunt Rhody."

Connecticut—An old Indian in the tobacco business named Konnecti used to get up two very good brands of chewing tobacco. He called one fine cut and the other Konnecti-cut. The latter gave the name to the State.

New-York—So called to distinguish it from old York on the James.

New Jersey—No stranger has ever stopped long enough in the State to ascertain where it did get its name from. It is supposed to have been named from "Jersey lightning."

Pennsylvania—All the pencils were made there once, and the people were exceedingly vain of it, hence the State got to be called "Pencil-vain-ia." The orthography has been changed somewhat since.

Delaware—We don't know what kind of ware "Dela" is, but whatever it is, that is where the name came from.

Maryland—Runaway couples used to fly there to be married, hence Marry-land. Some careless printer dropped out an r in "making up" one day, and it has never been put back again.

Virginia—When Paul and Virginia were so thick together, Paul named the State after his girl.

Carolina—A man named Car settled the Carolinas. He was rated as an old-liner, hence the term, Car-o'-liner, now Carolina, North or South, just as it suits you.

Florida—So called because the complexion of the people is so florid-eh?

Alabama—The Abama family owned the entire State once, hence All-Abama.

Georgia was named after George Washington. They thought a great deal of Washington down there and used to call him "Georgie."

Louisiana—Named in honor of Louisa Ann.

Mississippi—Old Sippi, who settled the State, had two very charming daughters, the Misses Sippi, and they gave name to the State.

Arkansas, pronounced Arkansaw—Named after the title of the first saloon ever opened in the State, whose device was a picture of the Ark and a saw, the dive being called the "Ark and Saw." The Ark denoted that they were above such a thing as water, and the Saw was intended as a symbol that this is a world of saw-row.

Tennessee—In the early days of that State the people had a mania for betting on the ten-spot, hence "Ten-I-see."

Kentucky—An Indian name, signifying handsome women, fine horses, tobacco and Bourbon whisky.

Ohio—So called because it Oh's a good deal.

Michigan—Named after Lake Michigan. The lake was named after the State.

Indiana—The State was declared at its first settlement to be so healthy that it was quite a question for a time whether those who went In-die-any. That somehow got to be the name. Curious how the names of many of the States originated, don't it?

Illinois—The earliest settlers were made sick by the howlings of wild beasts and of the Chicago City Council, hence Ill-o'-noise.

Wisconsin—Named after the Wisconsin river. It might have been named before it, only the river was older than the State, and got named first.

Missouri—Named "Misery" originally, now corrupted to Missouri.

Iowa—This State has always been free from debt, and its motto is "I-owe-a cent to nobody." In confirmation of that fact, "Nobody" called the State Iowa.

Oregon—Egon was the original Indian name, but people got to talking so much about "going to California or Egon," that Oregon came to be the title.

Kansas and Nebraska were named after that "Kansas and Nebraska Bill," that they had such a fight over in Congress some twenty years ago. Bill had a hard time of it, but he named two States.

Minnesota—A small stream called the Sota, famous for its minnies, gave name to that State.

California—This State was not named after John W. Forney, as some might suppose. They didn't Call-it-Forney-ah! and then make California out of it, although many names and titles come a much more roundabout way. We are obliged to confess that the Golden State, with its golden statements, is too much for us. We give it up.—Fat Contributor.

Perfumes and Health.

An Italian professor has made some very agreeable medical researches, resulting in the discovery that vegetable perfumes exercise a positively healthful influence on the atmosphere, converting its oxygen into ozone, and thus increasing its oxydizing influence. The essences found to develop the largest quantity of ozone are those of cherry, laurel, cloves, lavender, mint, juniper, lemons, fennel, bergamot; those that give it in smaller quantities are anise, nutmeg and thyme. The flowers of the narcisse, hyacinth, mignonette, heliotrope, and lily of the valley develop ozone in closed vessels. Flowers destitute of ozone do not develop it, and those which have but slight perfume develop it only in small quantities. Reasoning from these facts, the professor recommends the cultivation of flowers in marshy districts, and in all places infested with animal emanations, on account of the powerful oxydizing influence of ozone. The inhabitants of such regions should, he says, surround their houses with beds of the most odorous flowers.

ONE-HALF the coal mined in England is wasted by carelessness.

IT is rumored that King Amadeus is writing a history of his reign in Spain.

IT is not an uncommon sight in Russia to see women working with men at paving the streets.

IN Japan a whole crop of newspapers is beginning to spring up. The Japanese are also learning something about the liberty of the press, as many of the papers have already been suspended by the Government.

THE straits to which English manufacturers are reduced for cheap coal compels a leading technical paper to observe that "the day is probably not very far off when it will become a matter of full consideration how England may best and most economically draw upon the immense coal seams of Picton and Cumberland river in Nova Scotia."

THE Director of the Vienna police lately proceeded to take an estimate of the number of lodgings disposable in that city, with a view to the Universal Exhibition. Within the radius traversed there appear to be 3,120 houses available for that purpose, containing 8,979 rooms, and 3,498 cabinets, with 18,278 beds. In that number rooms in hotels are not included.

IN A late conversation with M. de Broglie, President Thiers said: "France resembles an invalid whom it would be imprudent to move. You tell me that there are other rooms in the neighborhood better furnished and more comfortable than the one in which she is lying. That may be; I do not deny it; but we must not kill the invalid by stirring her under pretense of providing her with a better lodging."

NAPOLEON didn't die of the disease with an unpronounceable name, after all. He was scared to death, if we may believe what M. D. Conway writes of him: "Only two hours before the Emperor died he arose and returned to his bed unassisted. Seeing him so much better, the surgeon proposed a surgical operation, to which he had submitted before, and which might have cost him two minutes' agony. The instant the proposal was made to him Napoleon became livid with terror, his pulse sank, his heart declined, and he died."

Nothing New Under the Sun.

Humboldt, in his Cosmos, states that the Chinese had magnetic carriages with which to guide themselves across the great plains of Tartary, one thousand years before our era, on the principle of the compass. The prototype of the steam engine has been traced to the eolipyle of the Hero of Alexander. The Romans used moveable types to mark their pottery and indorse their books. Mr. Layard found in Nineveh a magnifying lens of rock crystal, which Sir D. Brewster considers a true optical lens and the origin of the microscope. The principle of the stereoscope, invented by Prof. Wheatstone, was known to Euclid, described by Galen fifteen hundred years ago, and more fully in 1599, A. D., in the works of Baptista Porta. The Thames tunnel, though such a novelty, was anticipated by that under the Euphrates of Babylon; and the ancient Egyptians had a Suez canal. Such examples might be indefinitely multiplied, but we turn to photography. M. Joubard, in his "Nouvelles Inventions aux Exposition Universelles," 1857, says a translation from German was discovered in Russia, three hundred years old, which contains a clear explanation of photography. The old alchemists understood the properties of chloride of silver in relation to light, and its photographic action is explained by Fabricius in "De Rebus Metallicis," 1566. The daguerreotype process was anticipated by De la Roche in his "Giphantie," 1760, though it was only the statement of a dreamer.

THE East is waking up to an interest in the transportation question, about which the West is already so much agitated. The Boston Journal of Commerce points out that when the farmers cannot live by raising produce they will do their own manufacturing, and adds: "If our merchants desire to retain their Western trade, they must aid the West to obtain facilities to reach the seaboard." The New York Times holds the same opinion, and says that "the railroads have been undermining their own business." The recognition at the East of the necessity for reducing the rates of transportation is an important step in the present movement. It is to be hoped that it will lead to some practical effort in the way of resisting railroad aggressions and breaking down railroad monopolies. A good deal was achieved by the passage of the General Railroad law in New Jersey, by which that State will be thrown open to a free railroad passage from the West to the Atlantic. Still more may be accomplished when Eastern capital shall make some concerted and substantial movement for increasing the canal facilities. This will be done when the Eastern manufacturers and dealers fully recognize the prediction of the Boston Journal of Commerce, the New York Tribune, and other journals which are warning the Eastern people of their folly in permitting the Western trade upon which they live to turn into another channel.

THE legal meaning of the word "either" was gravely argued in an English Court of Chancery the other day. A certain testator left property, the disposition of which was affected by the "death of either" of two persons. One lawyer insisted that "either" meant both; and in support of this view he quoted Chaucer, Dryden, Southey, the story of the Crucifixion, and a passage from the Revelations. The Judge suggested that there was an old song in "The Beggar's Opera" which took the other view: "How happy could I be with either, were t'other dear charmer away." In pronouncing judgment, the Court ruled that "either" meant one of two, and did not mean "both." It might have that meaning occasionally in poetry, but never in a Court of Chancery.

THE erection of twenty-six new buildings was authorized by the last Congress. Fifteen are in process of construction.

Power of the Press.

Rev. Dr. Stone of Sanfrancisco gives credit to the press for exciting a health ful and beneficial influence in private and public life. He says:

"The newspapers today, is more fear ed in Congressional halls and the high places of corruption and villainy than the laws and courts, and sting of conscience and the thunder of Divine Wrath God is a great ways off, and the Jungment awaits; but the uniquious report er thrusts his sharp gaze into all overt and hidden schemes, an unerring detective. The pestilent spy will tell all he sees, tell it on the housetops, print it for a nation of readers. Good!—Give us more of this. Long live the reporter.

Buffaloes.

Buffaloes generally live out West on the great prairies.

There is one big Buffalo in New York State so large that it b-hoofs itself over a number of acres.

The alimentary canal of this Buffalo is not sufficient to supply its enormous appetite, so it has several canals.

Boston also has Buffaloes; they are seen in different quarters; but mostly in four quarters, lying around loose on the sidewalk in front of eating houses. Some of these quarters manage occasionally to get into a stew and a tearing of hide and hair, and cutting up generally, is indulged in before it feeds the alimentary canal of the public.

A public Buffalo a-head of all the rest; the one at the Boston Theater that heads the column outside.

Another public Buffalo—one that gets into a stew and goes into the above mentioned canal.

It is said that the Grand Duke Alexis put a head on the mortal career of that Buffalo.

If that Buffalo has gone where good Buffaloes go, does it put on h-airs in the happy hunting grounds because it was introduced to the Grand Duke while going to grass?

Another Buffalo—Bill Buffalo.

Some vulgarly nick named him Buffalo Bill.

It is said he is as strong as a bull; why not call him Bull Buffalo? If he objects to Bull let him go into Wall street and skin a bear and be called Buffalo Bear.

Buffaloes are getting scrce—bye! bye! Buffaloes! go to grass!—Boston and Milford Courier.

In Australia small juries are employed in trials of civil causes, the number of the jurors being five or seven, the verdict being given by a majority. In criminal cases the jury consists of twelve men and the verdict must be unanimous.

Prof. Fowler's Greatest Work.

The National Publishing Company, of Cincinnati, have just issued a very important and valuable work, by Prof. O. S. Fowler, on Manhood, Womanhood, and their Mutual Interrelations; Love, Its Laws, Power, etc. It is a masterly exposition of the laws which control the relations of the sexes, and their duties towards each other, and it is not asserting too much to pronounce it the most valuable and timely publication of the age.

"Know thyself!" was the profound injunction of the ancient sage, and it is the neglect to comply with this precept which causes nearly all the misery and sickness of the world. Husbands and wives constantly feel the need of more light on the subject of their relations to each other, especially concerning the great duty for which marriage was instituted—the begetting and rearing of a family.

It is for the purpose of diffusing this knowledge that Professor Fowler has given to the world this work on "Sexual Science," which is simply an explanation of the laws which govern the sexes in their relation to each other. He lets us into the secret of preserving female health and beauty far into old age, and shows how mothers can avoid much of the suffering of bringing children into the world—a subject in which every woman is interested, and how "female complaints" may be avoided with ease and certainty.

His book is pure and elevated in its style and ideas, and furnishes a practical solution of many of the most perplexing questions of life. It touches upon questions and discusses them thoroughly, in which every married person is interested. The advice which it gives to unhappy or indifferent husbands and wives is sound and practical, and its warnings to those who seek to promote pleasure at the expense of health ought to be read by every one. Tee terrible practice of "regulating the size of families," which prevails in many parts of our country, is shown in its true light, and we commend the chapters concerning it to every husband and wife.

All friends of morality and purity in social life will hail the advent of Prof. Fowler's book with delight, and those who seek information upon the curious and tragic features of domestic life, those who would study human nature stripped of its marks and disguises, will find this volume the best hand-book in existance. Young men who value their domestic happiness, should not fail to read his remarks on the subject of selecting a wife, as the information it contains is beyond value.

The book is a real blessing to the public, and will be regarded as such by all who read it. The low price at which it is issued brings it within the reach of all and every person who wants to arrive at the sexes, should procure a copy. It is sold by subscription only, and Mr. Geo. Bittinger, Spencerville, Ind., who is the authorized agent for this section, is now canvassing for it.

Tar Cordial,

NATURE'S GREAT REMEDY

FOR

Throat and Lungs.

It is gratifying to us to inform the public that Dr. L. Q. C. Wishart's Pine Tree Tar Cordial, for Throat and Lungs diseases, has gained an enviable reputation from the Atlantic to the Pacific coast, and from thence to some of the first families of Europe, not through the press alone, but by persons throughout the States actually benefited and cured at his office. While he publishes less, so say our reporters, he is unable to supply the demand. It gains and holds its reputation—

First. Not by stopping cough, but by loosening and assisting nature to throw off the unhealthy matter collected about the throat and bronchial tubes, which causes irritation.

Second. It removes the cause of irritation of the mucous membrane and bronchial tubes, assists the lungs to act and throw off the unhealthy secretions, and purifies the blood

Third. It is free from squills, lobelia, ipecac and opium, of which most throat and lung remedies are composed, which allay cough only, and disorganize the stomach. It has a soothing effect on the stomach, acts on the liver and kidneys, and lymphatic and nervous regions, thus reaching to every part of the system, and in its invigorating and purifying effects it has gained a reputation which it must hold above all others in the market.

DOGS.

SPEECH OF MR. SLATER IN THE SENATE OF INDIANA.

MR. PRESIDENT.—Many months ago, I was requested by a venerable rural constituent of mine, old father petty, to plead for an abatement of the yearly tariff upon his 'old dog Tray,' the faithful protector of his domestic hearthstone, and the saving clause of his poultry yard from the encroachments of the possums and coons which grow corpulent by feeding upon his feathered brood. I fain would wish that I might dip my pen in the red and seething lava that is thrown from the overloaded stomach of sick and vomiting Vesuvius and write upon the scroll of the broad and glittering firmament, the deep and consuming thoughts of indignation which swell and burn in my passionate bosom when I reflect upon the want of interest with which this bill is treated by Senators upon the floor. We are, sir, discussing the question of 'dog,' and perish the base thought that I, the boon companion of dogs since the inception of my legislative career, should fail to raise my feble voice, and in the name of the majesty of the State and by the lingering and sacred memories of the huntsman and his hound, invoke your gravest consideration of the measure before us.

Dogs! How glowing the theme—The councils of the grave and Reverend Senators of Rome, in the days of her republican glory, never considered a subject so potent for the destruction of fleas and the protection of sheep.

And, sir, I'd rather be a dog myself—(voices—'Consent') and bay the moon, than fail to give the just meed of pity or praise to the descendants of that footless, decrepit old dog Tray, why, born of a poor but honest parents, tarnished a record of a long life of usefulness by one ill-considered act.

[illegible]

[illegible] once—a French-leg [illegible]—and of her [illegible]. I was raised with dogs. How often, oh, how often in the days that have gone by, I have hied me to my rest with their pictures in my eye. I have lain down with dogs, and have invariably thereafter gotten up with fleas. They—I mean the dogs—were the first and dearest playmates of my guileless and unsuspecting youth. I have often in my boyhood's sunny times, wandered with them through the forest, hushed so still with mournful silence that the singing whippoorwill scarce knew his notes; through fields rich and golden with colors from nature's royal dyeworks; on the pebbly beach of lakes that rested like dazzling breast-pins upon the bosom of the landscape, and by the still, bright banks of the Ohio, which, wending its way through many a charming woodland dell, sang sweet saluting songs to the Father of Waters which it sought.

NO LEVITY.

I hope the gentleman will not laugh and make light of this subject, for, sir it transcends in importance all the legislation of this country since the adoption of the Fifteenth Amendment, not excepting my own resolutions of inquiry into the 'raied vouchers.'

The draining law dwarfs into insignificance before it; the act for building a new State House hides its diminished head; the temperance bills are a mere bagarelle; and the million dollar canal grab a mere song.

By hasty legislation we may curtail the life, liberty, and pursuit of happiness of our canine population, privileges guaranteed to them by the bill of rights, inherent and inalienable in every dog.

Let us stand upon our own responsibility, and poise ourselves upon our magnanimity like Mount Atlas when storms and tempests thunder at its brow and oceans break their billows at his feet.

I have not finished my panegyric upon the dog. Were I a Cicero, a Burke, a Webster, or even approaching eloquent as the Senator from Grant in his panegyric upon political graves, I would carry you on wings of seraphic eloquence, musical with silvery tongued accounts of divine beauty; to the vast solitude of a forest dell, under the umbrageous foliage of some tall sycamore, upon the banks of Coon creek, where my dog 'Daisy' gathers around her orphaned litter of thirteen pups, and with maternal tenderness tells them of their dear departed father.

Were I a Homer, a Milton or a Moor, how sweet indeed would be the lines of sparkling poetry in which my 'Daisy's' virtues should be told; which if I were a Beethoven, I'd set these lines to music, and fair, sweet singer Nilsson, assisted by the Senator from Owen, should warble them forth upon the hushed and listening breeze to greet our enraptured senses and charm us with the sublimity of song.

WOMAN AND THE LAP-DOG.

Mr. President, the little fleecy lap-dog, whose envious and desirable habitation (usurped homes that rightfully belong to man) in the arms of her who is rarest and fairest of Jehovah's earthly handiwork, the last being of God's creation, made after the heavens and the earth, sun, moon, stars and angels, an improvement upon them all. Before her invention the little garden upon the banks of the Euphrates was a desolate wild, and man, the hermit, sighed and dug his potatoes in silence and solitude, and I marvel not that the Senators from Elkhart, Adams, Vermillion, Dearborn and Washington should desire a treble tariff to curtail the privileges of each and every poodlistic pup. They are unlucky dogs, on whose cheerless life no woman's loving smile has ever fallen. 'Tis their own fault that they have no radiant little butterfly to rule at their home circle and run them in debt at the dry goods stores.

Mr. Sir, I love mutton-chops, but I cannot forgo my predilection for dogs. My lamb-like nature has inherited and nurtured a political antipathy for wool, and as legislation for the last decade all over the [illegible] land, has been founded on fanaticism, passion and prejudice, I will not say 'dogs, go back to your kennels from whence you came, and say I [illegible] you? I'll none of you. Your bones are marrowless and your blood is cold. Henceforth, until I cross the dark river and moor my bark upon the [illegible] shore, there is eternal war between you and me.' No, Mr. President, I can not say this. But the wide gulf which divides me and the Southdown, I have crossed. I have burned my ships behind me, landed on the soil of my enemy, drawn my sword for the [illegible] [illegible] shall fight in this war between the dogs and the sheep, a war that has no parallel in the intensity of its bitterness, except in that long and sanguinary contest between the houses of York and Lancaster, between the white rose pale as death and the red rose red as blood; and if I fall, I will be like the good King Godfrey of the Crusades, I will lie down in the harness, panoplied all over with the glories of war. The mastiffs, ratter, pointers and poodles must and, by the Eternal, shall be preserved.

I know that this Senate will repeal the tariff upon my old friend's faithful watch dogs. The civilization of the age demands it. A consummation devoutly, of the great Radical party, which covers its nakedness with wool, and to whom that staple product is food, meat, drink, votes, and 'gruel for sick folks,' demands it. The future beckons with jeweled finger, leading us to the grandest consumation of the ages—and we will repeal the dog law.

If I fail in this irrepressible conflict, in which we must become all dogs or all sheep, then, oh shade of the sainted Rover! spirit of Fido! my best beloved poodle, buried (but not forgot) in the twighlight of years long ago! avert your heads and invert your tails, for grave political considerations demand that your hearts' best blood shall form the theme for fact and fiction in the unforgotten lore of future ages.

Colfax From a Historical Standpoint.

At the close of this day's session, the matter stood thus. Mr Ames charged that he had paid Mr Colfax a cash dividend of $12,000, drawn on the Seargent-at-Arms, to "C. S. or bearer," and dated it June 20th. Mr. Colfax on his part made oath that he had never seen this check nor received any of the money upon it. The statement of Mr. Ames, regarded the drawing of the check, and its payment to some one on the 21st of June, being confirmed by the books of the Sergeant-at-Arms, the Committee decided to examine the accounts of the First National bank of Washington City, where the accounts of Mr. Colfax were kept. The books were produced before the Committee on the 28th of January, and Mr. Colfax' accounts examined. There appeared a credit of $1968.63, dated June 22, 1868, two days after the date of Ames' check to 'S. C.' on the Sergeant at Arms, and one day after that check was paid. This furnished only presumptive proof of the deposit of $1200, put all doubt was removed when the cashier produced a deposit ticket, bearing Mr. Colfax's signature, in which the $1968.63 was itemized, $1200 being cash, and the remainder drafts or checks.

The production of this account placed Mr. Colfax in a terrible condition. Ames had sworn that Colfax had bought Credit Mobilier stock of him; Colfax had denied it under oath. Ames had sworn that this stock had yielded in June, 1868, a dividend of $1200, which he had paid to Mr. Colfax by a check drawn to "S. C. or bearer, on the Sergeant at Arms. Mr. Colfax has denied all knowledge of this check and had denied receiving any money on it. The books of the Sergeant at Arms had had shown that Ames had drawn a check to 'S. C. or bearer,' on the 20th of June, as he had stated, and that the check had been paid to some one on the 21st day of June. Mr. Colfax's bank accounts had shown that, on the 22nd day of June, the very next day after the payment of the check, he had expsited in cash the exact amount of this check namely, $1200. The circumstantial evidence against him was appalling. His best friends stood aghast, and pitied him from their very souls.

The above is taken from a work just published by the National Publishing Company, of Chicago, entitled "From behind the scenes at Washington."

'Say, You! Mister! Look here!' said a specimen of the genus Americ'n Yankee the other day, to a slightly built citizen, who was hurrying past him in the southern part of the city.

'Well, what is it? Be quick—I'm in a hurry,' replied the citizen.

'Wal, I s'pose yer kin stop 'n answer a civil question, can't ye?'

'Certainly—what is it?'

'Is there much small pox about now?'

'I think there is; you had better avoid crowded places, and—'

'Yaas, I know, that's what our doctor said, so I got out at the Roxbury depot instead of taking the Boston one, walkin' down because—'

'But, sir, I've answered your question, and you must excuse me from stopping any longer.'

'Shan't do nothin' of the kind,' said Jonathan. [illegible] your getting huffy about?'

'Sir, your evidently from the country and don't consider—'

'Consider be darned! It's you city people that consider yourselves so confounded stuck up you can't speak to common folks.'

'I was about to say,' said the citizen, 'that you don't consider the risk you run in stopping a stranger—'

'Risk?' said the man forgetting his smallpox scare, and misinterpreting the caution.

'Risk? why, ther's a fist (doubling one that looked like a flitch of bacon) that would knock you inter the middle of next week.'

'No doubt of it,' replied the other, drawing back as it flourished in dangerous proximity to his nose.

'Yaas, my little fellow,' continued Rusticus, laying both hands upon the lappels of the man's coat, and drawing him close towards him. 'I could throw you clean over my head, if I had a mind tew.'

'Take your hands off me, sir. You don't know what you are doing! You don't know who I am.'

'Don't know who you be? Wall, who are ye? Governor, or State constable?'

'No, I'm one of the nurses from the small-pox hospital over yonder, and I'm going to get some medicines at the doctor's office, and you are stopping me, and running something of a risk in doing so.'

The Yankee evidently was of the same opinion, for he let go the lappels of the other's coat collar as if he had been red hot, and stepped aside as if he had seen a locomotive coming for him at a mile a minute.

Then casting a hurried glance at the hospital 'over yonder,' he left in the opposite direction, and was last seen in a chemist's shop negotiating for a pound of chloride of lime and a quart bottle of disinfecting fluids.

Prof Fowler's Greatest Work.

The National Publishing Company, of Cincinnati have just issued a very important work, by Prof. O. S. Fowler, on Manhood, Womanhood, and their Mutual Interrelations; Love, its laws, powers, &c.

'Know thyself!' was the profound injunction of the ancient sage, and it is the neglect to comply with this precept which causes nearly all the misery and wretchedness of the world. Husbands and wives constantly feel the need of more light on the subject of their relations to each other, especially concerning the great duty for which marriage was instituted—the begetting and rearing of a family.

It is for the purpose of affording this knowledge that Prof. Fowler has given to the world this work 'Sexual Science,' which is, an explanation of the laws which govern the sexes in their relation to each other.

His book is pure and elevated in its style and ideas. It touches upon the questions and discusses them thoroughly in which every married person is interested. The terrible practice of 'regulating the size of the families,' which prevails in many parts of our country, is shown in its true light, and we commend the chapters concerning it to every husband and wife.

All friends of morality and purity in social life will hail the advent of Prof. Fowler's book with delight. Young men who value their domestic happiness, should not fail to read his remarks on the subject of selecting a wife, as the information it contains is beyond value.

The low price at which it is issued brings it within the reach of all. It is sold by subscription only and Mr. GEO. BITTINGER, Spencerville, Ind., who is the authorized agent for this section, is now canvassing for it.

KATIE LEE AND WILLIE GRAY.

[Always published once a year.]

Two brown heads with tossing curls,
Red lips shutting over pearls,
Bare feet white and wet with dew,
Two eyes black and two eyes blue—
Little boy and girl were they,
Katie Lee and Willie Gray.

They were standing where a brook,
Bending like a shepherd's crook,
Flashed its silver, and thick ranks
Of green willows fringed the banks,
Half in thought and half in play—
Katie Lee and Willi Gray.

They had cheeks like cherries red,
He was taller—'most a head;
She with arms like wreaths of snow,
Swings a basket to and fro,
As she loiters, half in play,
Chatting there with Willie Gray.

"Pretty Katie," Willie said,
And there came a dash of red
Through the brownness of his cheek,
"Boys are strong and girls are weak,
And I'll carry, so I will,
Katie's basket up the hill."

Katie answered with a laugh,
"You shall only carry half,"
And then tossing back her curls,
"Boys are weak as well as girls."
Do you think that Katie guessed
Half the wisdom she expressed?

Men are only boys grown tall;
Hearts don't change much, after all,
And when, long years from that day,
Katie Lee and Willie Gray
Stood again beside that brook,
Bending like a shepherd's crook,

Is it strange that Willie said,
While again a dash of red
Crossed the brownness of his cheek;
"I'm strong, and you are weak,
Life is but a slippery steep,
Hung with shadows, cold and deep.

"Will you trust me, Katie dear,
Walk beside without fear?
May I carry—and I will—
All your burdens up the hill?"
And she answered with a laugh,
"No—but you may carry half."

Close beside the little brook,
Bending like a shepherd's crook,
Washing with its silver hands,
Late and early at the sands,
Is a cottage, where, to-day,
Katie lives with Willie Gray.

In a porch she sits, and lo!
Swings a basket to and fro—
Vastly different from the one,
That she swung in years agone;
This is long, and deep and wide,
And—has rockers at the side.

A L'OUTRANCE!

He towered by a head above the tallest of the crowd, as erect, if not as vigorous, at eighty-five, as he had been at eighteen! What a colossal frame was his; what limbs, and broad shoulders, upon which his head, proportionately massive, was set in a haughty fashion, befitting this ultimus Romanorum, this relic of a grand epoch and a noble society!

As he walked slowly past, lifting his gold-headed stick as if it were a knightly truncheon, I reflected how rich must be his experience, how manifold his memories! Was he not associated with the brightest day that had ever poured its meridian splendor on his native State—a time of genius, of opulence, of social brilliancy, "the Augustan age" of Carolina?

And now, he seemed to me like some solitary column among ruins, scarred by the destroying elements here and there, but vigorous and firmly planted still.

Years had gone by since I had seen him last, and I felt an unwonted quickening of the blood, an unusual tremor at heart, when, hastening after him along the noisy Charleston "Bay," I laid my hand on his arm, and asked, "You have not forgotten me, Judge?"

"Forgotten you!" he replied, his steel-gray eyes flashing under their enormous eye-brows; "why, boy, your father was one of my dearest friends—am I likely to forget his son?" He spoke in a deep voice, and with a half-reproachful air, as if some trifling slur had been cast upon his good faith and constancy.

A few more commonplace questions and replies, and I told the Judge that I had come to Charleston with the purpose of collecting material for a biography of the distinguished scholar and statesman, Hugh S. Legare.

"I am delighted to hear that," he cried, "the more so, indeed, since I may probably be able to help you on some points of importance. Lagare and I were intimates; I knew him thoroughly, virtues and weaknesses alike. If, then, you wish to hear about him and his career, come and dine with me to-morrow." Of course I gladly accepted this invitation.

The next day, at the appointed hour, I found the Judge in excellent spirits, and ready to deluge me with information.

We dined alone, so as not to be interrupted; and that our conference was full of interest may be inferred from the fact that, although we sat down to table at an early hour, St. Michael's bells were chiming midnight when I rose to take my leave!

After my special object, touching the biographical sketch, had been furthered, the old gentleman's conversation turned upon the "dreadful changes"—as he expressed it—which had occurred since the war, not only in the political, but social status of the city and State.

"Sir," said he, "the race of gentlemen is dying out! A great horde of Goths, carpet-baggers, adventurers, and reckless chevaliers d'industrie, have overrun the State, and society is being tainted to the core. All ideas of personal honor and responsibility have been discarded. The mass of the people are without dignity, courage and self-respect. Insults, once considered mortal, are now allowed to pass, with little more notice than the shrug of a shoulder, or a mere retort in words."

"But, surely, Judge," said I, "you don't regret the partial abandonment of the old custom of duelling?"

"I do regret it," he answered, smiting the table in the earnestness of his protest; "the duello, under proper restrictions, is the greatest conservative agent on earth! Men, even under the most refined conditions of society and civilization, are disposed to be bullies, and there ought always to be a recognized check to this tendency, outside the workings of the law. In its absence society becomes brutal and effeminate. One must choose between the gentleman's pistol and the bowie-knife of the blackguard, or between a spirited resentment of injuries and the craven submission of a cur!"

"You have seen many duels in your day, Judge?"

"Well, yes, a good many; and, by-the-way, let me tell you that I have known several instances in which Fortune, or, I prefer to say, Providence, has befriended the injured, and also the weaker party, making all the science, coolness, and confidence of the professional duellist of no avail in the issue. One especially remarkable case I will relate to you; but first another glass of wine, if you please." We drank to each other in that straw-colored and beak-flavored madeira which, with the jovial generation of Carolinians by whom it was imported, is rapidly sinking to the drogs, to become like "rare Ben's" canary, and Shakspeare's "sack," an antiquated "tipple," a fairy wine of the past.

Having somewhat pensively emptied his glass, the Judge proceeded:

"In 1825 I resided in St. Paul's parish. My plantation was situated about thirty miles on the other side of the Ashley river, not very far from the small hamlet of 'Willtoun's Bluff.' The parish at that period was thickly settled by opulent, educated, and decidedly exclusive gentlemen. The society among themselves was charming. Every person occupying a certain social position was intimate with his neighbor; and what with club-dinners, whist-gatherings, balls, and hunting-matches, the winters passed away merrily enough. But, as I have said, we were aristocrats in both feeling and practice. Any new comer, desirous of "pitching his tent" in St. Paul's was well aware—if he knew anything whatever of us—that admission to our notice and friendship was not to be dreamed of, unless his credentials in regard to birth and breeding were of an unexceptionable character. No French noble, under the reign of the Fourteenth Louis, could have been charier on these points than we were, or more disposed to look de haut en bas upon those we had reason to consider our social inferiors. This principle of exclusiveism, however, was destined to receive a shock. A fellow named John Gillis, who for years had acted as overseer upon different plantations near the Edisto, and whose wealth—by no means scrupulously acquired—was reported to be enormous, came to reside in St. Paul's, some time, I think, during the winter of '26. He came under the worst possible auspices; for, in addition to the general bad opinion of his character, he forced the sale of the finest plantation in the parish (after having bought up the floating notes of its owner, one of our friends), and, finally, so manuvered as to possess himself of the entire estate.

"He had scarcely been settled therein a month, before, with unparalleled audacity, he sent his name in as a candidate for admission to our club. The magnates of that association stood aghast. For my part, I couldn't help laughing at the man's impudence, but, of course, I joined the others in blackballing him.

"This rejection, instead of abashing, merely infuriated Gillis. He took advantage of the circumstance that nothing had been absolutely proved against his character for honesty and upright dealing, to assert his claims to be received upon an equal footing socially, in the most aggraviting and offensive manner.

"Perseverance, backed by unlimited 'cheek' (to borrow a slang phrase), are capable of accomplishing a great deal.

"It so happened that one of our young men—the 'bluest'-blooded perhaps of them all—got into a personal difficulty with Gillis, who, being combative as a game-chicken, and brave as Julius Cæsar, immediately challenged him to the field of honor. The youth, in his anger, accepted the challenge, and was shot through the lungs for his condescension. He did not die, but his health was permanently injured.

"The consequence of such a meeting was necessarily to weaken, if not destroy, the efficiency of our taboo. A man whom one of our comrades had fought, we (it was maintained) could not continue utterly to ignore. True, our club doors were shut against his admission as stringently as ever, and in both our individual and collective capacity, we refused to associate with him. Nevertheless, the shrewd rascal comprehended that, on one essential point, he 'had us,' as Bassanio says, 'upon the hip.' A fastidious number of our circle had established a precedent it would scarcely be en regle to violate. In extreme cases, therefore, Mr. John Gillis was to enjoy the privilege of popping away at our honorable carcasses—a concession which I alone opposed as foolish and demoralizing.

"Thus the resolute parvenu endeavored to force his way upward, pistol in hand. Every year, for three years following, he was 'out' with some member of our club, and on every occasion he had succeeded in 'winging' his adversary. We began rather to respect his pluck and coolness, and to be careful about giving him unnecessary offense, when certain occurrences took place which ended in ridding us forever of Mr. Gillis and his pretensions.

"There lived at 'Willtoun's Bluff' a gentleman of considerable property, whom everybody in the parish liked for his free-handed, liberal ways, his jovial temper and his proverbial generosity and unselfishness. Arthur Wilson was, in some respects, a Falstaff, without Falstaff's vices. Like the hero of Gadshill, he was physically 'a tun of a man,' and he resembled him likewise in his superabundant wit and humor. But, poor fellow! he had been destined to suffer from a terrible 'thorn in the flesh.' His wife, a dried up little creature one could hardly see in her husband's gigantic and overpowering presence, ruled him nevertheless with a sway absolute, despotic, and admitting of neither appeal nor modification. It was the most ludicrous thing on earth to observe this 'man mountain,' a wave of whose hand would have half annihilated his tiny consort, shrinking with the dread of a school-boy from the mere sound of her shrewish voice, or deprecating her displeasure by elaborate genuflexions and anxious concessions, none of which ever soothed or satisfied her exacting ladyship.

"The Wilsons had no children of their own, but a niece of Arthur's resided with them, who, in her nineteenth year, was the handsomest girl I ever remember to have known, which is saying an immense deal, I can assure you.

"'Handsome is as handsome does,' remarks the proverb, and it must be acknowledged that Kitty Wilson's conduct added nothing to the general appreciation of her beauty. She was a wild, eccentric, reckless young thing, whose depraved taste was exhibited in a manner which almost ran her good-natured uncle mad. For, mirabile dictu, Kitty fell in love, of all persons in the world, with John Gillis.

"Though a widower and middle-aged, he was good-looking, and had certainly acquired not a few of the externals of a gentleman; but still the young lady's guardian could not entertain for a moment the idea of such a match. It was opposed to every rule of les convenances, a circumstance which only strengthened Kitty's perverse determination to carry out her own blood in the matter.

"How she had made the acquaintance of Mr. Gillis, where and when they had first encountered each other and been smitten with a 'mutual flame,' remained a mystery; but there is little doubt that Kitty would have married her cavalier if she had had only her kind and somewhat yielding uncle to contend with.

"But Mrs. Wilson, a host in herself, now rushed to the rescue. She had been absent from home during the initial stages of the courtship, or it would never have been allowed to go so far.

"'No, indeed!' as she viciously exclaimed, 'I would have nipped it in the bud!' Whether her authority could be rightly stretched to that extent, whether in truth she had any legal authority in this case, the fiery little woman did not pause to consider.

"She only yearned to show her hand, to begin hostile operations with a vengeance. The chance she looked for speedily arrived.

"Gillis called at her house, requesting to see Miss Kitty. He was admitted to the presence of the indignant matron instead. What she said to him precisely, did not transpire; but her language and bearing must have been bitterly insulting, for Gillis left the house in a white rage, and in less than an hour's time had revenged himself upon the wife by subjecting the husband to the grossest of indignities.

"But one course remained open to our good-natured friend. He must meet Gillis immediately, and in a fight a l'outrance.

"In this delimma he replied to me:

"'Certainly, I will serve you, Arthur,' said I, replying to his somewhat woe-begone appeal; 'but how about your shooting? Are you in fair practice?'

"'Practice?' he echoed, dolefully; 'I never shot a pistol but once. Then the d—d thing burst, and carried away the tip of my ear—look!' And, throwing back his gray, but still luxuriant locks, he showed me where the organ in question had been slightly marred of its just proportions.

"'There's not a moment to be lost, then,' I exclaimed. 'Come, I'll let you have my own weapons; they are perfect beauties, and a baby almost could manage them.'

"If that were so, it speedily became evident that Arthur Wilson was less skillful than the suppositious baby.

"When I had arranged all preliminaries for a meeting with Gillis on the following morning, I took my man into the yard and drilled him. Good heavens! what a raw, awkward recruit for the 'noble army' of duelists he turned out to be!

"Instead of reducing his huge person to its least practicable size, he insisted upon squaring his body toward the mark, and taking his shots in that most heterodox position.

"And such shots as they were! Out of a dozen trials, he lodged only two bullets within a space of ten feet in height and six in breadth. The others were plumped into the ground, with the exception of one widely-erring piece of lead, which flew over the outbuilding that sustained the target, and, smashing a kitchen-window opposite, elicited shrieks long and loud from the cook.

"Luckily that responsible domestic was not hurt, but her fright was extreme.

"'No use, no use! 'tis only a waste of ammunition!' cried Wilson, after the twelfth shot, which grazed his own boot; 'but cheer up, F——, I may do better on the ground, you know.'

Really it was extraordinary. The wilder his shooting, the more confident my fat principal became. All his former despondency had vanished. He was as cool as usual, and even in higher spirits. I tried to encourage this mood in him, but, to confess the truth, I looked upon the poor fellow as doomed. Why, Gillis could cut a tape-line, hit a quarter-piece, or snuff a candle, at twenty paces, and was hard and steady as the rock of Gibraltar. We could only trust to the chapter of accidents.

"Contrary to my advice and entreaties, Wilson insisted upon having a small party of friends to sup with him that night.

"'If I'm to be killed to-morrow,' he said, 'as I know you think I will be, for heaven's sake let me enjoy the society of my comrades for the last time. Nothing can make my shooting worse than it is; therefore, what matter?'

"We sat up until after eleven, drinking and playing whist. As the clock struck the half hour to midnight, I took our friend's arm and mildly compelled him to retire.

"'Take care,' I whispered on the threshold of his chamber, 'don't oversleep yourself in the morning.'

"'Pshaw, man!' he replied, 'you needn't be so cautious; my wife knows all about this quarrel, and she'll see to it that I'm up in good time; never fear.'

"He spoke a little bitterly, as if his consort's tender care for his honor was a characteristic which, under the circumstances, he would have preferred to dispense with.

"To-morrow dawned through a drizzly, cold, uncomfortable mist. Never in life had I felt so savage and gloomy—feeling by no means softened when, standing on the appointed ground, which overlooked a cemetery, I watched our friend's elephantine person looming bigger than its wont through the gloom.

"'Doctor,' I muttered to the surgeon, 'have your instruments ready. They'll be needed.'

"The doctor grinned, evidently with professional satisfaction, as his eye dwelt demurely opon the man, whose body he would soon, doubtless, be engaged in carving, unless he fell dead at the first shot, which might happen.

"Gillis, with his second, reached the ground a few minutes after us. He rode up in a magnificent landau, drawn by a pair of blood-horses, and looked so diabolically cool, tranquil, and assured of victory, that I yearned to trounce the arrogance out of him with a manilla cane.

"There was little time, however, for these idle longings. I approached our adversary's second, and we tossed up for positions and the word.

"He won them both—which was a charming omen—I thought—and we then proceeded to place our principals at the regulation distance of ten paces, which, owing to Wilson's height and bulk, had never seemed so fearfully short to me before.

"Out came the pistols next, but, in loading the weapon designed for Wilson, I found a trifling impediment in the barrel, which occupied me some minutes in removing. While thus engaged, Gillis addressed his second impatiently, and, in a voice loud enough to reach us all:

"'What's the matter now?' he cried. 'Come, Phillips, hurry up, and don't keep me waiting here the whole morning. Haven't I told you I must be in Charleston by three this afternoon? and, by ——!' (pulling out his watch), 'it's growing cursed late!'

"'Mr. Phillips,' I said, 'if your principal violates the rules by speaking in that way again, we shall retire from the field.'

"'Quite right, sir,' Mr. Phillips replied, who really seemed exasperated at the other's conduct. 'Another word' (to Gillis), 'and I'll leave the ground myself.'

"This incident did not improve Gillis' temper, you may be sure, and so when, all preliminaries duly arranged, the parties confronted each other before firing, I saw the devil in the scamp's eye as plainly as I have often detected it in the eyes of a vicious stallion.

"'Gentlemen,' said Phillips, clapping his hands sharply, 'gentlemen, prepare to receive the word! Are you ready? Fire! One!—'

"We never heard the second or third numbers, and I scarcely think they were repeated, for, between 'Fire' and 'One,' Wilson had blazed gallantly away, anticipating his enemy's shot by just the fraction of a second.

"Simultaneously with the report of his own pistol we saw Gillis leap into the air, and then fall heavily on his side. Yet, wonderful to relate, before anybody could reach him, he had partially recovered himself, and, staggering to his feet, yelled hoarsely out: "The other pistol, Phillips, quick, the other pistol! D—n his soul, I'll bag him yet! Don't you hear me, fool? the other pistol!' In uttering these words, the wounded wretch blundered and stumbled about the ground, but he got his quietus, and in a short time was stretched once more upon the earth, never, by his own efforts, to rise again!

"In less than twenty-four hours Gillis was a dead man! While being carried to his home, he raved and blasphemed horribly, and such were his sufferings before insensibility came to his relief that, as I was told, none but the attending physician could muster up the nerve to remain at his bedside!"—Appletons' Journal.

Woman's Perplexity.

It would be a curious problem for a woman to find out, from the average expression of mankind, what really is required of her. The riddle of the Sphinx would fall into insignificance beside it. At present she wanders in hopeless darkness. She has been led through so many labyrinthian mazes that she has lost all clue to the truth. Man adores helplessness and says it ruins him. He talks about economy and raves over spendthrifts. He decries frivolity and runs away from brains. He pines after his grandmother, who could make pies, and falls in love with white hands that can't. He moans over weakness and ridicules strength. He condemns fashion theoretically, and the lack of it practically. He longs for sensible women, and passes them by on the other side. He worships saints, and sends them to convents. He despises pink and white women, and marries them if he can. He abuses silks and laces, and takes them into his heart. He glorifies spirit and independence, and gives a cruel thrust at the little vines that want to be oaks. In short, he refuses to be pleased with anything, unless it is himself; then indites sonnets to "divine woman," calls her a general angel, fit only for an enchanted paradise, and created for the express purpose of waiting upon him, soothing his sorrows, sewing on his buttons, crowning his happiness, fitting him for Heaven, and making him universally miserable. What would the critical lords like? Solve the problem who can.

"That's How."

After a great snow-storm a little fellow began to shovel a path through a large snow-bank before his grandmother's door. He had nothing but a small shovel to work with.

"How do you expect to get through that drift?" asked a man passing along. "By keeping at it," said the boy cheerfully. "That's how."

That is the secret of mastering almost every difficulty under the sun. If a hard task is before you, stick to it. Do not keep thinking how large or how hard it is; but go at it, and little by little it will grow smaller until it is done.

If a hard lesson is to be learned, do not spend a moment in fretting; do not lose breath in saying, "I can't," or "I don't see how;" but go at it, and keep at it—study. That is the only way to conquer it.

If a fault is cured or a bad habit broken up, it cannot be done by merely being sorry, or only crying a little. You must keep fighting until it is got rid of.

If you have entered your Master's service and trying to be good, you will sometimes find hills of difficulty in the way. Things will often look discouraging, and you will not seem to make any progress at all; but keep at it. Never forget "That's how."

AGRICULTURE is taking the place of stock-raising in Texas, and it is the opinion of well-informed settlers of that State that in a few years cattle will be raised on a much more limited scale. Thousands of cattle perished the past winter in Aransas, San Patricio, Refugio, and Nueces counties for want of sustenance, and only those which have been pastured in inclosures are in a fit condition for a journey North. The soil of Texas presents as many advantages for cultivation as for stock-raising, and if the vast tracts now tenanted only by cattle were divided into quarter sections for settlement, both population and wealth would increase much more rapidly.

THE great profits that may be realized by coal owners in England and elsewhere are indicated by the statement of a coal company organizing in London, which claims that a profit of 50 cents per ton will yield 26 per cent. on the capital employed; and that if the present price, $5.25 per ton for steam coal, is maintained, the company will clear $3 per ton, and of course be able to pay a very large dividend.

Somnambulistic Singing.

The Troy Times contributes its portion of the curious in the following: The most curious case of somnambulism we ever heard of occurred to a young lady in this city a few nights ago. She resides in a neighboring State, and is visiting some friends here. On Tuesday evening there was a social gathering at the house of a gentleman on Eighth street, to which she was invited, and during the evening she was asked to sing. Being an accomplished musician and singer of more than ordinary sweetness, she responded to the demands of the company for repeated songs, until she quite exhausted herself. The company broke up at 1 o'clock, and at 2 o'clock the young lady retired. In about an hour music was heard proceeding from her room. It continued so long that one of the members of the family arose, and upon entering the apartment of the young lady found her asleep and singing with all her power. She tried to awaken her, but the effort was unavailing. She continued to sing, going from one song to another, for upward of an hour, when nature seemed to be exhausted, and the somnambulist sank into a real sleep. Upon awaking the next morning she knew nothing of the occurrence.

Gen. Canby.

Edward R. S. Canby, Brigadier-General in the regular army, and Brevet Major-General, who was recently murdered by the Modoc Indians, was a native of Kentucky. He was appointed to the Military Academy at West Point from that State in the year 1835. Graduating in 1839, he was commissioned Second Lieutenant of the Second Infantry. On the 18th of June, 1846, he was promoted to First Lieutenant, and in the following year he was made Brevet Captain and Assistant Adjutant-General. During the Mexican war he won two further brevets for gallant and meritorious conduct. In March, 1855, he was promoted to Major of the Tenth Infantry, and upon the reorganization of the regular army in the spring of 1861, he became Colonel of the Nineteenth Infantry.

His services during the war were active and conspicuous, and advanced him rapidly to the rank of Major-General of Volunteers. On the 28th of July, 1866, he was commissioned Brigadier-General in the regular army, which position he held at the time of his death.

Liabilities of Common Carries.

The question as to what are the liabilities of common carriers is one of great interest to the business classes of the country generally. Some time since a decision was rendered by the Supreme Court of Illinois to the effect that transportation companies are not responsible for the loss of consignments stored by them in their warehouses. That decision is now overturned by one rendered by the United States, involving the same issues. There was, in addition, a printed condition attached to the receipt for the goods, given at the date of shipment, which stipulated that all goods were at the risk of the owners while in the warehouses of the company, unless loss should occur through its negligence. The court, however, held that, in the absence of an express agreement to that effect by the shipper, he was not bound by such condition; the decision being that the carrier is liable to the extent of his route, and until he has delivered the property to the next carrier. The decision may be taken as a final settlement of this important question.—Boston Globe.

THE DOOR STEP.

BY EDMUND C. STEADMAN.

The conference meeting through at last,
We boys around the vestry waited,
To see the girls come tripping past,
Like snow-birds willing to be mated.

Not braver he that leaps the wall
By level musket flashes litten,
Than I, who stepped before them all,
Who longed to see me get the mitten.

But no, she blushed and took my arm!
We let the old folks take the highway,
And started toward Maple Farm
Along a sort of lovers' by-way.

I can't remember what we said,
'Twas nothing worth a song or story,
Yet that rude path by which we sped
Seemed all transformed and in a glory.

The snow was crisp beneath our feet,
The moon was full, the fields were gleaming;
By hood and tippet sheltered sweet,
Her face with youth and health was beaming.

The little hand outside her muff—
O sculptor, if you could but mould it!—
So lightly touched my jacket cuff,
To keep it warm I had to hold it.

To have her with me there alone,
'Twas love and fear and triumph blended;
At last we reached the foot-worn stone,
Where that delicious journey ended.

She shook her ringlets from her brow,
And with a "Thank you, Ned," dissembled
But yet I knew she understood
With what a daring wish I trembled.

A cloud passed kindly overhead,
The moon was slowly peeping through it,
Yet hid its face as if it said,
"Come, now or never! do it! do it!"

My lips till then had only known
The kiss of mother and of sister,
But somehow, full upon her own
Sweet, rosy, darling mouth—I kissed her!

Perhaps it was only boyish love, yet, still,
O, listless woman! weary lover!
To feel once more that fresh, wild thrill
I'd give—but who can live life over?

IMPROVED ELASTIC BANDS.—The ordinary elastic bands, with rubber threads woven into them, lose their elasticity in a short time by action of the atmosphere; but bands free from this defect, and at the same time more elegant and stronger, are made at no greater cost by causing two strips of cloth, previously coated on the inner surfaces with a solution of India rubber in benzine, and with a band of stretched rubber threads or a rubber band inserted between them, to pass through rollers, compacting the three by this pressure into a firm fabric.

Wailing for the Dead.

The scenes about the New York office of the White Star Line no pen can paint—some in the more calm despair of a certain grief, others torn by the fearful agony of suspense. Who knows the agony of such a crushing of heart-strings as do those who have been called to like experience [illegible] something will do much—towards soothing the wounds, but when the Atlantic went upon those rocks she wrecked as well the life-long happiness of hundreds who mourn her dead.

We make extracts of some of the incidents connected with the scenes in and about the office of the White Star Line:

"My poor old father is among the lost," said one; another replied, "My sister is drowned, too;" and the third sobbed: "My only child was on the ship. I have worked night and day to earn the money to pay her passage, and for ten nights I've hardly closed my eyes for joy at the thought that I should have her in my arms so soon. Oh, is it all true? Do you believe she is dead?" The [illegible] were affected [illegible].

Most of those who inquired at the office were Irish of the laboring class. The scene was sad and quiet. With one exception, in the afternoon, there were no unruly demonstrations. Then one man, who said he had a brother on board, but refused to give his name, broke out in an angry exclamation against the company and the officers of the vessel. A plainly but neatly attired woman wept as she inquired about her daughter, aged 17, surely on board, she said, for a letter had been received from her saying she would take passage on the Atlantic.

A pretty girl sobbed bitterly as she asked about her sister. Another caller was Mrs. Mary McDermott, matron at the Fifth Avenue Hotel, who said she had a husband and two children on board the ill-fated steamer. The brother of Patrick Coughlin, of Westmeath, Ireland, leaned his head on the counter and cried. He would not be comforted. The slender chance that the husband or brother or child might be among the survivors seemed to afford but little comfort to the sorrowing throng. Most of them had paid from their little savings for the passage hither of some loved relative whom for years they had longed to see. Since the day the Atlantic was announced to have sailed they have been growing more and more anxious for the expected meeting. From the granite bulwarks of the Battery they had scanned the broad waters of the bay for a sight of the noble ship. Yesterday's news was too much for them, and the scene of sorrow in the White Star office was such as is seldom witnessed.

Among the callers was a young man in mechanic's attire, but of notably intelligent appearance. "Any news from the Atlantic?" he asked in a tremulous voice. "No," was the reply. "For God's sake can't you tell me something?" he cried. "I had a mother and sister on board that vessel. Were no women saved? Oh me, oh me."

A bridal party is reported to be among the lost. The bridegroom was Mr. W. Merritt. He was married to Miss Scrymser, of West Forty-fifth street, in July last, and started to Europe on his bridal trip. A few months ago the newly wedded couple wrote to Miss Merritt, the bridegroom's sister, and Miss Anna Scrymser, the young wife's sister, to join them in Paris. They were expected back here to-day, Mr. Merritt's family having received word from them that they would sail in the Atlantic on the 20th ult. They were all under thirty years of age.

A man who had come from Lockport to meet his wife and children, whom he expected on the Atlantic, heard for the first time in the office about the loss of the vessel. For a minute or two he seemed choked for utterance, and then asked when the names of the lost would be known. He was told that the list of the saved would probably be known in the evening. "Ah, well," said he, "it's of no use going home to my friend's house; I'll stay around here until to-night, and if I don't hear then, I'll wait till morning. God knows I can't sleep until I know whether Katy and the childer are coming to my arms or are sleeping underneath the great ocean."

A father groaned piteously for the fate of his daughter, who, he insisted, "was strangled with the waters."

Thomas Magrath had accumulated some property, and a short time ago sent his daughter to Europe to be educated. She had graduated with honor, and was on her way home in the Atlantic when the vessel foundered.

A young man, by living economically since he came to New York, 18 years ago, saved sufficient to pay the passage for his mother, father and sister to come on by the Atlantic. Since the receipt of the appalling news the young fellow has become almost frantic from grief.

Paper Window Shutters.—The inventors who have been experimenting with paper for some time past are now trying to make it useful for window shutters. The preparation used is the ordinary paper pulp brought by pressure to the utmost compactness and solidity, with the lightest possible sheet iron or rather casting to insure stability. This preparation has been brought to a high degree of perfection in Japan, where they are much more skillful in the uses of paper than we are, adapting it to all sorts of articles for domestic use, being, as it is claimed, water-proof, and fire-proof, not liable to breakage like crockery from careless handling, nor in danger of corrosion like most of the metals, from exposure. The material has been used to some extent in this country for furniture, clothing, car-wheels, and many other things out of the ordinary course of things. As the stuff will not burn, the inventors expect to turn it to uses as a new safeguard against fire.

A Remarkable Invention.—One of the most important improvements ever perfected in musical instruments has lately been introduced by Geo. Woods & Co., in their improved Parlor Organs. It consists of a piano of exquisite quality of tone which will never require tuning. The instrument was lately introduced at a musical soiree in Baltimore, and received the cordial applause and indorsement of the many eminent professionals present.—Boston Journal.

Males and Females in the United States.

The number of male persons in the United States is 19,493,565; the number of females, 19,064,806; excess of males, 428,759. Total population, according to the recent census, 38,558,371. The census of 1860 showed an excess of males of 727,667. The falling off of the male population is probably owing to the losses by the war of the rebellion. Consumption of Food.—An instructive article in a German newspaper makes known, by carefully selected statistics, the increase that has taken place of late years in most Europeon countries in the consumption of food and drink which our grandfathers regarded as luxuries.

In Prussia, the yearly consumption of meat per head had advanced from 33 pounds in 1806 to 40 pounds in 1849; brandy had grown from 3 quarts to 8, and wine from ½ quart to 2 quarts. The increase in sugar, again, was from 1½ pounds to 7 pounds, and in coffee from ½ pound to 4 pounds. These figures do not bring us to the latest times, but the increase has been even in a greater ratio during the year since 1849.

Age does not impair Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Purgative Pellets, or Tasteless, Coated, Concentrated Root and Herbal Juice, Anti-Bilious Granules. Their coating and being inclosed in glass vials preserve their virtues unimpaired for any length of time in any climate, so that they are always fresh and reliable, which is not the case with the pills put up in cheap wood or pasteboard boxes. Recollect that for all diseases where a Laxative, Alterative or Purgative is indicated, these little Pellets will give the most perfect satisfaction to all who use them. They are sold by all enterprising Druggists at 25 cents. 635

Dr. A. Johnson, one of the most successful practitioners of his time, invented what is now called Johnson's Anodyne Liniment. The great success of this article in the cure of Bronchitis and all diseases of throat and lungs, will make the name of Johnson not less favorably, if less widely, known than that of Louis Napoleon.—[Com.

A poor family in Pittsburgh lately bought five camel's hair shawls at $3,000 apiece.

The Purest and Sweetest Cod-Liver Oil is Hazard & Caswell's, made on the sea shore, from fresh, selected livers, of the Cod only, by Caswell, Hazard & Co., New York. It is absolutely pure and sweet. Patients who have once taken it prefer it to all others. Physicians have decided it superior to all other oils in market.—[Com.

A Cough, Cold, or Sore Throat requires immediate attention, as neglect oftentimes results in some incurable Lung Disease. "Brown's Bronchial Troches" will almost invariably give relief.—[Com.

Orders have been received from Germany for Elmwood Collars. We should not wonder if the Emperor William wore them, they are so nice.—[Com.

The public are hereby assured through the columns of this paper that Parsons' Purgative Pills contain no injurious principle, but that they may be administered to children and the most weak and shattered constitutions in small doses, with great certainty of success.—[Com.

Prussing's White Wine Vinegar keeps pickles. Ask for it.—[Com.

Never Too Late to Mend.

When the stomach is in a state of chronic rebellion against every kind of food, and the attending physician with solemn and portentous gravity declares that such cases of confirmed dyspepsia defy all remedies, do not put faith in his ipse dixit. Indigestion of this obstinate character may be incurable by his prescriptions, but it is not therefore an irremovable fixture in the system. The fact is that the great vegetable invigorant and corrective, Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, is radically curing cases of this seemingly desperate nature every day. Indeed it is in those malignant phases of dyspepsia which no ordinary medicine can control that its remedial properties are most wonderfully manifested. We say to the long-suffering martyr, whose stomach is a source of perpetual torment to him, that by the persistent and daily use of this glorious tonic, he can not only restore the digestive organs to their full vigor, but can keep them in good working order through life. If there is constipation, the gentle aperient operation of the Bitters will remove all obstructions and keep the bowels in a regular and healthy condition. The grand characteristic of this vitalizing and purifying vegetable preparation is that it acts beneficially upon every organ, controlling the liver, reinforcing the nerves, toning the coats of the stomach, promoting a healthy habit of body, relieving the blood of all impurities, clearing the brain and reviving the spirits.

Best and Oldest Family Medicine.—Sanford's Liver Invigorator—a purely Vegetable Cathartic and Tonic—for Dyspepsia, Constipation, Debility, Sick Headache, Billious Attacks, and all derangements of Liver, Stomach and Bowels. Ask your Druggist for it. Beware of imitations.

It is Altogether Wrong to trifle with a Bad Cough or Cold, when the risk is so great and a remedy so sure, prompt and thorough as Dr. Jayne's Expectorant can be readily found.

If you have Chills and Fever, or any form of Fever and Ague, take Shallenberger's Antidote and save a doctor's bill. Every druggist has it.

Are you a mechanic, and do you eat the bread of honest industry? Do you go cheerfully in the morning to your labor and return at night to a bright fireside? And are you saving money and investing it carefully each year against some possible day of need? Very well. This is all right. But you can save a large sum at once by taking a policy of insurance on your life. By so doing you protect your family now. Think of it, and as you certainly want the best, apply to an agent of the New York Life Insurance Company for particulars, or send your address to the head office, 346 and 348 Broadway, New York.—[Com.

The Auburn Courier

Thursday, April 24th, 1873

The magnificent tunnel under the city of Baltimore, at a cost of two millions, will be completed in two months. The northern and southern trains will then pass unbroken and unseen through the heart of the city.

A dispatch from Rome says that the Pope celebrated Mass in his private chapel yesterday, and received the deputation which brought the usual installment of Peter's Pence.—Some of the dispatches says that the Pope is dead. Take your choice.

William B. Astor has presented to Trinity Church, New York, two golden candlesticks, each nine feet long. He thinks they will materially assist him in the perilous journey which Scriptures have compared to the trip of a camel through the eye of a needle; and, according to the Astorian theory, the longer the candlesticks are the brighter will be the light they shed on that uncomfortable aperture.

A dispatch from New York says that Vice-President Wilson remarked yesterday that peace with Modoc Indians was entirely out of the question, and that they should be exterminated at any cost. It is understood in private circles here that Captain Jack's recent indiscretion was caused through the personal solictation of his wife. It will be observed, however, that he has manhood enough to shoulder the entire responsibility himself.

Died, in Washington recently, a little orphan boy, named Civil Service Reform, who was apprentice to the President last fall, just before the election. The President unfortunately put him to bed the other night, to sleep between Casey and Fred Grant, who overlaid him, and the miserable wretch was smothered to death. Friends of the deceased will attend the funeral without further notice. Services by the Rev. Dr. Newman, Inspector of Consulates.—Louisville Courier Journal.

The Attorney General of the State Mr. J C. Denny, has commenced suit against John C. Shoemaker, late Auditor of State, for the recovery of $200,000, being the amount of interest alleged to have been recived by him while Auditor, upon the Sinking Fund. This is right, and we hope the Attorney General will have better success than we did when we joined in a letter calling upon Mr. Shoemaker to tell the people of the State what he had done with the money. In justice, all the interest which accrued on the Sinking Fund belongs to the people of the State, and we hope John C. Shoemaker will be made to disgorge every cent of it.—Argus.

Senator Morrill of Vermont handed his share of the back-pay robbery over to the Treasurer of the State of Vermont, to be applied to the reduction of the State debt; Mr. Rosevelt of New York has given his share to the Commissioners of Education; Senator Fenton says he will not take his himself, but does not know what he shall do with it; other gentlemen have disposed of theirs in various ways. They all admit that it is stolen money, but think they have a right to place it where it will do the most good. The common sense of this subject, however, is that when stolen property comes into your hands, the proper disposition of it is to take it back to the rightful owner; and that in this case is the Treasury of the United States.

Printers' Fees.

To those editors who are inclined to censure the Legisture for legislating regarding printers' fees for legal advertising, we want to say that such censure is without cause. Under the new law the price allowed for publishing the delinquent tax list is fifty cents for each description and the publisher's regular advertising rates for the headings and footings. On averaged seizd lists that is a better price than obtained under the old law. In regard to other legal advertising, which is included in the act regulating fees of officers, all legal advertising rates are established as follows: For first insertion each square of 250 'ems' nonpareil, $ 1.25; each additional insertion per square, 75 cents. These rates, as established by law, are better than the rates of one-half the country papers of the State.—Anderson Herald.

An Unwise Provision.

In the divorce law recently passed the Legislature is a provision prohibiting divorced parties from marrying again for two years, which is in itself a nullity. When people are divorced they are entirely released from the marriage contract and there is no law to prevent them again entering the holy bonds. The object aimed at might have been accomplished by providing that the decree should not be granted for two years after the trial, as was suggested some time ago in these columns. The provision is unwise in fact that it cannot be enforced, as there is no penalty attached even if its constitutionality could be established.

Grant's Latest.

That noble scion of the house of Grant, Lieutenant Frederick, after graduating at the foot of his class, and engaging himself with Sherman in Europe, while his regiment was on duty in the west, has been raised to the rank of Lieutenant Colonel over the heads of hundreds of officers, his seniors and superiors. This unprecedented proceeding could not have been based upon his merits, for his standing shows that he learned very little of business while at West Point, and he has no favorable opportuity to improve himself in it since leaving. At best it is a direct insult to those officers better entitled to it than he, and a disgraceful exhibition of family favor and preferment.

Attention is called to the extract from the Chicago Inter-Ocean, which is intended by the editor of that sheet as a plaster to hide the rottenness of the Chief Magistate and cover up his guilt in connection with the salary steal.

Does any sane man suppose that had a bill been pass of that character, no matter what might have been attached to it by scheming rogues and black hearted villians to insure the signature of the President, that Gen. Jackson would have signed it while well aware its damnable intent in the main? Would any President that Americans ever seated in the Chair of State have signed a bill of that character except; Grant?

War of the Races in Louisiana!

The town of Colfax, in the Parish of Grant in Louisiana, was the scene of a bloody tragedy, growing out of the political complications, on Sunday last. The parish officers of the Kellogg stripe having neglected to qualify, the McEmery officers undertook to fill their places. This was resisted by the negroes, and a few whites, and the result was a bloody riot in which 100 negroes were reported killed, and one white man. It is difficult to say which party was most at fault, but this much is certain, that the United States Senate had it in its power to settle all the trouble in that devoted State, and that it neglected to do so, and is therefore responsible for all the bloody consequences.

The ignorant negroes, led by a band of ruffiains, are the unfortunate victims, and always suffer in such a contest.—Their cowardly leaders kept out of the way of danger, but there was no retreat for the blacks.

The situation at New Orleans and throughout the State is almost deplorable. Business is at a stand—anarchy and confusion prevail—life is unsafe—riot and bloodshed everywhere—a government is fraudulently forced upon an unwilling people, who not only spurn it, but hold it in defiance, and are resolved to resist unto blood.

'Let us have peace.'

An Ohio woman who claimed $5,000 damages from a barkeeper who sold liquor to her husband, has obtained a verdict of 10 cents, which, says the home paper, the said husband resents as equivalent to an insinuation that he is good for nothing.

Caught. The latest mail thief arrested was a night clerk in the Boston P. O., who for five months had been regularly stealing money letters belonging to the well-known and reliable firm of Hunter & Co., Hinsdale, N. H. Hunter & Co. lost many thousands; the thief is caught and jailed, and the 'Star Spangled Banner' still waves.

The Warsaw Union of last week says, our District exchanges have been announcing Billy Williams' arrival here, for the last three weeks. The enthusiasm to ovate this gentleman on his return to his beloved constituency, is gradually subsiding and we fear unless he returns soon, he will have a slim testimony of their affection when he again sets his foot on our sacred soil.

A young man from the country, the other day, slightly bedabbled with mother earth made a grand entry into town. He was trying to discover the exact distance from the back of a horse to the ground by a circuitous route—over his head. It is unnessary to add that the result was eminently satisfactory. But you can't get him to do it again, not for Joe.

A few months ago, it was a difficult matter to get a good barber in this place, and now we have three all doing comparatively a good business. The last one, Mr. Manerhan, located at Joe Link's on Seventh-st, is said to be first-class in every respect, and we know Billy to be as good as any other that ever drew a razer across a jugular.

Jackson township is suffering a terrible infliction at present. About 30 colored men are within her sacred soil and there is not that easy harmony as of yore. We can assure our friends that Sambo means business and is perfectly harmless.

Oh, what will the people do
When the war breaks the country up
And scatters the niggers all around.
[Old song]

The most extensive china and crockery store, in Fort Wayne is that of H. N. Ward's, where the big cast iron dog stands before the door. His complete stock of Glassware, Crockery, and Queensware would surprise you and is quite a scene to look upon. But his prices are still more surprising being far below any other house in the city. Mr. Ward is courteous and agreeable to all visitors whether they are purchasers or not as a visit to his mammoth store will convince you.

We saw a new post-hole digger tried on our street the other day, and from the way it operated, we are certainly justified in saying that it is the best yet invented. It is thrust into the ground by the hand and brings the dirt out with it every time. In our soil here it will work to a charm. For sale at Jno. L. Davis' Hardware Store, where you will find a large assortment of Iron Glass, Nails, Paint, plows and everything else kept in a first-class Hardware Store.

The Laporte Herald says in regard to the Editorial excursion to Duluth in June that the arrangements are fully completed with the steamboat line and the railroad companies. None but edithors or publishers and their wives, will accompany the party, and it is very desirable—in order to make it pleasant and agreeable—that no gentleman go without a lady. In due time circulars will be sent out giving all the necessary information in regard to it.

The Messenger, at Valparaiso, goes for condemnation to all connected with the salary steal. It says, the Patrons of Husbandry of the "Prairies of Jasper County send greeting to the everglades and orange groves of Florida" requesting Gen. Packard to resign his seat in Congress for voting the salary swindle bill. Why this persecution of Mr. Packard? Is he more deserving of censure than the President who approved it? Without Grant's approval the bill could never have become a law. Why is Grant indorsed and Packard asked to resign? This is not "equal and exact justice."

WOOLLY.—We have heard of a woolly horse, but never seen anything of this peculiarity among cattle until last Monday night, at the residence of Dr. Chamberlain, in Waterloo. He exhibited to us a calf four days old that was actually covered with a complete and exact fleece of wool identical with that of a block lamb, for that was the color. Here and there over the body were white spots but these were hair and extended in every instance from ½ to an inch beyond the wool.—Whether it will grow up this way our connoisems have not yet determined, but Charlie G. swears there's been a nigger in the woodpile.

THE FIRE WAIF.—We had the pleasure of witnessing the performance of Little Nell the California Diamond, last Tuesday every at Fort Wayne in the popular drama of "Fidelia, the Fire Waif." Every the great Lotta, in her new and charming acts, did not please us better than this versatile and sprightly young actress. It did not take her long to establish herself in the good opinion of all present, and long and frequent was the applause. She was most excellently supported by Mr. France as the Fire Boy, and Mr. Becket, in his celebrated old man character. Mr. Covert, the wide-a-wake agent is just the man to represent a company like this.

LIGONIER.—Through a press of business last week we forget to mention a visit to the enterprising and rapidly advancing town of Ligonier in the county adjoining us on the west. Should it get the Canada Southern, and great hopes are entertained that such will be the case, there will not be a place in the northern part of the State, that will surpass it as a business point with the same number of rail roads. We were gratified to find the Banner office a handsome edifice built in a handsome and substantial manner, from which is now issued weekly the above paper—price two dollers in advance. Tho' our friend Stoll did not succeed last fall politically he is meeting with that result at his home, and no doubt his numerous friends at Ligonier, are to some extent consoled by this fact. The fraternity were invited to a supper at the Commercial Hotel under the management of B. Barnhart, a gentleman who understands his business and knows how to treat his guests.

SEDAN BREVITIES.

Sedan has a "choir."

The services of Miss Addie Derry, of Lisbon, has been secured to teach the Sedan School. Miss Derry comes well recommended and will doubtless teach a good school.

The spring style of bonnets worn in this community, are certainly superb.—The ladies are showing increased excellence in taste, and they are to be commended. The latest bonnet is a trifle higher than freights are on our Railroads, and as graceful in proportion.

The Independent Order of Odd Fellows of Northern Indiana and Southern Michigan will have a grand anniversary celebration at Laporte on the 25th inst. Past Grand Sire, J. B. Nicholson, was expected to deliver the address, but owing to sickness will not be able to be present.—Grand Secretary, Foster, will, therefore, make the address of the occasion.

The Argus of that place says, the choir for the Odd Fellow's celebration will be composed as follows: Mrs. Hamilton, Mrs. Forney, Miss Butler, Soprani; Mrs. Weller, Miss Fox, Alti; Messrs. Magill and Edwards, Tenori; Messrs. Fox and Forney, Bassi.

The curse of intemperance has bereft another family in a neighboring town of a father and husband. The victim, this time, is a man of prominence and ability,—Col. E. J. Wood, of Goshen, who killed himself with a pistol shot at the Hibbard House, Jackson, Michigan, on Wednesday of last week. He was en route to Bay City, and stopping over at Jackson, was kindly cared for at the above named hotel upon the discovery that he labored under deep depression from the effects of intoxication. While in a fit of mania potu, and during the absence of his attendant, the Colonel committed the fatal deed. His remains were buried at Goshen, last Saturday, by the Masonic Fraternity.—Ligonier Banner.

B. P. & C. RAILWAY.—A Columbus dispatch to the Cincinnati Gazette of the 8th says, The annual meeting of the stockholders of the Baltimore, Pittsburg & Chicago Railway Company, Ohio Division was held at the office of the company yesterday. The following persons were elect Directors for the ensuing year—namely: Geo. R. Denis, W. C. Holgate, and A. D. Smith. The Board immediately organized by the election of W. C. Quincy, President, and Wm. Wing Secretary and Treasurer. It is intended to push the construction of the line in Ohio to the utmost extent, so as to commence track-laying of the line has already been commenced on the Indiana Division, and will progress as rapidly as practicable.

"Don't slam the door," said a Sunday School Superintendent to his School last Sunday. It is very appropriate to teach politeness in Sabbath Schools Christianity without civility is a sad deformity, and yet there is much necessity of instruction and caution about such an apparent civility as the closing of the doors at church with as little noise as possible. More practice at home in that line would probably obviate the necessity of any public instruction in the matter.

Take a spoonful every hour. Either disease will disappear in twelve hours. For a child smaller doses according to their age. It is perfectly harmless when taken by a well person.

NEWS SUMMARY.

The East.

The insurance on Horace Greeley's life, $100,000, has been collected. This policy is the largest paid in the last decade....The strike of the New York gas men has proved a failure....John Hanley, the youthful hero of the Atlantic disaster, visited the New York Stock Exchange the other day, and received $233.

While the English detectives now in New York, engaged in the Bank of England forgery case, were seeing the city the other night, one of them was robbed of his watch and pocket-book and papers for the extradition of Bidwell, of Havana. The papers were returned. ....The Goodrich murder in Brooklyn, still remains a profound mystery, and it is believed the author of the crime will never be discovered.

Two cotton mills belonging to the Dwight Manufacturing Company, at Chicopee, Mass., have been destroyed by fire. Loss, upward of a million dollars....The Government has brought suit against Oakes Ames for $300,000, said to be due on an old cotton transaction during the war.

The pews in Dr. Hepworth's new church, in New York, rent for $250,000 a year.... Senator Morrill has given his back pay to Vermont, to be applied to the reduction of the State debt.

The advertising agents of the country were in session in New York last week. Sixty persons were present from various parts of the country. S. M. Pettengill was chosen President.

The West.

The Kiowa, Cheyenne, and Arapahoe Indians are preparing for war, and the forts in Western Kansas, and south of that section, are being reinforced....Charles Sanguinet, the oldest native inhabitant of St. Louis, has just died. He was born in that city in 1781....A bill is before the Illinois Legislature appropriating $50,000 to finish the partially completed monument to Stephen A. Douglas, in Chicago.

At Chicago, last week, Antonio Alders killed his brother by stabbing him with a pocket-knife. As usual, liquor was the incentive to the unnatural crime....The Modocs tried to induce Gen. Canby to let them stay in the lava-bed, but, as he says in his dispatch to Gen. Sherman, this meant license to plunder and a stronghold to retreat to, and was refused. They ask now that they be permitted to pick out a place for themselves. If they would do this in good faith, all trouble would be over, but Gen. Canby fears they are insincere in this as in their former proposals. Jesse Applegate, late one of the Indian Peace Commissioners, authorizes the statement that the band of Modocs numbers just fifty-three Indians.

A fire in Detroit, last week, destroyed the offices of the Detroit Tribune, Commercial Advertiser, Michigan Farmer, and Calvert Lithographing Company. Total loss about $125,000.

Chicago has made another move in the interest of law and order. Her Common Council has decided, by a vote of two to one, that liquor saloons must be closed at half-past eleven o'clock at night....A party of four Nebraska drovers were recently robbed in a Chicago hotel of money and papers valued at $10,700.

The remains of Gen. Canby will be interred at Indianapolis, beside his father and mother....A serious riot recently occurred at Knightsville, Ind., between striking white miners and colored miners imported from Virginia.

A dispatch from Col. Gillem, commanding the forces operating against the Modocs, announces the death of Lieut. Sherwood. Meacham is out of danger. Col. Gillem says he will use every endeavor to prevent the escape of the Modocs if possible, and not an Indian shall be left to boast of having murdered Gen. Canby. The Snake and Pitt River Indians are still quiet, but watching the contest with great interest. The funeral ceremonies, on the 12th of April, over Gen. Canby and Commissioner Thomas, in the camp, were very impressive. The troops were drawn up and received the remains in the customary manner, with salutes and muffled drums.

The South.

In Henry county, Ky., a few days ago, a band of masked men called Richard Williams, a farmer, to his door, and commenced shooting at him. Williams returned the fire, killing one and wounding three of the scoundrels.... A man named Vaughn has been arrested at Memphis on the charge of having murdered Gen. Thomas C. Hindman, at Helena, Ark., some six years ago. It is said he has confessed to the deed....A graveyard on the Arkansas river, 20 miles below Little Rock, recently caved into the river, and upward of 1,000 bodies were washed away.

Dr. Craig and Judge Pullem, of Atlanta, Ga., put aconite in their drinks, instead of elixir of orange. The former died in great agony. Pullem still lives, but with little hopes of recovery....The Memphis and Little Rock railroad has been seriously damaged by the Mississippi overflow....It is stated that the Kellogg State Government in Louisiana intend applying to the Federal authorities for troops to preserve order in that State.

Washington.

An appeal has been made by some of the friends of the Washington Monument Association to the members of Congress who do not want to take their extra salary grab, to turn over the amount to the completion of the monument. The total amount of the grab is $1,250,000, which, it is said, will finish the monument....The frantic appeals of the New York Herald to the President and State Department to demand of the Spanish authorities the release of O'Kelley, their Cuban correspondent, are unheeded, and are likely to continue unnoticed. A representative of the Herald who called on the Secretary of State, the other day, was inquired of if he knew any way by which the Spaniards could catch a few more Herald correspondents....William L. Scruggs, of Georgia, has been appointed Minister Resident to the United States of Colombia.

Secretary of Interior Delano believes that, notwithstanding the Modoc massacre, the peace policy towards the Indians will be continued....Gen. Jefferson C. Davis has been directed to assume the command made vacant by the death of Gen. Canby.....The following is the dispatch sent by Gen. Sherman to Gen. Gillem, commanding the troops operating against the Modocs: "Your dispatch announcing the terrible loss to the country of Gen. Canby by the perfidy of the Modoc band of Indians has been shown to the President, who authorizes me to instruct you to make the attack so strong and persistent that their fate may be commensurate with their crime. You will be fully justified in their utter extermination."....The President has issued an order discontinuing the land offices at Council Bluffs and Fort Dodge, Iowa, and the land districts of the same names and transferring their archives and business to the Des Moines district.

From fifteen to twenty-five tons of free matter leave the Washington Postoffice for the States daily....George H. Stuart, of the Board of Peace Commissioners, says that the murderers of Gen. Canby and his party will be properly punished, but that the act of Capt. Jack will not alter the policy of the Board.

The Postoffice Department announces that it will commence issuing the postal cards on the 1st of May next....The President has appointed Dorman B. Eaton, of New York, and Hon. Samuel Shellabarger, of Ohio, to fill the vacancies in the Civil Service Commission caused by the resignation of Messrs. Medill and Curtis....A Washington dispatch says: A military officer of high rank says that the popular expectation in regard to the speedy annihilation of the Modocs would of necessity be disappointed, and that he would not be surprised if it took several weeks to make a finish of them. He says that the cry of "On to the lava beds" reminds him of the cry of "On to Richmond," raised at the beginning of the late civil war. The lava beds are almost impregnable, and it would be the height of rashness and folly to send men for them to be shot down by the savages lurking in the caves and fissures.

Foreign.

Developments made in the Bank of England forgery case conclusively establish the fact that the forgeries were committed by Austin Bidwell, George McDonnell, George Bidwell, and Noyes, the alleged clerk of the parties. The two latter are now in Newgate, awaiting trial....Great distress for want of food is reported in the islands on the Irish coast off Galway....A desperate fight is reported in Olonne, France, in the department of Stendee, between two companies of strolling actors. Nine were killed and several injured....Paris letters say that of the 20,000,000 francs subscribed in France for the construction of the imaginary "Memphis and El Paso railroad," 18,500,000 francs were pocketed by those who were engineering the scheme....The Captain-General of Cuba has ordered O'Kelley, the Herald correspondent, to be sent to Santiago for trial.

The Carlists have been repulsed from Puigcerda, leaving 300 dead and wounded on the field The Republican loss was smalll.....France has just paid to Germany an additional fifty millions francs on account of the war indemnity. ....A building in Rome was recently destroyed by lightning, and 40 persons buried in the ruins, 5 of whom were killed and 17 wounded. ....Turkey is about to negotiate a loan of $250,000,000, the larger portion of which will be devoted to the construction of new railways....Three International leaders have been tried at Copenhagen and sentenced to terms of six, five and four years' imprisonment respectively.....Those provisions of the Treaty of Washington which concerned Newfoundland have been accepted by the Legislature of that province.....A revolution has overturned the Government of Panama, in Central America, imprisoned its President, and gained control of all the departments, without the loss of a life. ....Pope Pio Nono is really very ill. His health has been fluctuating some time, and he was recently thought to be recovering, but his trouble has now taken a bad turn. He is very old, and, like President Thiers, his position is such that his death would create a commotion altogether disproportionate to anything he has done during life.

Bidwell, one of the Bank of England forgers, under arrest at Havana, has escaped. ....A dispatch from Rome dated the 13th says: "The Pope, after suffering many hours of great pain, is now in a lethargic state. His physicians have forbidden the issue of bulletins, and the clerical papers have been ordered to abstain from making reports. It is feared the recovery of the Pope is impossible. It is believed that his death will be kept secret until the conclave has elected a successor, to avoid the interference of Germany and Italy. All the Cardinals save two are now at the Vatican. There are 400 Papal troops inside, and orders have been given to allow no one to enter."

O'Kelly, the Herald's Cuban correspondent, has been released from prison.

News having an important bearing on the future of the Khivan expedition has been received at St. Petersburgh. Internal dissensions have broken out in Khiva. The reigning Khan has executed his chief counselor, and imprisoned his uncle and other influential Khivans who were enemies of Russia. He has also released the Russians long held as prisoners in Khiva, and sent them to meet the detachment of the expedition which is advancing from Orenburg.

Advices from Madrid state that many Carlists are surrendering to the Government troops in the North, in the hope of amnesty. It is reported that the Duke of Seville, who joined the Carlists, was killed in a late engagement. The Government has received news of the crushing defeat of a Carlist force at San Lorenzo de la Muga, in Gerona....The reports that the Pope is in a critical condition are false. His physicians believe that his indisposition will last some time, but is not dangerous. The holy father's spirits are excellent.

THE WAR OF RACES.

A Desperate Battle Between Whites and Blacks in Grant Parish, La.

A New Orleans dispatch of the 15th says:

The steamboat Southwestern, which arrived at about 1:30 o'clock this evening, brings stirring and important news from Grant parish. The whites have retaken Colfax, and there is not a negro to be found for miles around. From passengers on the Southwestern we glean the following: The negroes had strongly intrenched themselves in the Court-House, and built breastworks three or four feet high. There were, it is said, about 400 men, armed and equipped thoroughly. On Sunday, at about 12 o'clock, about 150 white men, who had gathered from surrounding parishes, made an attack on the breastworks, and a brisk fight was kept up until somewhere near 3 o'clock. The breastworks were then stormed and captured, the negroes taking refuge in the Court-House, the doors of which were barricaded. After some further fighting the negroes threw out a flag of truce, and several detachments of men advanced on it, when they were fired on by the besieged party, wounding several, one of whom was Capt. Hodnot, who was shot in the bowels, and, it is feared, fatally wounded.

They retreated on the outside of the breastworks, and as the only means of dislodging the negroes, the Court-House was set on fire, and they were shot as they came from the burning building. It is reported that between 80 and 100 negroes were killed, and there were none to be found for miles around.

The Captain of the steamboat Southwestern makes the following statement: "We arrived at Colfax on Sunday evening, about 3 o'clock, and found that the white people and sheriff's posse at their head had captured the town, after having had a conflict with the negroes. It was reported to me that about 100 negroes had been killed and many others wounded. [illegible] around on the banks dead. One white man was reported killed, whose name I did not learn, and two very seriously wounded—Messrs. Hodnot and Harris."

"Mr. Hodnot was shot through the bowels, and it is supposed he is mortally wounded. We brought Messrs. Harris and Hodnot down from Colfax to Alexandria. Three or four other white men are slightly wounded. About 100 negroes escaped, but it was reported the whites were still pursuing them. All of the leaders of the riot escaped, especially the white men. The negroes barricaded themselves in the court-house, and the whites, finding there was no other mode of attack left them, fired the building. The whites numbered in the neighborhood of 150 men. The fight lasted from about 12 m. until near 5 p. m. The whites are now in possession of Colfax, and when I left late last Sunday night, everything was very quiet."

A FEARFUL EARTHQUAKE.

The City of Salvador Entirely Destroyed.

The city of Salvador, in Central America, has been destroyed by an earthquake. Eight hundred persons perished, and $12,000,000 worth of property was destroyed. The earthquake was followed by a conflagration, and many buildings were burned. The following are the particulars of this terrible calamity, as telegraphed from Havana: For a few days light shocks of earthquake had occurred, but no serious apprehensions were entertained. It was on the afternoon of the 4th of March, about half-past 4 o'clock, and almost without warning, that a great part of the city was reduced to little more than ruins. The ground heaved like a ship in a gale, a terrific thundering burst from under-foot; walls were shattered and rent in many places with wide crevices, and roofs sank, and tiles, etc., were precipitated to the ground. Lamps, pitchers, basins, glass, etc., were overturned and broken. Three violent shocks followed in succession, and the servants commenced to scream piteously and could not be pacified. Wild birds flew to the houses; horses grew frantic in stables, and dogs, howling, slunk away for protection. Every few minutes shakings of less violence occurred. The scene beggars description. Ruined houses, panic-stricken people, men, women, and children, fleeing to the fields with valuables, hastily collected by them; the ringing of the alarm-bells and the beating of drums calling all the soldiers under arms, for in San Salvador murder and pillage accompany the confusion of great earthquakes, and as the frightened citizens leave the town, dusky Indians from the forest prowl for prey into it, only checked by the bayonets of the Government troops. These were posted in squads at short distances all over San Salvador.

THE MODOC BUTCHERY.

The Murder of Gen. Canby and Two Peace Commissioners by Cap. Jack and his Band.

A dispatch from the Lava Beds dated April 11 gives the following particulars of the massacre of Gen. Canby, Dr. Thomas and Mr. Meacham by the treacherous Modocs: On yesterday afternoon five Indians and four squaws came into our camp and were made presents of clothing and provisions by the commission, and a message was sent out by the commission asking for a talk this morning, at a point about a mile from our picket line. Later in the evening Bogus Charley came in, and told the picket that he could take his gun; that he (Charley) did not intend to go back any more. The picket brought him in and took him to the tent of Gen. Canby, where Charley left his gun and remained at the tent of Frank Riddle during the night. This morning Boston Charley came in, and told the commission that Capt. Jack and five other Indians would meet the commissioners outside our lines.

Boston and Bogus then mounted a horse, and started for the lava bed. About an hour after their departure Gen. Canby, Dr. Thomas, Mr. A. B. Meacham and Mr. Dyer, with Frank Riddle and his squaw for interpreters, started for the place appointed. The party arrived at the appointed place, and were closely watched by the signal officer, Lieut. Adams, from the signal station on the hill overlooking our camp. About half an hour after the party had arrived, a cry from the signal station was heard, saying that the Indians had attacked the Peace Commissioners and that an engagement had commenced between the Indians and Col. Mason. In a moment the troops were under arms, and deployed as skirmishers under command of Col. Green, and orders were given to forward double-quick.

Very shortly after Mr. Dyer returned, and told us that the Indians had attacked them, and that he thought that he was the only one who had escaped, but in a few moments after Riddle and his squaw were seen within the picket line. From him we gather the following account of how the massacre commenced: Meacham made a short speech to the Indians, followed by Gen. Canby, and then Dr. Thomas. Then Capt. Jack made a speech, asking for Hot Creek and Cottonwood, the places now occupied by Fairchild and Dorris, for a reservation. Mr. Meacham told Jack that it was not possible to give him what he asked.

Schonchin told Meacham to say no more; that he (Meacham) had said enough upon that subject; and while Schonchin was speaking, Capt. Jack got up and walked behind the others, and turned back and exclaimed "All ready," drew his pistol, and snapped a cap at Gen. Canby, cocked his pistol again, and fired. Gen. Canby fell dead, shot under the right eye. Schonchin then shot Meacham in the right shoulder and head, but he is still alive. Boston Charley and other Indians shot and killed Dr. Thomas. Hookey Jim chased Dyer for some distance, but Dyer turned upon him with his pistol in hand, and Jim ran. An Indian knocked down Riddle's squaw and took her horse, but Capt. Jack made him return it, and then another Indian chased Riddle and shot at him.

THE FEELING IN WASHINGTON.

A Washington dispatch of the 18th says:

The feeling of indignation against the Modoc murderers, as attested by conversation with all the leading officials in Washington, reaches a degree of intensity which no Indian treachery has ever heretofore created. Every member of the Cabinet here has alluded to the necessities which the outrage have precipitated, and it can be said that there is no difference of opinion whatever as to the policy that should now be pursued toward this particular band of Indians.

The feelings of the President and Gen. Sherman at the sudden announcement were of the most intense sorrow and indignation, and there was not a moment's hesitancy in the declaration that the Modocs shall be made to suffer to the severest extent for their crime. It is now evident that the act was long premeditated, and this fact adds to the deep sense of wrath that the massacre has aroused. The President has unreservedly expressed his sanction of the severest measures now necessary to properly punish the Modocs, and his views in this respect have been fully stated to the authorities acting under the War Department. Gen. Sherman has also telegraphed Gen. Schofield instructions to move the entire force at once upon the Indians.

Mr. Medill's Resignation.

The following correspondence has been published:

MAYOR'S OFFICE, CHICAGO, April 1.

To His Excellency U. S. Grant, President of the United States:

DEAR SIR: An Executive order was promulgated on the 17th of January, 1873, against the holding of State or municipal offices by Federal appointees after the 4th of March, 1873. Under this order it would be illegal for me to continue to hold the office of Commissioner of the Civil Service Board unless I resign the Mayorality of Chicago. Not feeling that it wold be expedient to do the latter at present, I therefore tender my resignation of the appointment from you of Civil Service Commissioner, and I hereby tender my thanks for the confidence you reposed in me in making such appointment. I also trust that the rules prepared by the Board and accepted by and adopted by you will not be abandoned, ignored or neglected of enforcement, believing, as I do, that the appointment will tend to improve and elevate the civil service, and that they are indorsed by the great mass of the American people.

Very respectfully yours,

EXECUTIVE MANSION, WASHINGTON, D. C., April 8, 1873.

DEAR SIR: Upon my return to Washington I find your letter of the 1st inst. resigning the position of Commissioner of the Civil Service Board, on account of your inability to hold that position together with your responsible office of Mayor of Chicago. I appreciate your reason while I regret that the Board will lose your valuable services, and in accepting your resignation I beg to thank you for your earnest labors in the cause of civil service reform, and to assure you that the spirit of the rules adopted will be maintained.

Very respectfully yours,
U. S. GRANT.

To Hon. Joseph Medill, Chicago, Ill.

The work of removing the Red river raft is progressing under Lieut. Woodruff, being effected by sawing out the logs and floating them off down the river. About six miles of the raft has already been cleared up. This will left $200,000 to found a university to be named after Mr. Browne. The heirs of the testator agree to give $100,000 to endow the Cincinnati University. The Palace Stock Car Company is making arrangements by which cattle can be shipped to the East from Texas without change of cars, and can be fed and watered by the way, and will have plenty of room in which to sleep comfortably.

During the war a large number of slaves were enlisted in the army from Maryland and Kentucky, from Virginia and other States penetrated by the armies of the Government. Heretofore under the bounty and pension laws no provision had been made for such persons, but one of the very last acts passed by Congress before its recent adjournment placed them on the same footing as to bounties and pensions as all other enlisted men.

A very important provision of the new consolidated pension laws has just been brought to notice, and is one which, if literally construed, will take several millions out of the Treasury. It declares that the pension of widows shall be increased at the rate of $2 per month for each child under the age of 16 years of the husband on account of whose death the claim has been or shall be granted, the increase to date from July 5, 1866. This provision attracted no attention at the time of the passage of the bill.

Struck by a Whale.

While the schooner Watauga was running up the Gulf stream with a six or seven knot breeze, a sudden and heavy shock and jar was felt, and all supposed that the vessel had scudded into a sea with violence. The next moment a pair of whales were seen close alongside to leeward. One of them was frisky enough, and made off rapidly, but the other seemed loggy, moved with apparent difficulty, and presently disclosed a huge gash in his side, from which the blood was issuing and coloring the sea about. The Watauga passed on, and soon lost sight of the whale, when it was discovered that the false stem was torn off, her main stem split, and the wood ends started. The bobstay had, of course, parted, and the bowsprit was adrift. She was afterwards found to be leaking, and was with difficulty kept free until she made Point Peter, where temporary repairs were made to enable her to reach home. Upon her arrival at Washington she was repaired, and the damage found to exceed $700. Her stem bolts, of 1¼ inch iron, were bent down, evidently by the vessel's effort to rise clear of the whale.

If that fish survives, he will probably avoid further contact with crafts of every description, and inwardly chuckle over the last disaster to the Watauga.

The Salary Grab.

"The back pay was voted by 99 against 97. Of these ninety-nine forty-seven were furnished by the South out of a total of fifty-nine votes possessed by that section in the House, or nearly 80 per cent. Only four came from New England, and, as might have been expected from the later political history of that State, Massachusetts furnished every one of the four—Messrs. Ben Butler, Oakes Ames, Ginery Twichell, and N. P. Banks."—Nation.

This attempt to establish the superior morality and freedom from greed of New England over the Southern country is too thin. First, the facts upon which it is built are not facts. In the second place, with some exceptions, the delegates and Senators in the Forty-second Congress from the South were not properly representatives of the Southern people, but of the bayonet powers of the Executive and of usurping forces of Radical majorities in previous Congresses. And in the last place, the majority of the Southern Congressmen who voted for "back pay" were either negroes, or carpet-baggers from New England other places north of Mason and Dixon's line.

Of the twenty-two Senators in the Forty-second Congress who represented eleven reconstructed States only eleven were natives of the South at all, and only eight were born in the States for which they stood as Senators. Of the fifty-nine Representatives in Congress from these reconstructed States there were only twenty native to the States for which they sit in Congress; thirty-five in all were born south of Mason and Dixon's line. Of these thirty-five only twenty-six were Democrats, of whom one-half voted against "back pay." Of the remaining Representatives nine were from New England, giving that region thirteen votes, instead of four for back pay—nine for the highly moral State of Massachusetts. New York had seven Representatives among them and Pennsylvania four.

Known how the real Southern men, to the manor born, voted in Congress, it becomes demonstrable that, had all the Southern States been legitimately represented, Mr. Butler's little project for voting money into the pockets of himself and friends would have been ingloriously defeated. If, in addition to The World Almanac, the Nation had consulted the census-tables, it would have discovered some remarkable illustrations of how far this principle of vicarious representation has been carried by means of carpet-baggism. How the Radicals would howl if, New York being Democratic, she should send an Irish-born citizen to the Senate to repesent her great foreign-born population of over a million souls. How they did howl at Mr. Schurz last spring for a presumptuous foreigner daring to have an opinion of his own when he represented only 222,267 souls in Missouri. Yet here is Alabama, with a total population of 996,992, of whom 744,058 are native to the State. She is entitled in both houses to eight representatives; but of these eight in the Forty-second Congress only two were natives of the State—only four of Southern birth. There are in Alabama only 370 natives of Massachusetts, all told, yet these have one Senator. There are 1,539 natives of New York in Alabama, yet these have one Senator and three Representatives in the Forty-second Congress. And it must be remembered that these carpet-baggers are a different people from the emigrants from other States who go West. These latter go to stay, and make their interests identical with the interests of the people amongst whom they have settled; whereas the carpet-baggers are merely sojourners in the land, who keep their loins girded and their staffs ready for the speediest departure possible after their purses have become plethoric enough.

Here, again, South Carolina, with a total population of 705,606, nearly all natives, is constrained to give one Senator and one Representative to the 325 citizens of Massachusetts who tarry on her soil. Or, here is Louisiana, with a populaiion native to her soil of 501,409, forced to content herself with a single Senator (and a scalawag at that); while Vermont, with 205 natives there, has one representative; Pensylvania, with 1,689, has two; New York, with 3,913, has one; and Massachusetts also one to take care of the interests of her 885 sojourners.

If, then, the representation of the South in the Forty-second Congress had faults of a conspicuous character, we are still debarred, by the circumstances of the constitution of that representation, from accusing the South as the cause of those faults. Whatever sort of persons the representatives of the South may be, they are mainly the creatures of Congress and the Executive, not the persons whom the South would have chosen to represent her had her choice been free. The "instructive features," therefore, to which the Nation would call our attention in the pretended analysis of the "back pay" vote are features without meaning, except as they indicate the follies of the reconstruction policy of Radicalism, and the dangers to which a Government (whose most vital principle is absolute representation of the actual people by representatives from their own midst and to them directly responsible) is exposed by the unrepublican expedients of an unscrupulous and factious majority to extend their lease of power and multiply their means of corruption. —New York World.

"When Rogues Fall Out," Et Cetera.

There is a feud in Grant's Senatorial body-guard, and it deepens daily in bitterness. It is led on one side by Morton, on the other side by Conkling; Conkling having the longest tail to his kite, but Morton having thus far rather the best of it in the actual contests. The secret spring, on both sides, is vaulting personal ambition; each of these Senators fancying in his heart that he has a chance to be Grant's successor. Morton's hopes are strengthened by the utter, irretrievable political ruin of Colfax, who, before his fall, was more generally popular in the Republican party than almost any other man in it. He would have been a formidable rival to Morton in his own State. As things look, Morton aspires to be the leading Western candidate, and the political weight of the West is every year increasing. The East will be divided between at least two candidates, Blaine and Conkling, and the division strengthens the hopes of Morton. Blaine bids fair to be backed by all New England; Conkling has no strength or popularity [illegible] political feeling of the West, since Colfax's disgrace, might readily concentrate upon Morton, if he could make it appear that he is not a partaker in Colfax's shame. Hence Morton has all along [illegible] himself forward as the champion and protagonist of official purity. Grotesque as it may seem, he has chosen his role, and he made his first appearance on the boards in this singular comedy as the scourger-in-chief of poor Caldwell, whom Conkling and Logan thereupon zealously defended. In this first encounter Morton won a substantial victory over Conkling and his "tail." Caldwell was forced into resigning, lest a worse fate might befall him, and Morton takes the credit of pushing him out of the Senate, in spite of the defensive intrenchments of Conkling, Logan and Carpenter.

In the next encounter Morton thought it prudent to be less active, as the subject touched the President (with whom he does not wish to break) in too tender a spot. It related to the confirmation of Brother-in-law Casey, which Morton merely discountenanced, while his Indiana colleague, Pratt, poured in hot shot. Brother-in-law Casey was saved, and Conkling may claim to have carried the day, having the strongest "tail" in the Senate. Conkling and his following scout, with jeering derision, Morton's new role of purity in elections. They say it was well for Morton that he gave them no opening in the Caldwell case, or they would have exposed him and his doings in carrying Indiana and re-electing himself to the Senate by bribery and corruption to which Caldwell's performances in Kansas were those of a corruptionist baby who had not cut his eye-teeth.

It is almost a pity that the session could not continue a week or two longer to keep the caldron boiling, slopping over its scalding filthy scum upon the Indiana champion of purity, and incensing the country with exposure of the astounding rascalities by which Morton secured his election.—New York World.

Look at the Record!

At the close of the last session of Congress at least five cases of corruption in the Senate, some of them of a flagrant character, remained to be disposed of. The guilty Senators were Harlan, Pomeroy, Patterson of New Hampshire, Caldwell, and Clayton.

What was done in regard to them by the last Senate? Harlan and Pomeroy were whitewashed, and Patterson, Caldwell and Clayton were sent over to the next Senate.

What has the new Senate done? Of course the old Senate well knew that the new Senate could not take jurisdiction in Patterson's case, because he would not be a member. Though a committee of the old Senate had unanimously recommended the expulsion of Patterson for the grave offenses of bribery and perjury, the Senate nevertheless, in order to shield him, resorted to the trick of allowing his case to be sent to their successors for final action, they all the time being aware that the tribunal to which they had turned it over had no power to act upon it. So Patterson was allowed to escape by means of this contemptible dodge.

In the last Senate Caldwell was proven to have obtained his seat by bribery. His case came up in the new Senate, he being a member of that body. After spending three weeks in delivering arguments and examining precedents to determine whether bribery was one of the "qualifications" for Senatorial honors specified in the Constitution, the Senate allowed Caldwell to resign, and go home to Kansas and try it again.

Clayton's case was in some respects worse than any of the others. To obtain his seat he had not only been guilty of corruption, but of stupendous frauds which struck at the very foundations of orderly government. The testimony was voluminous, and on the plea that they had not had time to examine it, Senators passed a resolution giving the culprit a certificate of good character, and let him go!

So much for the old members. Three new ones come in stained from head to foot. Patterson of South Carolina and Jones of Nevada are charged with having bought their way into the Senate, while Allison of Iowa was proven before the Poland Committee to have been as deeply involved in the Credit Mobilier corruptions as any other member of Congress. What does the new Senate propose to do with these three gentlemen? Nothing!

Such is the record made up by the Senate of the United States within one month in regard to these eight members! If Senators do not blush as they contemplate it, their constituents do.—New York Sun.

Curtis and the Civil Service.

Mr. Curtis has resigned his position on the Civil Service Board, because, as we said yesterday, "he regards several important appointments recently made as a virtual abandonment of the civil service reform." Our authority for this statement is Mr. Curtis himself, and we make it in precisely Mr. Curtis' own words. There is nothing in his recent illness, as the Times intimates, that could affect his his decision on this subject, either one way or the other, and nothing in his present state of health that could interfere with his duties on the Civil Service Board if he chose to remain there. He resigned his position soon after the recent federal appointments in this city simply and solely because he thought that in making these appointments, and others elsewhere, Gen. Grant had thrown civil service overboard, and that his (Mr. Curtis') usefulness as a member of that commission was at an end. Mr. Curtis' friends, while they must all regret the necessity of this resignation just so far forth as they feel an interest in civil service reform, will justify him in retiring from a position in which, if he remained, he would be held responsible for acts which are nothing more or less than a disregard of public pledges and a mockery of the public faith.—N. Y. Evening Post.

There are in London 218,822 children who are being efficiently educated in schools which satisfy the requirements of the School Board, [illegible] who are in inefficient schools, and [illegible] who are not receiving any education. There are 1,108 schools, good and bad.

FARM AND GARDEN.

Care and Manure of Lawns.

We are aware that it is a long old-time practice to dress the lawn in autumn with coarse manure, and so make the whole foreground of a gentleman's place the apparent receptacle of his stable yard for the winter; but, thanks to our American ideas of propriety, and our knowledge of assimilation of plant food, we now measurably ignore the dogmas of old country gardeners, and use specifics, i. e., just now we apply salt at the rate of four bushels to eight bushels per acre, bone meal in same quantity, and plaster one-fourth. The sooner these manurial agents, all except the plaster, are now applied, the better, unless it be upon a lay of land so sloping that the coming rains, with melting of snow and ice, will cause the commingling or detrition of the manures to wash away with the falling water. In such locations we should not apply our specifics as above named until the snow and ice are gone, but then we would make no delay. The application of the plaster, i. e., its sowing, should be just after the grass has made an inch or more of growth.—F. R. Elliott.

Points in Cattle.

An English breeder thus enumerates a few of the general points of excellence in cattle, whether black, polled, or short-horned. 1. A neatly formed head, clean muzzle, broad between the eyes, prominent, placid eyes, well set ears, and, if short-horned, a thick, flat horn, hanging downward, and a liver-colored nose. 2. The neck clean and tapering toward the head, and of ordinary length. 3. The chest deep and wide, with a full bosom, affording plenty of space for the vital organs to discharge their duties. 4. A broad, straight back, well arched ribs, strong in muscles above the knees, fine in the bone below the knee, plenty of flesh evenly laid on, a slick, mellow skin, with plenty of soft, downy hair, a well set-on tail, not too thick.—Northwestern Farmer.

Seedling Potatoes.

A correspondent of the Farmers' Journal writes: I have planted them in different places in drills and in jars, but the best results were in a pot which kept all the water, for the hot sun in May would prevent them from coming up, or kill the plants as soon as out of the ground, for they require water often, or very moist soil. I have had one pot filled full and running over in a shower, and soon afterwards turned off the water without injury to the plants. Soon as the plants are large enough, I transplant them in hills; the plants are very small when they first come out, resembling celery. I have raised, I think, over 150 varieties; the most of them were of no account. A good potato is very valuable, a poor one is not worth raising. I have some very good seedlings two years from the ball.

Spreading Manure.

We think it a wrong practice, when hauling out manure in the fall or winter, to place it in heaps. It is better to spread it at once. In the first place, labor is saved. But most important of all is the fact that much of the manure is wasted when placed in heaps. If spread at once, it is more equally divided than it can be afterwards. We once hauled out manure on to a field, leaving it in heaps until the hauling was completed. During this time showers fell. The land was sown to oats next spring, and on the spots where the heaps had been the grain lodged and was spoiled. The following crop was wheat, and on those spots the wheat rusted and yielded nothing; while the growth of straw was remarkable. We have never since repeated the practice.

How to Boil Corned Beef.

The rule has a Hibernian sound: don't boil it, for corned beef should never be boiled. It should only simmer, being placed on a part of the range or stove where this process may go on uninterruptedly from four to six hours, according to the size of the piece. If it is to be served cold, let the meat remain in the liquor until cold. Tough beef can be made tender by letting it remain in the liquor until the next day, and then bringing it to the boiling point just before serving.

Economy in Fattening Animals.

It has been proved by experiment that the more rapidly an animal is fattened the less quantity of food is necessary to sustain its mere vitality. Thus, an animal can be more cheaply fattened by consuming ten bushels of corn in two months than if four months were occupied in the process. Liberal and abundant feeding is the most economical, and a saving of time in producing the same result is a gain in the profit.

Pickles.

For mixed pickles, prepare any vegetables you like by cutting them in pieces, and let them lie in salt and water for two or three days; then make the pickle in the following manner: Boil the quantity of vinegar required with peppercorns, mustard-seed, a small quantity of mace, a few Cayenne pods and ginger, and half a pound of flour of mustard mixed smoothly in a basin, to be put in while boiling, put all together in a large stone jar.

Chapped Hands.

After washing the hands, it is a very good practice to dust them with powdered starch, rubbing them gently. This keeps them from chapping.

Charcoal or Earth for Hogs.

Hogs that are put up to fatten, as well as store hogs, should have some charcoal or earth given them occasionally. We have found it a good plan to dig a few sods from the fence-corners for them, which they will consume with much relish. In a state of nature, the hog, which roots for his living, must necessarily take into his stomach a large quantity of earth. It is advisable to allow him to do this when penned up.

Beverage of Figs and Apples.

Have two quarts of water boiling, split six figs, and cut two apples into six or eight slices each; boil the whole to-ing with a little boiled rice.

The Clerical Hero of the Atlantic.

When horrors such as the wreck of the Atlantic come before us, we can at times distinguish the highest attributes of manhood rising amid the gloom of death to make known the kinship of man to our ideals of the divine. The rock that shivers the stately ship, the vessel that breaks upon the rock, the water that swallows, the hurricane that tosses the waters are things material and insensible. Man alone, amid all "the horrid war of winds and waters raging," can stand out from the infernal surroundings with a gleam of the god-like on his brow. Sudden disasters, like revolutions, produce their heroes from unexpected sources. They are tossed up by the waves, as it were, and the world can admire, although it may not understand. That one of the heroes of the wreck of the Atlantic should prove to be an Episcopal clergyman, Mr. Ancient, ought not astonish any one; but because of the very fitness of the man's profession for his self-abnegation, his courage in a good cause, his devotion to the Master's doctrine of charity, many will find cause of wonder. That in the most gallant manner he risked his life a dozen times to save the lives of others; that he was first in the boat to rescue the last man from his slow agony in the frozen rigging, when the men used to the terrors of the deep shrunk back from the task, places him in the front rank of those rare heroes that the world can praise and admire without a single detracting breath. He was a clergyman, men may say, and self-sacrifice is the great rule under which he had registered his life; His Master, the Great Shepherd, not only risked but gave up His life for His flock. It would follow naturally from this that his heroism arose only from a sensitive appreciation of his duty to God, to himself, and to his fellow-man. The world, however, will rightly rate his heroism as something higher than mere bounden duty. Sorrowfully we have been made to feel that those from whom most was to be expected have often fallen shortest in performance. The Teacher preached His greatest sermons from Gethsemane and Calvary. The first showed how deeply He felt the bitterness of the cup before Him; the second how sublimely He drained it to the dregs. But teachers in His name are little looked to to-day for either the sensitiveness or the sacrifice. Vain show, soft pillows without a thorn, and softer, weaker ways have become so much the rule that a live, practical follower of Christ comes even from the ranks of the ministry as a surprise. The Rev. Mr. Ancient has merited this high praise, and we turn with hearty relief to his noble conduct at the wreck from contemplating in sorrow and anger the effeminate lives and the lisping prayers of so many of his clerical brethren.—New York Herald.

Precautions Against Fire.

The following notice has been issued by the Lords of the British Admiralty, and ordered to be hung up in engine-rooms, store-rooms and lower decks of her Majesty's ships:

Precautions against fire from spontaneous combustion: It has been ascertained by recent experiments that boiled oil, linseed oil and rape oils caused cotton waste to burst into flame, or to become a charred mass in the course of a few hours, when exposed in a box to a heat no greater than would be caused by the full absorption of the sun's rays on a summer's day, a condition easily attained by a mass of cotton waste lying in the vicinity of a steam-pipe or open fire, and in some cases the combustion has occurred in less than ten hours, except where mineral or sperm oil was used. Moreover, although it has been commonly supposed that the drying oils are more liable to spontaneous combustion than the non-drying oils, the results of experiments with olive and seal oils do not seem to confirm this notion. My Lords are, therefore, pleased to direct that the following be added to paragraph 81, page 343 of the Admiralty Instructions: 1. Particular care is to be taken never to allow cotton waste saturated with oils or grease to accumulate, but to have it destroyed immediately after it has been used. 2. All the oils and tallow on board are to be stowed in the iron tanks provided for the purpose, which should be placed as far from the boilers as possible, and the same precaution is to be taken with wipings, if practicable. 3. Metallic cans or stone jars of oil and turpentine should never be stowed in a warm place, as they are liable to have the corks forced out, or the can or jar burst by the great expansion caused by the heat.

Possible Return of the Jews to Egypt.

Even before the destruction of Jerusalem, the Jews, with their cosmopolitan instincts, were at home in Egypt. Alexandria at one time had an immense synagogue, which was regarded as a rival Temple. The Jews of the city seemed to imagine that Alexandria was a new Jerusalem. Its temple has been described as an edifice of stupendous proportions, with a service of majestic solemnity. Afterwards the position of the Jews, like the influence of the patriarch Joseph, declined in Egypt. There are now signs, however, of a revival of their importance. Except the Holy Land, Egypt is undoubtedly "the one land of all the lands of the earth" most intimately connected with their history, and it is possible she may yet play a great part in the future. According to the Jewish Chronicle, a fine new synagogue has been established in Alexandria, and it is believed that if the industrial enterprise of European countries meets adequate return, Egypt may yet be a home for Jewish immigrants, "to develop their talents and exercise their industry for greater work and with greater renown, and with greater freedom and profit, than did their enslaved ancestors in bygone days which have been enshrined in history."

In two years from this period there will be six colossal statues in the streets of Washington city—five of them equestrian—Washington, Jackson, Scott, Grant, Thomas and Farragut—besides out-of-door statues of Lincoln, Scott and Washington.

mentary strife, upon which I have not looked with a brow of daring. I have stood in front of battle when swords were gleaming and circling around me like fiery serpents of the air; I have sat on the mountain pinnacle, when the whirlwind was rending its oaks from rocky clefts and scattering them piece-meal to the clouds. I have seen those things with a swelling soul that recked not of danger, but there is something in the thunder's voice that makes me tremble like a child. I have tried to overcome this unmanly weakness; I have called pride to my aid, I have sought for moral courage in the lessons of philosophy, but they avail me nothing—at the first low moaning of the distant cloud my heart sinks and dies within me.

My involuntary dread of thunder has its origin in an incident that occurred when I was ten. I had a cousin, a girl, of the same age as myself, who had been the constant companion of my childhood. Strange, that after the lapse of a score of years, that countenance is so familiar to me. I can see the bright, young creature—her large eyes flashing like beautiful gems, her free locks streaming as in joy upon the rising gale, and her cheek glowing like a ruby through a wreath of transparent snow. Her voice had the melody and joyousness of a bird's, and when she bounded over wooded hill or the fresh green valley, shouting a glad answer to every voice of nature, and clasping her little hands in the very ecstacy of young existence, she looked as if breaking away like a freed nightingale from the earth, and going where all things were beautiful and happy, like her.

It was morning in the middle of August. She had been passing some days at my father's house, and was to return home. Her path lay across the fields, and I gladly became the companion of her walk. I never knew a summer morning more beautiful and still. Only one little cloud was visible, and that seemed as pure and white, and peaceful, as if it had been the incense from a burning censor of the skies. The leaves hung silent in the woods, the waters of the bay had forgotten their undulations, the flowers were bending their heads, as if dreaming of the rainbow, and the whole atmosphere was of such a soft and luxurious sweetness, that it seemed of roses scattered down by the hands of a Peri, from the far-off gardens of Paradise. The green earth and blue sea were abroad in their boundlessness, and the peaceful sky bent over them. The little creature at my side was in a delirium of happiness, and her clear, sweet voice came ringing upon the air as often as she heard the tones of a favorite bird, or found some strange and lovely flower in her frolic wanderings. The unbroken and almost supernatural tranquillity of the day continued until nearly noon. Then the indications of an approaching tempest were manifest. Over the summit of a mountain about a mile away, the folds of a dark cloud became suddenly visible, and at the same moment a hollow roar came down upon the winds, as if it were the sound of waves in a rocky cavern. The cloud unrolled like a banner-fold upon the air, but still the atmosphere was calm and the leaves as motionless as before; there was not even a quiver upon the sleeping waters to tell of the coming hurricane. To escape the tempest was impossible.

As the only resort, we fled to an oak, that stood at the foot of a tall, rugged precipice. Here we gazed almost breathless upon the clouds, marshaling themselves like giants in the sky. The thunder was not frequent, but every burst was so fearful that the young creature, who stood by me, shut her eyes convulsively, clung with a desperate strength to my arm, and shrieked as if her heart would break. A few minutes and the storm was upon us. During the height of its fury, the little girl lifted her finger toward the precipice that towered above us. I looked up, an amethystine flame was quivering upon its gray peaks, and the next moment the clouds opened, the rocks tottered to their foundation, a roar like the groan of a universe filled the air, and I felt myself blinded and thrown, I knew not whither. How long I remained insensible I cannot tell; but when consciousness returned the violence of the tempest was abating; the roar of the winds dying in the tree tops, and the deep tones of the thunder coming in fainter murmurs from the eastern hills.

I arose, and looked trembling and almost deliriously around. She was there—the idol of my infant love—stretched upon the wet green earth. After a moment of irresolution, I went up and looked upon her. The handkerchief upon her neck was slightly rent, and a single dark spot upon her bosom told where the path of death had been. At first I clasped her to my breast with a cry of agony, and then laid her down and gazed into her face, almost with a feeling of calmness. Her bright disheveled ringlets clustered around her brow, the look of terror had faded from her lips, and an infant smile was pictured beautifully there—the red rose tinge upon her cheeks was lovely as in life.

I have but a dim recollection of what followed—I only know that I remained weeping and motionless till the coming on of twilight, and that I was then taken tenderly by the hand and led away where I saw the countenance of parents and sisters.

Many years have gone by on their wings of light and shadow, but the scene I have portrayed still comes over me, at times, with a terrible distinctness. The oak yet stands at the base of the precipice; its limbs are black and dead, and its hollow trunk, looking upward to the sky as if calling to the clouds for a drink, is an emblem of noiseless decay. A year ago I visited that spot, and the thoughts of by-gone years came mournfully back to me—thoughts of the little innocent being who fell by the whirlwind—in the memory that she had gone where no lightnings slumber in the folds of the rainbow clouds, and where sunlit waters are never broken by the storm breath of Omnipotence.

My readers will understand why I shrink in terror from the thunder. Even the consciousness of security is no relief to me—my fear has assumed the nature of instinct, and seems, indeed, a part of my existence.—George D. Prentice.

Ambassador to the Pope.

It has been determined to throw the whole country open to foreigners, provided all who travel in the interior submit to be controlled by the laws of Japan. The Government is endeavoring to perfect a code of laws, based on the European models suitable to the country.

Stove-pipe hats and bicycles are the latest Western notions affected by progressive natives in Yokohama.

It is designed by the Government to hold an Universal Exposition in Japan in four years from this time.

The laws against smoking in the streets is vigorously enforced throughout the Empire.

A new daily paper is now published in Yeddo by "The Society for the Dispersion of Darkness."

Game certificates are now issued to natives, a "professional hunter" paying a tax of one dollar, and a sportsman one of ten dollars.

The offices formerly held by Buddhist priests have been abolished.

All funeral rites are to be performed according to the custom of the Shintoo religion.

Natives who continue to wear their hair in the old style are fined, and one (an officer) committed harikari rather than submit to the loss of his "wangi" (queue).

Fifteen servants of a native committed harikari because the Government would not allow them to revenge their master, whose enemies had been leniently dealt with by the authorities.

On the 27th of January a fire broke out in Yeddo which swept off 400 houses before it was checked. The extent of the disaster is attributable to the absence of any efficient engines.

A native doctor has addressed a long and interesting letter to the Department of Justice, urging the necessity of having skilled toxicologists in readiness to serve on trials in suspected poisoning cases. He rather ominously hints that as some of the great officers of Japan are liable to be poisoned, it is all-important that men trained to manipulate such cases should be secured, or at least encouraged to make a specialty of toxicology.

The Changes of Fashion.

The rapid changes and fluctuations of fashion occasion as much loss as gain at least, although few persons realize the fact. The very eagerness with which people are stimulated to buy overshoots the mark, and gets rid in one way of what has been gained in another. It is almost impossible to do an extensive fancy goods business in New York city to-day unless it is associated with some other which is more reliable, the expenses and the losses swallowing up all the profits. The difficulties are increased by the fact that all the large dry goods stores have added fancy goods to their other departments, and can generally afford to sell at lower prices than the smaller houses which make a specialty of a single branch of the business. Add to this the amount lost by European travel, which grows larger every year, and it will not seem surprising that more than one of the oldest and best of our fancy importing houses have closed accounts and retired from a contest from which nothing was to be gained except the pain of a struggle. The change in the fashion of parasols, of the shape of vails, of the colors in ribbons and neckties, in laces and collars, has thrown many thousands of dollars' worth of goods back upon the hands of dealers, for which they never can receive an equivalent. Fashionable women do not want them at any price, and unfashionable women cannot afford them even at the reduction. What an amount of time, energy, industry and skill is here wasted! The quality is just as fine, the patterns just as perfect, the workmanship just as exquisite, but fashion has decreed a later form, a newer style, and all the rest must be sacrificed.—Demorest.

Duration of Rails.

The amount of wear or life of a rail is usually expressed, by engineers, in tons passed over it before rejection; properly the speed of travel should be taken into account, and 220,000,000 speed tons is stated to be a fair expression of the endurance of extra iron rails.

The average life of iron rails in England for ordinary traffic is set down at about ten years; in and about London, it is two years or less; on the continent, from twelve to fifteen years, and in Sweden, with less than in England, from fifteen to eighteen years.

The weight passed over good iron rails before rejection, has been found to average ten million tons; this may be taken to represent the life of extra iron rails, and six time the life of good fifty-six pound steel rails. On the London and Northwestern line steel rails have lasted twenty times the period of iron; and on the Metropolitan railway, with the greatest traffic in the world, where iron would not last six months, steel is found to last from three to four years. The late Prof. Rankine held that the weight of rails per yard should equal fifteen times the greatest load on the locomotive drivers in tons. Perdonet, in France, takes twelve in place of fifteen.

JUDGE CHASE.—Laura Ream writes of Chief Justice Chase, whom she met recently at his house at Edgewood: "Excepting a gray beard and mustache he does not look any older than at the close of the war. The events of the war aged him a score of years at least. His form is quite as erect, his step as firm; and, being our host, on his own ground, he seemed much more animated than of old. The attachment he showed for everything about him was quite touching. He talked to the men on the place and petted the Newfoundland dog that was beside itself with joy at his coming. In the library he pointed out to us the objects of interest, and I noticed him laying his hands lovingly on favorite books as if they could respond to his touch. It was a mute return for the pleasure they had given him. He did not talk much about politics, but asked me several questions about Gov. Hendricks in his new position as the chief executive officer of the State, and said emphatically, two or three times: 'He ought to have been President—he ought to have been President.'" money received by mail, for, in addition to the receipts by express, an average of one hundred packages is received each day by mail. The money so received is in much worse condition than that which comes by express, for the reason that currency which is mutilated is redeemable only by the Treasurer, and usually comes in small amounts by mail; while the various assistant treasurers, depositaries, and depositary banks are agents for the redemption of currency merely soiled and defaced, which is forwarded by them to the Treasurer by express. The money received by mail comes in all sorts of damaged conditions, and has all imaginable kinds of horrible or ludicrous histories. Sometimes it has been swallowed by a calf or a goat, which, finding a pocket-book carelessly left within its reach, proceeded to regale itself with the salt which the leather had absorbed from the perspiration, until the book was forced open and the contents exposed. The green notes had an inviting and familiar appearance, and the confiding animal eagerly swallowed them and so sealed his own death warrant; for the owner, returning and seeing the wreck of the pocket-book, rightly conjectured where his money had disappeared, put the unwitting thief to death and recovered the half-digested notes. Others have been found on the bodies of drowned or murdered men, weeks perchance after their death. Frequently they have been so burned that nothing remains but the charred resemblance of notes, so frail and brittle that a slight touch will change them to cinders. Sometimes a note is sent which some drunken fool, lord for the hour of untold riches, to show his disregard for money, has used to light his cigar, but which, upon the return of reason, he has hastened to send to the Treasurer, with an humble and penitent request that it be exchanged for a new note with which to pay for food and lodging. Or it may be that it is one which a termagant wife has thrown into the fire to spite her hen-pecked mate, who has rescued it before it was entirely devoured by the flames; or one that some luxurious mouse has stolen from the money-drawer and used to line his nest. Once a poor Frenchman sent a handful of minute fragments of notes, with the statement that they had "met with the accident of a little dog." Our Fenian friends are prone to put lighted pipes in the same pockets in which they carry money. The consequence is that the Treasurer receives for redemption a great many greenbacks with round holes burnt through them here and there, and looking for all the world like bullet-riddled ensigns of the Irish Republic. Some stories are so frequently repeated as to excite grave doubts of their entire truthfulness. For instance, a note which is so badly damaged as to call for a severe stretch of the rules in order to make it worth anything, is pretty sure to be said to belong to a poor, hard-working widow with an astonishing number of children, for whom the writer, in the fullness of his charitable heart, has forwarded it for redemption.

All these notes, so variously mutilated, must be restored as nearly as may be to their original shapes before their value can be definitely ascertained. Here again the skillful fingers of women are called into requisition. Some of the women employed in this work have, by long experience, become exceedingly expert in pasting and restoring notes. Fragments which are so burned as to seem to others only charred pieces of paper, or so minute as to be almost indistinguishable, under their patient hands again assume the semblance of notes, so that their kinds and denominations can be readily distinguished. Notes which have been nibbled by mice into such tiny fragments that most persons would say that it was beyond human power to restore them to their original shapes, are arranged and restored bit by bit, until after perhaps a labor of days they begin to assume their former forms, and at last are restored with sufficient perfection to warrant their redemption. These ladies have made an art in which they have no rivals. It would require years to educate others to the same degree of skill and knowledge, and it would be difficult to estimate the embarrassment which their loss would entail on the Department.—From "An Hour Among the Greenbacks," in Scribner's.

A Thrilling Incident.

The Detroit Free Press chronicles one of those heroic incidents with which the lives of most railroad engineers abound, as happening recently to Frank Dolan, an engineer on the Lansing road. He was coming in on a wet track with a heavy train, and soon after leaving a station, put on more steam to make up for lost time. The train was running at the rate of about twenty-five miles an hour when Dolan caught sight of a man on the track about a half a mile ahead. He was certain that the man was deaf from the way he walked, but he opened the whistle and rang the bell. The man paid no attention to the sounds, and Dolan whistled for brakes. They did not take well, and, although the engine was reversed, it was plain that the pedestrian would be run down unless something was done promptly. Dolan ran forward over the engine and down on the cow-catcher. By this time the pedestrian was not 300 feet away, and was trying to walk one of the rails, swaying this way and that, but apparently not feeling the rumble of the train, as it naturally would be expected he would. Dolan, leaning forward, reached a foot beyond the cow-catcher, and, as the train came close upon the man's heels, struck him in the back with both fists. The victim was not on the rail at that moment, and he caught it with his feet as he went over, so that he was whirled around lengthwise of the track, and was cut in the scalp by some portion of the first pair of trucks. He was floundering in the ditch when the train stopped, and, when he found out what the fuss was about, he squared off and wanted to whip somebody. He was so deaf that the railroad employes had to scream in his ears, and so mad that he would not let them examine his wound or do anything for him. He was recognized as a farmer living near there, but would not even accept a free ride home.

as long as he lived, being ably and piously seconded and supported by Pomeroy. The only difference between Pomeroy and Lane is, that Pomeroy is sleek and sly, and covers up his tracks, while Lane was gruff and audacious, and killed those who got on his trail, which he always left stark plain. Lane sleeps under the shadow of the State University of Kansas, amid the memories he made famous, and that made him great. It was no odds how well you knew the intrinsic debauchery of his life or the cussedness of his character, you could not stand in his rugged presence without a feeling of awe, and a respect born of admiration for the very high qualities in him, which in other men are despised and loathed. Edwin Forrest was not his equal in dramatic intensity and impetuosity. He commanded men as a lion or a tiger might awe lower beasts. He could walk into a crowd that welcomed him with the clicking of revolver locks, and in five minutes every man in the crowd would have spilled the blood right out of his own heart in fighting for Jim Lane. He could stand mute before a hissing and groaning mob, and in two minutes you could have heard the breath of love in the air rustle the scented tresses of a maiden in the hush which would be there. He could stand before an audience, speaking to them with those great, cavernous eyes of his, while his lips were shut and still, raise his hand, and every one would rise with his gesture; lower his hand, and every one would sit down, obedient to the wonderful electricity of his will. He was one of those men whose utter failure to comprehend that there is such a thing as danger, made his great courage of no particular credit to him. His impulses ruled him utterly, and he never could see anything between him and the object he sought. If there was any obstacle, he always looked right over the top of it, and walked over or through it with the same unheeding unconcern. The possibility that there was or might be anything which he could not overcome was a suspicion that his mind had no room to entertain. And when he pulled the trigger of his own Derringer, with its cold muzzle against his lips, I doubt if he realized that there was any personal danger in the act.—Kansas Letter to St. Louis Republican.

A Suggestion Concerning Kerosene.

A correspondent writes:

I offer a suggestion which has long been in my mind, but which seems so natural that I have continually expected to see it made by those who are more directly concerned—the dealers or the insurance companies. It is, that upon every package of kerosene, (using the term in a general sense) there should be pasted a printed warning, something like the following. It would pay the insurance companies to supply the dealers free of charge, and this would save the community in the end the trouble of enacting a requirement for affixing the warning to every can or package, and setting a penalty for its neglect:

KEROSENE.

Danger from fire.

Never fill a burning lamp.

Fill lamps by daylight.

If obliged to fill at night, have the light a yard off, and not in a current of air.

Never pour oil on the fire.

If burning oil gets upon the floor, smother it with blankets, rug, or clothing.

If the clothing takes fire wrap a blanket or rug about the person, or roll upon the floor.

Never run about, or scream more than once, for motion fans the flames, and in screaming they may enter the lungs.

Keep the can closed and in a safe place.

All kerosene oils, including naphtha, benzine, benzoline, etc., are highly combustible; as a rule, the high priced oils are less explosive than the cheaper ones; better pay a few cents more a gallon and buy of respectable dealers than run the risk of losing life and property.

A Thousand Shots a Minute.

Yesterday, at Holskie's machine-shop, a trial was made of a new mitrailleur, invented by Mr. J. P. Taylor, of Tennessee. This most destructive implement of modern warfare has quite a number of novel features, which distinguish it from the Gatling or Imperial mitrailleurs. One important one is that the gun-barrels are in a water casing, so that the heating of the barrels is impossible. The other is that the twenty-four barrels, starting at the breech in a circle, at the muzzles are grouped in an ellipse. By this means a lateral or horizontal range is given, instead of one in which other guns of a similar character throw the projectiles up and down, at right angles with the ground. The device for loading is also exceedingly novel. It is self-charging, something like the Henry rifle. Metallic cartridges are placed in hollow tubes, which are fed up to the chambers by the motion of a lever. A most ingenious device is used for firing, and on moving the crank and adjusting a simple mechanism the mitrailleur may either be used to discharge its load en fusillade, the twenty-four shots going off one after the other, or the whole may be fired at once. It has four chambers, each one of which can be put instantly in position, fired and cleared of its cartridge. In the fusillade firing, as exhibited yesterday, it discharged about 700 round a minute; when fired in volley, about 1,000. The caliber of cartridge used was 44, and at a distance of 300 yards the lateral range spread the balls about 35 feet to the right and left of a given center. It is intended for the Vienna Exhibition. For use against cavalry and infantry it would be a most terrible arm, and it has excited great interest among our own artillery officers.—New York Times.

PREPARATION OF FRENCH CHALK.—The substance generally known as French chalk, used by tailors for making marks upon cloth, is manufactured by rubbing ultramarine, ochre, etc. (according to the color desired), with pipe-clay softened with water. The mixture is then poured into moulds, and dried in a slightly heated room, etc.

"CHARLES, are you in that jam again?" "No, ma; the jam is in me."

The Indian Policy.

[From the Cincinnati Enquirer.]

The extermination of the Modocs is not unlikely to follow the recent treachery of their chief Captain Jack. The precedent that will thus be established may not stop with the savage tribe that has provoked it. The cold-blooded murder of one of the noblest and most efficient officers in the army of the United States, by the sneaking treachery of a red man. We have heretofore expressed ourselves in favor of a policy towards the red man, whose chief elements should be magnanimity. We have said that, so far as practicable they should be treated as people having rights as American citizens having rights, not so much because they are entitled to such treatment, as because it was our duty to give it. We have urged that while it is excellent to have a giant's strength, it was tyrannous to use it as a giant. But the murder of General Canby, a splendid soldier and gentleman and his associate, and the wounding almost, if not quite to death of another Peace Commissioner, calls a reconsideration of some of the propositions we have made.

The policy of the government toward the Indians have for years been one of peace, and conciliation. The desire of the Government has of late been to Christainize, and if possible, make citizens of the tawny and barberous men. The Quaker policy has had a fair trial. It seems to be pretty well settled that the unbaptized and ungenerated savage is not the proper animal on which to waste magnanimity. We do not urge cruelty against every Indian.—The impulse of the hour is one of vengence. Except in so far as recent events have taught the wisdom of a different policy to that which has been pursued revenge should not needlesly in the future course of the Government. That is a quality characteristic of the savage. If an Indian tribe be slaughtered on their own hunting-grounds, let it be done for different reasons. Let it be done because civilization demands it.

The arguments in favor of the red man are not unappreciated. He lived on the soil before the landing of the Pilgrim or the Puritan. He has been cheated by the white man, so it is said and in many cases, truly. Year by year his huts and hunting-grounds has followed the setting sun. But the question is, whose is the continent? That it was to become the abode of civilization and christainity, of the arts and sciences, of music and picture and poetry, and all beauty and culture none will dispute. The Indian has shown himself incapable of civilization, and a foe to all accompaniaments of culture. God gave the white man who is capable of virtue and advancement, the right to plant his civilization along all the hills and in all the vallies that lie between Maine and California.

For two hundred years the character of the Indian has remained unchanged. From the day, one hundred and ninety-eight years ago, when the savages butchered ninety eight young men the "Flower of Essex," on the banks of a creek that empties into the Connecticut river, a creek known to this day as Bloody Brook; from the time when men worshipped God with their rifles at their sides, up to the present time, the red man has been the same relentless enemy of the white man's civilization. The Anglo Saxon, having the right to cary his civilization up the mountain and down the valley, has a right to move whatever stands in the way of that civilization.

The future policy of the Government towards the Modocs, clearly indicated in the dispatch from General Sherman which we published yesterday will be sanctioned by the people of the whole country. He says: "Make the attack so strong and persistent that their fate may be commensurate with their crime." and in his dispatch to Scofield he says. "You may be sure that any measure of severity you may take will be sustained." What complication may follow the attack upon the Modocs cannot be predicted. Other tribes may become involced, and a general Indian war result. The Government should pursue the course on which it has just planted itself. Let us have done with the Indian of sentiment and romance. The Indian is still the savage of the scalping knife and of treachery; indolent and squalled, and hostile to the arts of peace. Let him be treated as such. We only regret that it should be over the grave of so noble soldier that the flower of a wiser policy toward him should spring.

Don't do it.—Don't write machine poetry. It's hard on the machine.

Don't eat more than a dozen boiled eggs at a single meal. It would be selfish in view of the scarcity of the commodity.

Don't bother a score of your intimate friends with a secret. One can keep it as well as a dozen.

Don't multiply your little vices.—The Lord will keep the amount correctly.

Don't banish the sunshine from your heart. Only noxious weeds grow in the dark, and the crop is not profitable.

Don't eat a hearty supper just before going to bed. It makes two work in the kitchen.

Don't marry a printer. He will be constanty "making impressions" away from home.

The roads are better.

Riot at Knightsville.

Indianapolis April 16.—The following is from the Clay County Enterprise.

Yesterday, (Tuesday) afternoon, a difficulty occurred between a negro and one of the white peelers, near the company boarding house, which brought on a bloody row. Several women were engaged in the affair. The boarding house where the negroes are quartered was soon bombarded, by a shower of cinders, nearly every light in the front part of the house being knocked out; the blacks rushed for their arms, and seemed eager to fire upon the assailants but were kept in the rear of the house by William Watson, George Murbarger Leonard Randan, John Durban, guards, and the Rev. Mathews, were each caught in the streets and severely beaten. As soon as the excitement began to die down in that quarter, the crowd began to collect in front of Daniel Davis' store, by which the negro miners would pass on their return from the mines, which they did about six o'clock. as the rear men passed the crowd one of the negroes drew a revolver, when he was taken into custody by the Marshal. An interchange of rocks soon began between the two parties. 'Squire Holingsworth soon succeeded in starting the negroes towards the mill on a double quick several shots being fired at them which they returned. A good part of the crowd followed up to the bridge. In a few moments the negroes were marched back to the bridge, armed with rifles and fixed bayonets which had a tendency to make the crowd fall back of the commons a little.

Thus the affair ended for the day.—It was generally feared that an attack would be made upon the mill at night. Matson & Morrison's negroes, all armed were sent upon the grounds about 10 o'clock p. m. Troops were telegraphed for to Indianapolis, Gov. Hendricks responded by saying tht the Emmit Guards and a detachmnt of police would be sent on the 5 o'clock train. Shooting was kept up all night by both sides A very desultery harmless fire.

Pat Smith's saloon is pretty well riddled by shots from the mills. The reason for this assigned that several shots were shot from the windows at the negroes at the mill. Several shots went through the windows of the saloon, one of which lodged in the pillow on which Smith was lying.

At this time it is said that two men were shot on the corner a little after dark, by the guards on the bridge. All seemed quiet through the night, with the exception of a random firing from the mill. The troops about fifty in number, with a detachment of police arrived on Wednesday morning at 5 o'clock.

Numerous arrests will doubtlessly be made to-day. At this time all things are quiet and reporters for city papers are unable to find any person who will tell them anything about last night's riot.

Several very narrow escapes were made Col. Collins a pedler received a ball through the coat sleeve and one through the body of the coat, while in front of the boarding house by one of the negroes. William Watson had a little hair cutting done just above the right ear, while near the bridge, by a ball fired from some one on the common:—Daniel Davis while standing on a store box in front of his store, witnessing the affray on the common, was forcibly reminded of the danger of to much prominence by a ball in unpleasant proximity to his auricular protuberances, fired from the direction of the mill.

William Watson was quite badly hurt by a cinder thrown by some one during the melee at the boarding house. Shots were fired at intervals through the night, from persons in the patch, which were promptly returned by the besieged.

Knightsville, April, 16—3 P. M.—Eight arrests have been made, and the prisoners sent away in safety. All is apparently quiet now. The police and Emmet Guards will return to Indianapolis to-night. The trouble is liable to break out at any time again. An amount of amunition will be left with the furnace authorities, who have determined to prevent interference.—There is a very different feeling on the part of the strikers, and only great caution can prevent a serious riot while the negroes are here.

An exchange says that the cod fish taken are of unusually large size, many of them weighing from fifty to sixty pounds. That's far too old. How many of them does it take to weigh fifty or sixty pounds.

We're in a pickel now, said a man in a crowd. A regular jam, said another. Heaven preserve us, moaned an old lady.

Dr. Johnson used to say, that the habit of looking at the best side of things was worth more than a thousand pounds a year.

No man should run when he can walk, walk when he can stand, or stand when he can sit, or sit when he can lie down.

Keep them alive boy, said an old physician to his young brother practitioner. "Dead men never pay no bills."

Thousands have already gone, and thousands more are turning their eyes towards new homes in the fertile West. To those going to Missouri, Kansas, Colorado, Utah, Wyoming, Nevada, Oregon or California, we recommend a cheap, safe, quick and direct route, via St. Louis over the Missouri Pacific Railroad, which runs its fine Day Coaches and Pullman Sleepers from St. Louis to principal points in the West, without change. We believe that the Missouri Pacific Railroad has the best track and the finest and safest equipment of any line west of the Missippi, and its connections with roads further West are prompt and reliable. The Texas connection of this road is now completed and passengers are offered a first class, all-rail route from St. Louis to Texas, either over the Missouri, Kansas & Texas R. R. via Sedalia, or over the Atlantic & Pacific R. R. via Vinita. For maps time tables, information as to rates, &c., we refer our readers to S. H. WISHART
PINE TREE!
Tar Cordial,
NATURE'S GREAT REMEDY
FOR
Throat and Lungs.

It is gratifying to us to inform the public that Dr. L. Q. C. Wishart's Pine Tree Tar Cordial, for Throat and Lungs diseases, has gained an enviable reputation from the Atlantic to the Pacific coast, and from thence to some of the first families of Europe, not through the press alone, but by persons throughout the States actually benefited and cured at his office. While he publishes less, so say our reporters, he is unable to supply the demand. It gains and holds its reputation—

First. Not by stopping cough, but by loosening and assisting nature to throw off the unhealthy matter collected about the throat and bronchial tubes, which causes irritation.

Second. It removes the cause of irritation of the mucous membrane and bronchial tubes, assists the lungs to act and throw off the unhealthy secretions, and purifies the blood.

Third. It is free from squills, lobelia, ipecac and opium, of which most throat and lung remedies are composed, which allay cough only, and disorganize the stomach. It has a soothing effect on the stomach, acts on the liver and kidneys, and lymphatic and nervous regions, thus reaching to every part of the system, and in its invigorating and purifying effects it has gained a reputation which it must hold above all others in the market.

NOTICE.

AND

Being under my immediate direction, they shall not lose their curative qualities by the use of cheap and impure articles.

The Girl to Find.

The true girl has to be sought for She does not parade herself as show goods. Generally she is not rich. But, oh! what a heart she has when you find her! so large, and kind, and womanly. When you see it you wonder if those showy things outside were women. If you gain her love you will never lose it. She will not ask you for a carriage or a first class house.—She'll entertain true friends on a dollar and astonish you with the new thought how little happiness depends on money. She'll make you love home, and teach you how to pitty, while you scorn a poor fashionable society, which vainy tries to think itself happy

SCHUYLER COLFAX ROBBED.

One Hundred Thousand Dollars Stolen From his Trunk.

Correspondence of the N. Y. Sun.

SOUTH BEND, April 18.—Since our own persecuted Colfax was endorsed on his return home by a meeting gottan up without regard to expenses he professes to be better satisfied with his canged condition, though he grives about the ingratitude of republics, and olten sighs over man's inhumanity to man. He is now engaged in sitting up the for a nomination to Congress and is willing to pay a high price for that honor, knowing that it can be made to pay as a merterial investment and expecting to use it as a moral plasted for his wounded character. His correspondence is luss voluminous than it was in former days, but what is left of it is quite saintly in sentiment, so as to worthy of the best periods of any Christian statesman. Just at this time he is in a more cheerful state of mind than he was a month ago. Glad tidings came recently to relieve his anxious bosom and improve the state of his threatened exchequer.

It will be remembered that toward the close of Congress his room at a hotel in Washington was entered and robbed while the late Vice President [illegible] points of order and explaining his contradictory testamony at the Capitol. A sharp thief got wind that Schuyler had concealed a box of valuable bonds and stocks in his trunk during the investigation where it was suppesed to be hiuden from human eyes and safe against such intrusive scrutiny as has penetrated the mysteries of his bank account. To open that trunk and carry off the precious contents were the work of an expert, whose keen scent had made him a fellow lodger with Colfax for that express purpose.

When the robbery came to light Schuyler is said to have collapsed as badly as when Oakes Ames coolly handed him the convicting check for $1,200. payable to 'S. C. or bearer.'—Every smile was knocked out of him, and he forgot on the spot a whole volume of pacliamentary precedents.—What was to be done in that dilemma became the supreme thought. The box contained a fortune, and to lose it was to sacrifice the gains which had cost the owner his good name. If the truth was told, all the sham superstructure of quibbles, lies, and worse would tumble to pieces like a house of cards, and perhaps be followed by prompt impeachment. So exposure was adroitly stifled, the public was put on a false scent, and the huge robbery was drawfted into a mere trifle in order to distract attention. Only a thousand or two dollars, some jewelry, laces and female toggery were stolden. Nothing more! That was the story that Schuyler cooked up at the time, and caused to be telegraphed all over the country When in point of fact a tenth of a million had been stolen, which he did not dare to admit except secretly to the authorities. Even as it was, curious people in these parts, and others who know much more than than they yet told, naturally inquired how it came to pass that Schuyler was carrying about bonds in this loose wry, just as if he was not a member of the cemperance society, or had never lectured before the Y. M. C. A. The whole affair was mysteriously hused up, and by downright lying, too, as is now certainly known.

The sequel to this story is at last out, and it explains the contented air of Schuyler. Before leaving the national Capitol, he knew that the police had got on the track of the theives and that the bulk of the stolen property had been recovered. Now he knows the loss will be comparatively small, owing to the skill of the men who worked up the case. Indeed he has reason to 'smile' for the amount carried off was between ninety and one hundred thousand dollars in United States coupon bonds and stocks of various kinds which would a tale unfold if exhibited to public view.

Colfax has always pretended to be poor. That was one of the elements of his defence in the recent investigation. He could not have received so large a sum as twelve hundred dollars without his mind and memory being impressed with a financial event of what magnitude! He did not affect much style or make many operations here, for that would have started comment. Yet all the while he had thousands standing to his credit at Jay Cooke's band in Washington city and large transactions, which, according to the testimony and criticisms upon it, astonished everybody who had believed in Schuyler's protestations of poverty. Where did all this money come from and how did Colfax happen to have a hundred thousand dollars in bonds and stocks in his trunk? That is the question now.—Did some other dead man, "almost a total stranger," leave his special depos it in his keeping, as the defunct contracter sent him that imaginary $1,000 greenback, besides quarterly payments by check, or were there other Nesbitts who contributed from enormous profits and plunder of the Government to augment the fortune of a Speaker and Vice-President who was their purchased agent or their pensioned tool?

The facts in this case do not rest upon any doubtful authority. Mr. Colfax can readily be accommodated with a precise statement of all the recovered property, if not content with that which is now, or was lately, in his private possession. He has persistenly striven to prevent any publicity, and wilfully deceived his friends with false versions of the robbery.—Police authorities everywhere keep official record, and that will show the exact amount and description of stocks and bonds which he received back.—Let him rise and explain how he came by this hundred thousand dollars, without referring it to the day of jupgment as he did his "welcome home" speech about the Credit Mobilier dividends.

The New Postal Law.

One of the latest acts of the 'salary stealing' Congress was to pass a postage law which, on the 1st day of July next, repeals all laws allowing free mail matter. This includes exchanges between country newspapers, and imposes postage on papers circulated in counties where they are published. In other words, this new law requires postage to be paid on all newspapers mailed to subscribers and exchanges everywhere. A meaner, more contemptible pretense of economy was never porpetrated. While it was being connected the federal legislators had their hands half way down into the public treasury, and withdrew them filled with money dishonestly getton.

The result of this repeal of free postage on newspapers will put a few hundred dollars into the Post Office coffers, taken, so far as subscribers are concerned, for the people's pockets, and in respect to country exchanges from men who earn with difficulty a bare subsistence by arduous, presistent toil. It will, in many instances crush out the country newspaper, whose patronage is limited, and furnishes at the best but a sorry recompense for bram and manual labor. An exchange, referring to this ill-advised parsimony, intimates that the movement repealing free mail matter has its foundation, in a great degree, in the interest of the mammoth metroplitan weeklies. It has the look of being an invention for the purpose of restricting the circulation of country newspapers to the town or city in which they are published. In size and bulk the mammoth issues double, treble and quadruple the country papers; but in the material that builds up a community, in the information that involves the interests of particular localities and the adjacent country, the country press is infinitely more valuable.

We call upon the country newspapers to denounce this improvident measure. It will bring little revenue to the Government, but it will certainly result in desaster to a most worthy portion of an excessively worked and inadequately renumerated profession. In the hope that something may be done to modify this postal repeal (which, in fact, is taking a step backward in the march toward cheap postage), we invoke the intention of our brethorn of the country press. Let there be a unanimous protest against it, and let a copy of each newspaper (marked) be sent to the Postmaster General, that it may be noticed officially and an influence exerted to restore the free moil system to newspaper subscribers and exchanges.—Springfield Register.

A Tribute to Marriage.

Never was a higher tribute paid to the marriage state than given by the married men who were passengers on the wrecked Atlantic. The record of their fate is extremely touching. With few exceptions they all perished, refusing to desert their wives and little ones. Wives begged their husbands to seek safety by flight from the sinking quarter deck, but they never stirred. Hand clasped in hand husband, wife and child went down together.—In the supreme moment of life, wife and husband forgot all past bickerings, and lost fear of death in the companship of each other. They recked not of the opinions of the world, while the waves swept over them and the horror of sudden destruction was imminent, but were simply true to their highest insticts. One such fact will out weigh volumes of argument in favor of free love and easy divorce.

A Brooklyn boy named McDuffie was recently swindled out of $140 by a Boston bogus employment agency, and took the matter so much to heart that he committed suicide. These agencies advertise to give employment to deserving young men, and manage to secure from the latter, as they are employed, sums varying from 100 to 200, the same to be regarded as a guarantee of good faith. In due time the young man finds that he has been swindled; that the employment brings him nothing, and that the note given in return for his money is worthless. The Travellar says that the fate of the Brooklyn boy has drawn the attention of the Boston police to the business, and they will make a vigorous effort to break it up; but it is probable that in Boston, as in New York, no law can be found to apply to these peculiar cases.

Beecher on old Clothes.

In referring to the happiness of early housekeeping, Henry Ward Beecher recently said in the pulpit;

'I would not give up the first two years of married lite for all I have now. I live in a big house, with a brown stone front, and very fairly furnished; but, after all, among the choicest experiences of my life were those I passed through in Indiana, when I hired two chambers up stairs; when all my furniture was given me, and was second hand at that; and when the very clothes which I had on my back had been worn by Judge B— before me. We were not able to hire a servant. We had to serve ourselves It was a study every day how to get along with our small means—and it was a study never to be forgotten. I owe many of the pleasures which have run through my life to being willing to begin where I had to begin, and to fight poverty with with love, and to overcome it, and to learn how to live in service and helpfulness, and in all the thousand ingenuities which love sweetens and makes more and more delightful.

A SPRING IDYL.

BY WILLARD [illegible] COULTER.

"Spring is coming," "Spring is coming," is the echo everywhere;
We can see it on the landscape, know it in the very air,
In the meadows clothed in grass is it there most plainly seen,
As they change from somber gray to the emerald living green.
In the lilacs which are springing forth in eagerness to bloom—
In the crocuses and tulips, with the hyacinth's perfume;
Flowers growing, nature showing joyous life in everything—
Hail the lithesomeness which comes with the bright enlivening Spring!

"Spring is coming," "Spring is coming!" we can hear it in the notes
Of the birds that are returning, as they tune their feather'd throats
In sweet songs of gladsome music, seeming happy that the stern,
Icy winter chain, in breaking, now permits them to return
From the Southern fields and forests where they fled to, when exiled
By the rude December blasts sweeping fierce and roaring wild—
Birds come winging to us singing from a genial clime;
What season is so fraught with joyance as the bright Spring-time?

"Spring is coming," "Spring is coming!" e'en the breezes tell us so,
As from the warm southwest they gently, softly flow;
Renewed strength and energy to our nerves they lend.
Bringing health, infusing vigor, as on their course they tend.
Ah, those breezes! how delicious to the suffering sick and weak;
How the zephyrs force the pallor from the fever'd wasted cheek!
What so pleases as pure breezes when they waft in Spring,
With the warmth of other skies which in their track they bring.

"Spring is coming," "Spring is coming!" forest trees the fact confirm,
In the signs of waking life shown in every separate germ;
And the trees so lately fettered in the frigid, glacial grasp,
Now are pliant to the breeze, freed at last from that cold clasp;
Freed and very swiftly changing, leafing out in colors rare;
Leafing out in cozy nooks, homes for song birds of the air;
Cool and shady, sure no lady e'er could for such boudoir sigh,
As the forest trees in Spring build for birds to occupy.

"Spring is coming," "Spring is coming!" buzzing bees the tidings spread.
As they flit in search of nectar, hovering o'er the violet bed,
Or alighting at the window, where the tender house plants stand;
For the bees regard all flowers equally at their command,
Whether native or exotic, rare or common, bright or plain,
Whether raised in field or green-house, only so that they contain
Certain measures of rich treasures from which honey can be wrought;
Here's a lesson; only useful flowers by the bees are sought.

"Spring is coming," "Spring is coming!" is apparent everywhere;
We can see it, hear it, feel it; know it in the balmy air,
Verdure all about us springing to the touch of Nature's hand—
Birds in merry chorus singing sweet and sometimes almost grand.
Rills unfettered, lightly splashing, rippling on throughout the day,
Among the willows, brightly flashing back the warm sun's ray.
Flowers growing, zephyrs blowing, joyous life in every thing,
Hail the lithesomeness which comes with the invigorating Spring!

ONE OF MY "BY-GONES."

After striving all day with the total depravity of chairs and tables and bedsteads, which refused on any terms to look home-like in a new house, it was comfort untold to rush out into the avenue, in the dusk, and take sweet counsel with myself, or, as quaint old Herbert expresses it,

> "——to tumble up and down my chest,
> And see what my soul doth wear."

It was the avenue which made me take the house; nobody's avenue in particular, yet it belonged to each one of the small group of cottages to which it led from the high road. It had existed as a sort of lane before the cottages were thought of, and great trees had had time to grow up in a leisurely way and meet overhead. A long gate closed it in at night from the snares of the outer world, and gave greater sense of security to the lonely spinsters and timid widows who lived in the cottages.

On this night a thin mist enfolded the trees and me as with a somber garment, and the remark of one of our old neighbors when she heard our destination came back to me like a bird of ill-omen: "Going to Dovecotes! Then you will live and die an old maid. No one ever goes there but the doctor to make them sick, and the lawyers to make their wills. It is too far from the village to walk, and too near to make it worth while to ride."

She evidently spake not without knowledge, and I keenly felt the little fine point that was wrapped up in it. It had a fearful sound to be an old maid all my days, for old maids do live immensely long lives, having neither great joys nor great sorrows to wear out their bodies. It almost seems that with a little effort they might live forever. I was twenty-two years old, and no love passage had ever been mine. If one must be an old maid it would be some consolation to have a few old letters and a bunch of dried flowers to turn over winter evenings. It was an old familiar track in my mind; my thoughts traveled it often. The hour was not very late, but the fog made a darkness that might be felt. Suddenly I heard voices near me, but whether in front or following it was impossible to tell, as I distinguished no foot-steps.

"I fear we have made a mistake," said a woman's voice, trembling in spite of a hard tone in it. "If you cannot bear with me while we are lovers, what will become of me by and by?"

"It is only when we are alone that I should ever suspect we were lovers," responded a masculine voice.

"You were willing that our engagement should be a secret."

"Yes, because you besought me so anxiously; but your manner to other men is so utterly—utterly—"

"Don't hesitate for a word. I assure you I can endure it. My manner is so——?"

"Unengaged, I would say, to put it very mildly."

"Perhaps it is better that my condition should fit my manner."

"Perhaps—unless you can change that manner."

"I could no more do that than the leopard could change his spots. I have loved you well, but that is no reason why we should marry, I suppose."

"Oh, none whatever. I hear some one coming. Here is the ring that you meant for a fetter. Good-night and good-bye!"

A woman ran by me so closely that her skirts brushed mine, and the fog lifting a little at the same moment, I saw the outline of a man take his elbows from the gate on which he had been leaning, and stooping down seemed to look for something on the ground. Then he hurried away toward the village, and, as Bunyan says of his pilgrims, "I saw him no more."

I felt like a person blindfolded, who had been tormented with other people's secrets against his will. I leaned my own arms on the gate until the fog cleared away, and a soft, wavering moonlight fell on the trees, which seemed to whisper together about the very secrets that I had shared with them. In a crack between post and bar something gleamed in the moonlight. I picked out a ring—the ring which one had thrown away in her angry haste, and which the other had looked for on the ground in vain. It was a violet, formed of small sapphires, with a diamond in the center. I carried it home and tucked it into the further corner of my upper drawer, and for a month I pondered it in my heart. I looked eagerly for all notices under the head of "Lost and found." Vast hordes of dogs seemed to have gone upon their travels about that time; muffs and bonds and other small matters were entreated to return, and no questions asked; but no one had lost a ring. I composed with infinite pains at least a dozen advertisements which should delicately convey to that outline of a man that his ring might be recovered if he desired it. I said no word to my aunt (with whom I shared the cottage and all other worldly goods) of my little adventure in the avenue. If she had ever had any nonsense about her it had entirely worn off before my time. She would have sought for the owner of the ring in the same straightforward and exhaustive way as if it had been a stray hoe, found in our garden. Those two lovers would have been forced to stand and deliver their names and their secret within a week.

Aunt Esther had brought me up in the same way that she did everything else; she never forgot to wind her clock on every seventh day, and she never failed to give me good measure of home comfort, but it was not pressed down nor running over. I gave her honest liking and respect without any love, and she never missed it. Nevertheless, it gave me a terrible shock when her vigorous life was suddenly arrested by a stroke of paralysis. Our only servant in her fright was helpless as her mistress; but Miss Purdy, who lived next door, came in to stay with my patient, while I ran through midnight darkness down the avenue and the long village street for the doctor. Dr. Gilmore was the name on the first door that had a light behind it. At the first pull of the bell the handle came off in my hand, but I opened the door and found myself in the office. The doctor lay on a lounge, sleeping heavily, as if he had just thrown himself down after a hard day's work. I called him in vain, and finally laid violent hands on him. He must have been dreaming some fearful thing, for he seized my hands as in a vice and roared, "Now, I have you!" before he opened his eyes.

"You are mistaken, doctor; it is I who have you," I said, laughing. He released my wrists and sat up with his eyes very wide open.

"And what are you going to do with me?"

"Oh, you must come to my aunt at Dovecotes, this very moment," and I began to cry more heartily than I had laughed.

He took me up as easily as if I had been a baby, and laid me on the lounge. "Now lie there perfectly still until my carriage is ready," he said, as one in authority. In a few minutes he brought me some innocent-looking stuff in a glass, which I drank without a word, and my nerves grew steady again. I climbed into the little old-fashioned sulky, in which there was but spare room for its owner—a carriage that must have been invented by some misanthropic doctor who did not mean to drive his own patients. I contracted myself into about the substance of a paper of pins, and held my breath, but that sulky was a tight fit indeed! I wore a thin summer dress, with only a straw hat on my head, and as my excitement lessened the cool, sharp air of the September night pierced me like a knife.

"You are shivering," said the doctor, wrapping one side of his round cloak about me and holding me close to his breast, with one arm, while he drove his horse with furious speed with the other.

"I give you a great deal of trouble," I whispered into his beard.

"Not at all. It is all in my day's work," he said, gruffly. This was not very gallant, but it made me more comfortable in mind, as it was possibly meant to do.

He did all that a doctor could for my aunt, which was little enough. Time and patience were all the prescriptions that he gave to her or to me, but he came every day, sometimes twice, as he perceived that time was growing short and patience would soon have its perfect work.

The old story—old as when Cain went courting into the land of Nod—is coming, as my reader can see with half an eye. I did not fall in love with Dr. Gilmore nor he with me—all at once; but there grew to be an irrepressible comfort in his rough sincerity, and the warm hand-clasp with which at every visit he met and stilled my shrinking nerves.

In the first week of our acquaintance I confided to him my unwilling listening in the avenue to the love-quarrel of strangers. With his advice and assistance I sent a carefully-worded advertisement to the village paper. To judge by the pile of answers which I received describing every kind of ring that ever was worn, one would think the earth should have been sown as thick with them as was the field of Cannæ after the great slaughter of Carthagenian knights. But not one of the answers so much as hinted at a violet of sapphires with a diamond center.

In these lonely days I saw a great deal of my neighbor, Miss Purdy; she was one of those rare and blessed souls who interpret literally the command to love one's neighbor as one's self. She and her niece, Kate Purdy, lived together, as I lived with Aunt Esther, and a sort of fellow-feeling, from our similar conditions, made us wondrous kind from the first. Kate was a sparkling brunette, who made love to everybody, "male or female, Jew or Gentile, bond or free," —it was all one to her. I am a very meek-looking person myself, light-haired, blue-eyed, faded out—you almost need a dark background to see me at all.

Kate and I looked well together, and stayed together chiefly for that reason at first, afterward for a strong and earnest liking that lasted our life-time. I told her all about the ring, and showed her the answers to my advertisements; and when our talk reached low water on other matters, we always fell back on speculation about those two lovers and the sapphire ring. Kate was disposed to treat it more lightly than I could find it in my heart to do. She thought it far too pretty to hide its light in a bureau-drawer, and after a time I wore it, thinking that in that way it might be possibly seen and claimed by its owner.

We had become very intimate in girls' fashion before I introduced Kate to "my doctor," as I called him in my heart. They "took kindly" to each other, but she did not at once begin to wile the heart out of him, as I had seen her do with all other men.

"Why don't you make love to Dr. Gilmore?" I asked her at last, "You are naturally a fisher of men, and the prey is very scarce at Dovecotes."

"Firstly," said Kate, "because you already have him in your own net, and unless all signs fail you will soon land him. Secondly, he is too fearfully old and grave. I don't mean that he has lived any great number of years, but he is one of those who are born forty years old, and that would make him at this present time three-score-and ten."

My world was well nigh empty of kith and kin when Aunt Esther died, but I was not not near so doleful as I ought to have been. I had very little money, but I had youth and hope, and there was—the doctor. Kate Purdy had been helping me to set the house in order after the dreadful bustle that follows the vanishing of a familiar face.

At night-fall she left me alone for an hour or two; it was then as Kate and I had tacitly supposed, reading it in one another's eyes, that "my doctor" came to see me.

"I am afraid you are going to be very lonely here," he said after the first greetings were over.

"But I shall not be here; I am going to live with the Purdys."

"Are you quite sure they want you?"

"They say so."

"Doubtless they feel in that way, now, but their hearts are warmed by the sight of your affliction. You had far better come home to me."

He held out his arms, with a gesture that belied the calmness of his words; but I would not see it.

"How can I be sure that you want me?"

"Do I not say it?"

"Yes, and so did the Purdys. It may be that your heart is warmed by my loneliness."

"What is the use of fencing, when I love you and you love me?"

"How do you know that?"

"Because you have been so careful not to show even a decent regard for me. If you had not loved me you would have been more cordial."

"O wiser than Solomon!" I said; but I saw his arms put out to me at that moment, and I forgot what o'clock it was until Kate's opening the hall door made me draw away from "my doctor."

Kate made lively talk for a few minutes, but had little response for her audience.

"My dear turtle-doves," she said, at last, laying one hand on mine and looking hard at my friend, "I see how it is with you. You have reached the point where 'two is company and three is a crowd."

"No, we have passed it," said the doctor.

"And Esther is going to marry you?"

"You have said it."

"Then I wish you joy with all my heart. By the way, did you bring the engagement-ring with you?"

"Of course not."

"You need not look so irate. Some men are so certain of their happiness that they buy the ring beforehand. Why don't you use this one that came to Esther out of the gate-post?" said Kate, drawing from her finger the sapphire ring, which she often wore.

"It would be a bad omen," I said, shrinking away from it; "and suppose some one should claim it, after all?"

"I did not think of that; but you could have another made like it. Nothing could be prettier for an engagement-ring."

"If Dr. Gilmore likes it, I am sure I have no objection," I said, at last, for there was a tinge of romance in giving the ring a happy ending, after being spurned by its first owner.

Dr. Gilmore did like it, and put it on my finger before Kate went off, with some good advice about not sitting up late, which met the fate of most good advice. I crept into her bed in the "we sma' hours ayont the twal," and she woke instantly.

"This is a good example to set before a young and innocent maiden," she remarked.

"Oh, Kate," I said, in the usual gushing fashion, "I am so happy, I can't believe it."

"Oh, well, I can. Nobody comes to bed at this time of night unless something awful has happened."

"I wonder he did not fall in love with you, Kate."

"So do I; but some men have no taste, you know? They are to be pitied, not to be blamed. Besides, as I have said before, he is too aged for me. He'll be a 'centurion' when you're in your prime."

Kate refused to talk all night, as I would gladly have had her, and I did catch an hour or two of sleep, full of happy dreams.

I was nearly alone in the world, and there was no earthly reason for delaying the marriage, except for wedding garments.

Dovecotes was wonderfully healthy just at this time, but the doctor's carriage (he had discarded the old narrow sulky and replaced it with a buggy) might be seen going at full speed along the avenue often enough for a patient at the point of death.

We were married, and went into the village to live in the very house in which I had first taken possession of its owner.

That former neighbor, who had seen me an old maid in her prophetic soul, said: "So you took the doctor, after all."

If this were an ordinary and well-conducted story, it ought to end here; but being a true history, my life did not at once come to an end, like that of most heroines, with marriage.

I had been Mrs. Gilmore nearly ten years, and had led a very downy life of it. My love, which had run so smooth from the beginning, kept up the same habit.

I mentally carried an umbrella all these years, but it never rained anything but good fortune.

Three little Gilmores made my life a happy burden, and my old friend, Kate Purdy, came constantly to the house to help me bring them up. Kate was nearly thirty years old, when her fate was carried into her aunt's house with a sprained ankle, and came out of it her accepted lover.

Many men had fallen in love with Kate in these years, but they had been without form or comeliness in her eyes. The mild, colorless man, whom she loved at last with all her tender heart, carried her away from Dovecotes, and I did not see her again till she brought with her the transcendent first baby, which was to cast far into the shade Gilmore babies, past, present, and to come.

One foggy twilight when our tyrants were laid for the night, we walked toward Dovecotes. The long gate opening on the avenue was shut, and we all leaned upon it to rest a moment before turning homeward.

"By the way," said I, "it is just like the night when I found this ring. I wonder if those lovers ever made up their quarrel and married, after all."

"I am quite sure they never married," said Kate's husband, gravely.

"What do you mean?" I gasped.

"Tell her all about it," said Kate to Dr. Gilmore. "We are all happy now." She kissed me twice, with a long look into my frightened face, and walked away with her husband.

"What is it?" I said, with great effort, so dry was my throat.

"It was Kate Purdy and I who quarreled at the gate and lost the ring. That is all."

"All!" I repeated,

"Little wife, have we not been happy together?"

"I have supposed so."

"And I have known it."

"But the long deceit——"

"On my word there has been none. After you introduced me to Kate, I never spoke a word to her that you did not hear, nor looked a look that you did not see. She fascinated me once, but I never really loved her."

I believe men often make this sort of remark to their wives touching their youthful follies, but it has comforted many another wife. I had always worn the sapphire ring, the sign of our betrothal, and as we talked I had been slipping it up and down around my finger.

As we turned to leave the gate, I saw a deep crack in the ground where frost had loosened the post; in an instant I had dropped the ring into the crack, and went on, with one bruise less on my spirit.

On the way home we talked of the usual preference for moonlight over fog, and found Kate walking alone on the door-step. "I will not darken your doors again," she said, "till you say that you forgive me,"

"Yes," said the doctor, "she will let by-gones be by-gones," and Kate took that for her answer.

"You will find your ring where you left it," I whispered to Kate as I left her for the night.

When I was taking out hair-pins under the gas-light, I saw the doctor look curiously at my forefinger.

"Yes," I said, "it is gone; I found the owner, you now."

He made me no reply, but he drew from under the dressing-table the little leather-covered box that held all his private papers, the only thing in the house of which I did not possess the key. He took out a little case and uncovered a pearl ring, an exquisite solitaire.

"I bought this ring for you," he said, "on the day after you accepted me, feeling sure that you would some day throw away the other."

I put on the ring, and christened it with kisses and tears. I could not long be angry with my doctor; I loved him too well.

As to Kate, I can forgive, but I can never quite forget.

How sad is the case of the Massachusetts preacher to whom his congregation recently gave a donation party! The good man looked forward to receiving barrels of flour and sugar, packages of tea and coffee, loads of firewood, and a pleasant sprinkling of cheeses, hardware, boots for his boys, and dresses for his wife. But when he came to examine his gifts, after the donations were all in, he found, to his great dismay, that every single member of his congregation who took part in the ceremony had happened to hit upon potatoes as a neat and appropriate medium of expressing affection. The unhappy man had received nearly 300 bushels of potatoes and not another solitary gift. Since delicacy forbids him to sell his neighbor's potatoes, he will be forced to put his family upon an exclusive potato diet for the rest of the year, and even then he will doubtless find that a large part of his supply will decay before they can possibly be eaten.

Not Such a Silly Goose After All.

We heard of an amusing incident which occurred in the Second Ward of this city, which we think worthy of relating. A family residing at the corner of Townsend and Catawba streets, like the rest of their neighbors, are in the habit of keeping a number of domestic fowls, and a small flock of geese included. Some few weeks since the geese were missing, and all efforts to find them proved fruitless. But one day this week the gander of the flock returned to the front gate of the premises of its owner, and immediately set up a loud scream, and would not be quieted, nor come into the yard. Finally the owner came out and followed it for a number of blocks until it entered a yard, at the rear of which was an old barn. On opening it the balance of the flock were found, and were taken possession of by the owner. It appeared that the gander had made its escape through a hole in the floor of the barn, and then started for home to give the alarm.—Syracuse Standard.

A Question of Beard.

The brave British soldier, when at home in old England, is not allowed to wear a beard. To some, the regulation is becoming; to others it is annoying. None, however, fully likes to have fore-ordination so completely do away with free will in the matter of his own whiskers. Recently a regiment of the Twentieth Hussars returned home from India. It was winter, and raw weather. The men had their throats protected by their beards, and were in moderately good health. On arriving, they became subject to the cutting regulations mentioned. Their regimental surgeon accordingly interceded, and the men themselves pleaded that the rule might not be enforced upon a people who had just returned from so different a climate. It was no use, however; the law is inexorable, and the beards disappear by order. Immediately, bronchitis, sore throats, and other troubles fell upon them, and their ire was considerably disturbed too. Some of them wrote anonymously to the Duke of Cambridge, and suggested that it did not seem very fair that, when a regiment of warm-climate men were made to shave in England in winter, the two cousins of the Queen, the Duke himself, and Prince Edward, who had not been in India, were yet permitted to wear their beard as they chose. The Duke did not make use of his privilege, and, to settle the matter easiest, he ordered Prince Edward to abandon it likewise, and shave. This he refused to do, and the matter has been referred to the Queen. Meantime, the members of the Twentieth Hussars are getting up a great reputation for independence, and their fellow-soldiers will tremble before them in the next sham fight at Wimbledon.—Hartford Courant.

Causes of Death.

The last publication of the British death-rate and its causes is curious reading. One man died from the bite of a cat; and two from the bites respectly of a ferret and adder. Another was stung to death by bees. A man and a boy died of falling from velocipedes, and an old lady was killed by injuries inflicted by that agreeable machine. The swallowing of a shell, a screw, and a cherry-stone, put a period to the existence of three infants, while two died of putting, one a stone and the other a bead, into the ear. Swallowing bones sent three people out of the world, swallowing coins finished two, and swallowing a pin quickly pricked on grim death for one. A scratch from a thorn killed a woman of middle age; improper medicine poisoned eight people, and improper food five. Four hundred and forty-four young children were smothered by bed clothes; and 930 persons during the year lost their lives in railroad accidents. The proportion of suicides to every million of the population is about seventy—the deaths by hanging, the knife, and drowning being the most. Heart disease the year's record shows to be increasing—a state of things which is said by eminent physicians to be caused by the greater wear and tear of business, and the increased mental activity of the age.

Pope Twenty-Five Years.

It will be recorded as a curious fact in history that only the first and the last of the Christian pontiffs of Rome saw the end of the twenty-fifth year of their incumbency of the holy chair. Two hundred and fifty-nine have reigned. Two only have had the special honor.

Of 259 occupants of the chair of Peter but 10 have held the keys more than 20 years. These were:

A Touching Incident of the Atlantic Tragedy.

John Charles Ellery, a steward, tells of Rosey Sheaf, about 3 years old. "She sat at my table," says he, "with her father, mother and brother, and was fond of me. When I got out Mr. Sheaf placed her in my arms in her night dress, and asked me to save her. I thought of my own little girl of the same age in Liverpool, and I kept her as long as I could. I saw her father and mothar swept away by the sea, and the little one moaned and continually called, 'Papa! Papa! I am so wet!' She died in my arms, and I had not the heart then to let her drop, but handed her to a man who was stronger than myself."—New York Tribune.

A Two Years' Nap.—A correspondent of the London Daily Telegraph tells the story of a young girl in England, who has enjoyed a nap of two years and is still alive. She lives at Turville, near Great Marlow. She is now 14 years of age, and it is alleged has slept soundly since the 29th of March, 1871, when she passed from convulsions into a state of entire unconsciousness. It can scarcely be discovered that she breathes, and there is the faintest possible flutter of life about the heart. She is not so thin as might be expected from her long fast, and her face looks natural. Her feet are cold, and her mother now and then warms them up with bottles of hot water. Since the date named she has never once voluntarily moved from any position in which she has been laid; has never opened her eyes to look about her; nor uttered any word or sound, nor made any sign that she was conscious of living.

The Russian expedition against Khiva is on a less extensive scale than the public have been led to believe through the extravagant reports which have obtained circulation in regard to it. The Russian forces consist of three distinct bodies, small in number, but compactly organized. These columns will march on Khiva from three different directions. Each column will carry with it a full supply of provisions, and will advance without paying any regard to keeping up its line of communication. It is expected that the three columns will meet in the central oasis of the Khanate early in the summer, and that the united force, some eight or ten thousand strong, will be sufficient to defeat the Khivans and to capture the principal city.

AT THE EASEL.

If I had aught of art to trace
Soft-pencilled lines which poets love,
I'd draw myself a fairy face,
To hang above.

Twin-roses blushing upon snow—
The tints commingling here and there—
Soft melting into smooth white brow
And [illegible]

Bright tresses like an aureole,
With downward-drooping rays, to glance,
A chastened light upon the whole
Sweet countenance.

Eyes, for the dim-reflected ray
To tinge with pensive tenderness,
Which the more dazzling light of day
Would dispossess.

But, ah, what painting can command,
What artist-skill could e'er arrange,
Each melody of movement, and
Each charm of change?

The fitful play of life and light
Translucent through that face of hers
Like stars hung out to guide aright
Us wayfarers.

Is it a sin to sit and watch
This shadow of a fairer face
With tearless eyes, eager to catch
Each gift and grace?

Is it a sin this once to [illegible]
Her in my heart as on a throne;
And fancy her, from face to feet,
All, all mine own;

All, all mine own, from dusk to dawn,
All orbed within eyes' fierce strain;
Nor once to fear the lips' cold scorn,
The lids' disdain?

Is this a sin? Perchance; and yet
No fairer sin e'er earned a fall.
So turn the portrait and forget—
Face to the wall.

Uncle L.—'Now, Sammy, tell me, have you read the beautiful story of Joseph?" Sam—"Oh, yes, uncle." "Well, then, what wrong did they do when they sold their brother?" Sam—"They sold him too cheap, uncle, I think."

"I hope you will be able to support me," said a young woman, while walking out with her intended during a somewhat slippery state of the pavement. "Why, yes," replied the somewhat hesitating swain; "with a little assistance from your father." There was some confusion, and a profound silence.

A Family of Monomaniacs.

The most remarkable case of hallucination, probably, that has ever occurred, is recorded of a family in Baltimore. Medical men say that the books contain in its way so extraordinary. A whole family—father, mother and son—are under the same delusion. Their name is Sheaf. They are quiet, inoffensive people, live secluded and work at tailoring. They all imagine that a murder has been committed in Baltimore, of which the authorities refuse to take cognizance, because they have all been hushed by a money gag, and they are equally honest and earnest in this belief. They have made every effort to get the matter investigated. The visionary murder is in their own family, and by a relative; and they have a deep interest in exonerating themselves from complicity. Finding that the police authorities of Baltimore would not sympathize with them, they all made a pilgrimage to Washington and interviewed the President. They were put in charge of some Washington officers, who returned with them to Baltimore. Explanations followed, and they were advised to go home and trouble themselves no more about the murder. Physicians pronounce them entirely rational upon every other subject but that of the supposed murder.

Insensibility to the Beauty of Nature.

What a blessing would it be to us, one and all, could we but really wake up to the glory of this creation in which we live! Most men are actually asleep for their life-time in this vast and magnificent world. Mighty changes are going on around them, fitted to entrance their souls in wonder and thankfulness; and yet they are moved no more than if they were shut up in a mill, seeing only the perpetual revolution of spindles, and hearing only the monotonous hum and clatter of machinery. We might have been born amidst such machinery had the Creator so pleased. And men's insensibility often seems to deserve no better lot. But, instead of being pent within narrow walls, we live amidst this immeasurable universe. Instead of a few lamps, giving only necessary rays, oceans of light daily overflow this planet whereon we dwell, with inexhaustible splendor and beauty. And the fire that sustains the life of earth's creatures is forever freshly kindled millions of miles away.—William Ellery Channing.

THERE IS NO DEATH.

BY BULWER LYTTON.

There is no death! The stars go down
To rise upon some fairer shore;
And bright in Heaven's jeweled crown
They shine forevermore.

There is no death! The dust we tread
Shall change beneath the summer showers
To golden grain or mellow fruit,
Or rainbow-tinted flowers.

The granite rocks disorganize
To feed the hungry moss they bear,
The forest leaves drink daily life
From out the viewless air.

There is no death! The leaves may fall,
The flowers may fade and pass away;
They only wait through wintry hours
The coming of the May.

There is no death! An angel form
Walks o'er the earth with silent tread;
He bears our best-loved things away,
And then we call them "dead."

He leaves our hearts all desolate,
He plucks our fairest, sweetest flowers,
Transplanted into bliss, they now
Adorn immortal bowers.

The bird-like voice, with joyous tones
Made glad these scenes of sin and strife,
Sings now an everlasting song
Amid the tree of life.

And where he sees a smile too bright,
Or hearts too pure for taint and vice,
He bears it to that world of light,
To dwell in Paradise.

Born unto that undying life,
They leave us but to come again;
With joy we welcome them—the same,
Except in sin and pain.

And ever near us, though unseen,
The dear, immortal spirits tread;
For all the boundless universe
Is life—there is no dead.

THE NEW CLERK.

Jenkins met Smith, his senior partner, at the depot, who had been absent on a tour.

"How's business?" inquired the latter.

"All right, got a new clerk."

"Got a new clerk, eh? Where is Jones?"

"Discharged him. An idle, extravagant young dog!"

"True enough, and the new one won't do any better. Drinking, gambling, late hours, fast horses—that's the way with them all."

And Smith groaned.

Jenkins' eye twinkled. He well knew the peculiarities of his good-hearted but eccentric bachelor partner.

"Well, the new clerk don't drink nor gamble, I'm certain of that, and has thus far been very attentive and industrious."

"Thus far? Oh, yes. Wait a moment. New brooms sweep clean."

"Oh, well, if the new clerk don't suit you, you can send the clerk adrift, that's all. I took her—a'm—the new clerk on trial."

Mr. Smith stared at his partner.

"I suppose the new clerk has a name," he remarked, dryly.

"Oh, yes. Her—that is to say—the new clerk's name is Gardner. But here we are."

As was the usual custom, Mr. Smith went through the store, past the army of clerks on either side of the counter, without glancing either to the right or left. But when he reached his private office, at the farther end, he looked through the glass door, which was so situated that he could see all that was going on in the store.

As his eyes fell upon the occupant of a desk near the door, he started.

"What's that?" he said, turning sharply to his partner, who had followed him.

Jenkins gazed composedly at the slender form, whose graceful head was bent intently upon a ledger that lay upon the desk.

"That? Why, that's the new clerk."

Smith rubbed his eyes and looked again.

"Why, it's a woman!" he exclaimed, with an air of incredulity and horror.

"I should say it was," said Jenkins, coolly, "and a confoundedly pretty one at that."

Smith gave his partner a look of virtuous indignation.

"Mr. Jenkins, this is no place for a woman."

"Think not? Now it strikes me she fits the place very nicely."

"The proper place for a woman is the sanctuary of home."

This was a pet observation of Mr. Smith, which he had read somewhere, and which he considered a clincher in such an argument.

"But suppose she hasn't any?"

This was a poser, and in his efforts to surmount it, Mr. Smith got excited.

"Hasn't any? Why, sir, she must—she ought to have one."

"Very true. In fact, so confident am I on this point, that I have thought of offering her mine—or, at least, to share it with her."

"Mr. Jenkins, this is not a fit subject for jest."

"It's a serious matter, I know; so, on the whole, perhaps I had better think it over awhile longer. Besides, there is no knowing if she would accept my offer, together with the incumbrance that goes with it."

"Jenkins," returned Smith, severely, "will you cease trifling and attend to the business in hand? This woman must go."

"Very well; you told me you wanted a clerk who was faithful and industrious, that didn't spend his salary, and all he could steal, on fast horses and the like, and I got you one. It's an easy matter to send her off."

"Of course it is," replied Smith, brightening at the suggestion. "Just tell her she does not exactly suit, and we shan't need her after to-day."

"But she does suit me; and if you are not suited, all you have to do is to tell her to go."

"You hired her."

"And for that reason I won't discharge her without some good cause."

"No matter," returned Smith, indifferently; "I can discharge her. I think I am equal to that much."

Jenkins, who had left the room, put his head back a minute later.

"Bet you a hundred dollars you don't do it."

With this parting shot he disappeared.

Now Smith had a nervous horror of women—as his partner well knew, especially young women—and never spoke to one if he could help it.

Had it been a man he would have known what to say, and experienced no difficulty in saying it; but a woman was quite another thing.

But his partner's words had touched his pride, and, summoning all his resolution, he walked in.

But his courage failed him as he came opposite the desk where she sat, and he passed by, glancing sidewise at the unconscious occupant, who did not lift her head as he approached.

After speaking to a clerk in the farther end of the room, he walked slowly back to where the young lady sat, and who, as he passed, raised a pair of soft blue eyes, shooting a bewildering glance to Smith's, that he felt to the toe of his boot.

"Miss—Miss—" he stammered.

"My name is Georgiana," said the young lady, smiling. "Some call me George, for short."

"Well, Miss George—Georgiana, I am afraid you will find your situation rather unpleasant."

"Not at all, sir. On the contrary, I find it very pleasant and comfortable."

"Ahem—but I fear you will hardly be equal to the discharge of its duty."

"I hope not. If you will run your eye over the balance sheet you will find everything correct."

With a desperate hope that there would be something amiss, Smith did so, but was disappointed.

"I hope you have no fault to find?" said the clerk, rather anxiously, on perceiving that he hesitated.

"You are a woman—"

Here, whether abashed by a sudden display of dimples on the pink cheeks, that grew more pink at this rather unnecessary assertion, Smith came to an abrupt pause.

At this the smiling face settled into an expression of demure gravity.

"I must plead guilty to the charge of being a woman. But though it may be a misfortune, it can scarcely be called a fault; at any rate, it is one for which I am not answerable."

"You misunderstand me, ma'am. What I meant to say was, that there are certain duties connected with your office, such as opening the store, going to the postoffice, etc., which you cannot very well perform.

"I assure you, sir, that I like nothing better than an occasional walk in the open air. And as to opening the store, and sweeping and dusting, I don't know why it should be harder to perform that office for a store than for a house. I claim no consideration for my sex," resumed the young woman, casting a reproachful glance at the perplexed countenance of her employer, "but I ask, in common justice, that you will not discharge me simply because I am a woman."

Muttering a disclaimer of some kind, he hardly knew what, Smith beat a sudden retreat to his own room, assuming a bold front as he met his partner's inquiring eye, but with an inward consciousness that he had been completely routed by the enemy.

"Going?" said Jenkins, with nonchalance most provoking.

"Well, no, not to-day. What the deuce are you grinning at!"

"Oh, nothing—nothing at all," responded Jenkins, throwing himself back in his chair, and regarding intently a fly on the ceiling.

"What I was going to remark was," resumed Smith, with quite an unnecessary assumption of dignity, "that I have concluded to allow the young girl to remain until I can find some situation for her more in accordance with her sex."

"Very kind and considerate of you," said Jenkins, dryly, "especially taking into consideration that she does her work better than any clerk we ever had, and for less pay, too."

Smith was by no means the ogre he seemed. Aside from his prejudices he was a sensible, kind-hearted man. Georgiana was not called upon to open the store or run errands, though she offered to do both. Curious to relate, as days and weeks passed, Smith's repugnance to her presence not only vanished with them, but he began to regard her with positive pleasure.

He used to often look through the glass door, watching the graceful poise of the head and the rapid motion of the deft little fingers as they glided over the paper, until at last curious fancies seemed to creep into his brain, and he began to indulge in glowing dreams of how wonderfully such a little woman as that would brighten up his lonely and cheerless home.

But he determined to proceed cautiously. He had it. His housekeeper was about to leave; he would offer Miss Gardner the place—and then.

Having formed this resolution, his next step was to request the young lady's presence in his private office, a summons that was promptly obeyed.

"Miss Gardner, don't you think the situation of housekeeping in a quiet home, like mine, for instance, would be preferable to your situation here?"

"Perhaps, in some respects, it might," said Georgiana, coloring at this abrupt inquiry, and the look which accompanied it.

Was the old gentleman about to make her an offer?

But his next words relieved her of this apprehension.

"My housekeeper is about to leave me, and I should be glad to have you supply her place."

Georgiana's face grew very red, and her mouth dimpled with the smiles she strove vainly to suppress.

"You are very kind, sir, but the fact is, Mr. Jenkins has spoken to me first."

"Mr. Jenkins?"

"Yes, sir. He asked me to be his housekeeper, and I said I would."

"But, my child, Mr. Jenkins is a young man; it would not be proper for you to keep house for him. Now with me it is different."

And Georgiana inwardly agreed with him. In fact, there was all the difference in the world for her."

"But he asked me to be his wife as well as housekeeper."

"O-o-o-h!"

Smith's first feeling was that of intense astonishment, his next of quite as strong chagrin. But it all ended in an emotion of thankfulness that he had not committed himself.

His disappointment, however, could not have rankled very deeply, for he attended the wedding with smiling tranquillity, the ceremony that transformed his new clerk into the happy wife of his fortunate partner, Jenkins.

Spring in the Clearings.

In newly-cleared regions of country, spring is always an unhealthy season. The virgin soil, enriched by decomposed vegetable matter, sends up, when first bared to the sunshine, volumes of miasmatic vapor that generates every variety of intermittent and remittent fever. All low-laying, swampy districts, the deltas of rivers, the prairies, the salt-marshes on the coast, the bayous of the Gulf States, and the shores of the Northern lakes, are also visited at this season by malarious epidemics that prostrate no inconsiderable number of their inhabitants. This ought not to be, for it can easily be prevented. No fact in medical history is better established than the fact that Hostetter's Stomach Bitters will avert every species of malarious disorder. A course of this standard tonic and alterative commenced in advance of the unhealthy season, and continued regularly until its close, will prove an absolute protection against chills and fever, bilious remittent fever, and other complaints of a periodical type, as well as against the disturbances in the digestive organs and bowels, so common at this period of the year. As a remedy for dyspepsia, biliousness, liver disease, nervous disorders, physical weakness, rheumatism, melancholy, hysteria, and ailments to which the weaker sex are exclusively subject, Hostetter's Bitters has no competitor at home or abroad.

WHEN WRITING TO ADVERTISERS, please say you saw the advertisement in this paper.

The Auburn Courier

Thursday, May 1st, 1873

A writer in the Philadelpeia Press says that Secor Rebeson can go through a pile of official papers faster than any man I ever saw." Yes, says the New York Sun, and he can go through the people's money faster than any other man. Even Boss Tweed never was half so fast.

At a private banquet, in St. Louis, the other evening President Grant felt a little bilarious, and in responding to a toast on a very new and original subject, which same was "Our Country," Ulysses rose to his feet, and with a graceful wave of his glass, said: "The Modoc—he is the worst buffalo in the business;"

Later advices somewhat diminish the number of human beings who perished in, the late earthquake at San Salvador—the killed and wounded being now set down at five hundred. But the destruction of property is even more terrible than at first reported. Some forty thousand people have been ruined—brought to utter destitution

The Radicals expects that Mr. Andrew will buy his way into the Mayer's office and then turn the criminal business ever to the keeping of Justice Whitehead. The little affair is to be a small but transparent edition of Simon Cameron's tactics; it is to be managed on the "addition, diversion and silence" plan, Whoop, la!

An Alabama negro, who has served nine years in the penitentiary, is now a Congressman. His constituents evidently know what they are about, and there is no danger that they will be deceived. If there are any more back pay steals to be voted for people will know just where the member from Alabama will stand.

Refering to the apportionment crime republished elsewhere, the Cincinnati Commercial says: "Our map of the redistriction for Congressional purposes of the State of Indiana, will command much attention. Care has been taken to have it entirely accurate, and the full proportionment of the gerrymander have not heretofore been seen. Such unfairness as the Republicans have displayed in this matter we have been accustomed to see come to grief.

Speaking of the recent promotion of Lieu. Fred. Grant, The Army and Navy Journal says: "There is little profit in criticising injustice for which there is no remedy, but it is not well to disguise the fact that great dissatisfaction has been created in the appointment of a young second lieutenant of infantry, just from the military academy, to the position of aid de camp on the staff of the Lieutenant-General, in the place of officers whose services and experience so much better entitle them to such a position.

In his charge to the Grand Jury of Miami county, on opening court at Peru on Monday of last week, Judge Petitt of Wabash, who stands high as a lawyer and a jurist, averred that in his judgement the Legislature had not exceeded its constitutional autherity in the enactment of the temperance law; that it was the law leaving courts with no duty with reference to it but its enforcement; and that the penalties and liabilities of the new law apply equally to all retailers of spiritous liquors, the dealers under the old standing is precisely the same relation to the law as these with permits under the new. Liquor dealers in Judge Petitt's district know, from this charge, what to expect in case they are indicted.

Attention has been paid to the fact that Major Hodge, the thieving paymaster who robbed the treasury of some hundreds of thousands of dollars, and who was pardoned by the President, is now driving fast horses about the streets of Washinton in the best of spirits and with his pockets apparently full of money. A writer in the Springfield Republican alledges that Hedge was pardoned "simply because his social standing was high." This involves a groess misapprehension of the truth. The real reason why Hodge was pardoned was because he knew to much respecting Paymaster General Brice's payment of forged bounty claims, and Gen. Grant's constant support of Brice threnghout the whole of the unequaled rascality.

Six thousand square feet more space has been yielded American exhibiters at Viemna, and their articles wil be received until June 10.

The Baltimore American wants to see Colfax a candidate for Congress from this district and innocently predicts that he would be "vindicated" by receiving the largest majority ever given to a candidate in this district. The Argus of Laporte thinks that paper presumes largely upon the ignorance of the people of Northern Indiana if it seriously thinks that Schuyler Colfax stands in high favor with the voters of his district. Nothing could be further from the fact, and nothing would please us better than to have the Radicals nominate Colfax for Congress, for his defeat at the polls would be as overwhelming as it would be certain to forever dispose of a man who is now looked upon as a shallow pretender, destitute alike of statemanship and that high sense of honor and unsullied veracity which the honest and sensible people of Northern Indiana so much admire.

Gov. Hendricks Explains.

A few weeks since Gov. Hendricks visited the city of Washington on professional business. It was at once reported that while at the capital he endeavored to enlist the democratic members of Congress in a scheme for the organization of a new party. This report has been extensively circulated, and formed the basis of numerous editorials in the leading papers of the country. To set himself right, Mr. Hendricks has published a letter, in which he says:

My visit to Washington City had nothing whatever to do with political matters, and while there I had less conversation in relation to parties and party organizations than at any former visit to that city, and I was quite surprised when I learned that newspaper correspondents attributed to me any political purpose. A case in the Supreme Court and some business in the departments occupied nearly all my time, and my conversation with friends and acquaintances upon public and political matters were casual and without argument, and, I might say, without design. I have expressed a hope, which I earnestly entertain, that all who sincerely desire a thorough reform in the public service shall so act together as to restore integrity and economy in that service, and place public authority once more on constitutional basis. How this may be best accomplished, whether through our existing organization or by a movement introducing new elements, should be carefully considered, and the action of the Democratic, Liberal and Reform elements in the States will probably suggest the best action. I believe a large majority of the people desire a change in the Administration, and the practical question is how shall they come together with a view to that end. Very truly yours.

T. A. HENDRICKS.

The Warsaw Indianian claims for its party the credit of all the good legislation enacted when that party has the majority in the body making it, but sturdily declines being accountable for any of the vicious. We object and protest to this course on account of its obvious unfairness. The rule is to hold the majority for all the legislation enacted—giving for the just and censure for the unjust, and this seems proper. If the majority is to receive praise for all the good, it cannot divest itself of responsibility for all the legislation. We do not see anywhere in the proceedings of the last Legislature that either Mr. Chapman or Mr. Thayer spoke against the raising of the salaries from $5 to $8 per day; or the infamous gerrymandering schemes; or the many useless laws enacted. We suppose they are men of intellect, and as such their voices would doubtless have proven potent to check the evils if they had been raised against them.—Huntington Democrat.

And so again is demonsrated the hypocrisy of the politicians who control the Government and the hollowness of their professions. So again the people see, after election, when it is too late, that the men and the party they trusted were unworthy the trust—that they have been cheated and defrauded into giving a new lease of political life to the most corrupt set of demagogues that ever controled this country.—South Bend Union.

"I'm to be Queen of the May, mother. I'm to be Queen of the May." These are pretty words, conveying the idea of a white illusion dress, wreath of flowers and all the beauty of nature's rarest productions in spring time, for adornment. A Fort Wayne grocer who had adopted the cash system went to sleep in class meeting one evening last week. His class leader in his exhortation advised his hearers to "trust God for all things." Everybody coming to Fort Wayne to buy clothing is invited to stop at the Red Front Clothing Hall before purchasing, as we carry the finest goods in the State.—We buy 10 per cents cheaper than any house within 100 miles and pleasant words to all. Fort Wayne has now an extensive paper depot where all kinds of wrapping paper, white paper, paper sacks are kept at the very lowest market prices. C. F. "Give the boy a chance," the mother said. The old man, fixed and set in his notions, and forgetting that when he was young he liked to go around with the girls and see the sights, was giving his son of twenty a sound 'going over," when the mother said—"Give the boy a chance. I know it will be better to give the boy a chance. His home will be our shelter when our locks are thin and gray, and blessings will attend us when at last we pass away." So give your boys a chance

Every number of Peters Musical Monthly contains from eight to ten pieces of choice New Music, worth at least $4 in sheet-form, and all the publisher asks is 30 cents per number. Think of it! Four or five songs, vocal duets, four hand pieces, and four piano pieces for 30 cents.

No music family can afford to be without this valuable magazine. Our advice is, to subscribe, sing, play, and be happy. The May number is just to hand; you can get it by sending 30 cents to J. L. Peters, 599 Broadway, New York, or the first four numbers of 1873 will be mailed for one dollar.

Fort Wayne, the largest Railroad City in Indiana, is still increasing. More railroads are being built this summer, but Rothchild & Bro's., proprietors of the Red Front Clothing House, No. 5 Keystone Block are not back of their business.—Their trade is increasing, as they carry the heavest stock in Indiana. Good goods are the only kind allowed in our store, and sell goods alike to every person, and so we go on. (May 1, 2m.

Judge Robert Lowry, who built up the Fort Wayne Sentinel, and who is acknowledged the shrewdest politician in the Democratic party in Northern Indiana, will be a candidate for congressman in the 12th District, at the next Congressional election.—South Bend Union

The above implies a great deal more than the facts in the case. Judge Lowry added but very little, if any, to the prestige of that paper, as he took control of it generally to advance his claims as one who wants office. We will admit with the above that he is a shrewd politician, but shrewdness does not always imply honesty. We don't believe in stripping our old friend Thomas Tigar, Esq., of 30 years' laborious toil in the establishment of the first paper of Northern Indiana, in order to advance the political interests of one who always has or eternally wants to hold office.

The following list of appointments was made for the various clergymen of this, Fort Wayne, district, by the M. E. Conference at Logansport, last week:

The Odd Fellows celebration at Laporte last Friday, was an immense affair.—About 700 members were present. The address of Grand Secretary Foster was an able and eloquent effort, with which all were greatly pleased. The music by the excellent choir in attendence, was a pleasant feature in itself, and Laporte may well be proud of her talent in this direction.

The Odd Fellows' Hall there was the subject of much comment, all pronouncing it the finest and most beautiful in the State. Four excellent bands were in attendance.

We were under many obligations to our accomplished friend Powell, of the Herald and his excellent lady for special courtesies extended. Wadsworth, of the Argus, is himself again and looks like the sprightly editor that he is. The Holly Water Works gave an exhibition in the evening.

The Angola Times says while Will Palmer, of that place was out 'gunning' in the vicinity of one of the lakes, he discovered some ducks within range of his rifle and concluded to try his hand on one of the flock. When the smoke had cleared away it was discovered that one of the flock had been killed. The next move was to procure a boat and lift the game, but like Paddy's flea, when Mr. Palmer put his hand out to take in his game, it wasn't there. A careful watch was kept for the return of the duck to the surface and the moment it made its appearance hold was laid upon it and with a strong pull it was landed in the boat, accompanied by a four pound fish of the bass species, which, in its attempt to steal Palmer's game became game itself.

A rural poet thus breaks forth: "O, the snore, the beautiful snore, fillidg her chamber from ceiling to floor! Over the coverlet, under the sheet! Now rising aloft like a bee in June; now sunk to the wail of a cracked bassoon! Now, flute like, subsiding, then rising again, is the beautiful snore of Elizabeth Jane. Speaking of feet reminds us that Markly, Shrader & Co., have the finest covering of them to be found in Fort Wayne. Their stock of all descriptions of boots, shoes, gaiters, etc., are tip top. All are invited to take a look at them and learn prices.—Those new goods that they have just received, are fascinating, captivating, charming, surprising, bewitching, enticing, inviting, delightful, beautiful, splendid, elegant, artistic, stylish, unique, glossy, highly finished, all new and superior to all others in town. Call and see them at No. 4, Keystone Block, Ft. Wayne.

True Love Again.—Mary was the proprietress of a diminutive incipient sheep, whose outer covering was as devoid of color as congealed atmospheric vapor, and to all localities to which Mary perambulated, her young South Down was morally sure to follow. It tagged her to the dispensary of learning one diurnal of time, which was contrary to all precedent, and excited the cachination of the seminary attendants when they perceived the presence of young mutton at the establishment for instruction. Consequently the proprietor expelled him from the interior, but he continued to remain in the immediate vicinity, and continued in the neighborhood without fretfulness until Mary once more became visible.

"What causes this specimen of affection on Mary? the impetuous progeny vociferate.

"Because Mary reciprocated the wool producers esteem, you understand," the tutor answered back.

Geo. F. Root & Sons are building up the old prestige by issuing the books and music that the people want. We have just received from them a stirring and timely song entitled, "The Hand that holds the Bread," the chorus of which is,

Awake! then, awake!
The great world must be fed,
And Heaven gives the power
To the hand that holds the bread

This will be to the farmers what the 'Battle Cry" was to the army.

NEWS SUMMARY.

The East.

The bodies are being rapidly recovered from the wreck of the Atlantic. The Dominion Government, hearing that the White Star line have not made provision for the burial of the dead bodies yet to be recovered, has ordered the Collector of Customs to attend to it at the public expense.

Capt. Williams, of the Atlantic, has been censured by the Halifax Investigation Commission, and his commission revoked for two years.

Nearly a quarter of a million dollars of United States bonds, which had been obtained by McDonald, [illegible] Bidwell, and his associates in the Bank of England forgeries, were recovered in New York the other day. Out of $800,000 obtained from the bank by these forgeries, all but $30,000 has already been recovered.

Mary Gaffney, while returning home, at Cohoes, N. Y., the other night, from a funeral, fell down an embankment, and became so mired in mud that she could not extricate herself, and was in this manner strangled to death....The number of passengers who are booked at New York to cross the Atlantic this season is 21,800....Sixty thousand emigrants have arrived at New York since Jan. 1....The Bull's Head Bank, of New York, which suspended some time ago, has been reopened for business....The New York World, of the 23d, closes a long article on "The Democratic Party" in the following words: "We fellowship with all genuine Free-Traders; we scorn political association with any Protectionist; every citizen who is unequivocally for free trade is a good enough Democrat for us; no Protectionist can be a Democrat at all. We stake all our hopes on making the Democracy an out and out, 'thick and thin,' aggressive, and, if you please, intolerant, Free-Trade party, subordinating all issues to this, and thereby drawing to itself all citizens who have a true appreciation of this great principle."

Hoosier Brown, one of the most notorious of Western criminals, has been arrested in New York for robbing a man of $14,000....Mrs. Hennessy, of New York, during a fit of insanity, the other day, murdered her two little children....Fire insurance was not profitable in the year of the Boston fire. The President of the Convention of Underwriters at New York says that the companies of this country lost $6,320,366 in 1872. The total loss in the Boston fire was $70,000,000, of which $36,875,343 has been borne by the insurance companies. ....Usury laws are not likely to last much longer in New York State. The Grand Jury of New York city, who learned the utter inutility of the laws in the effort to enforce them, recommended the Legislature to abolish them, and this suggestion has resulted in the introduction of a bill for their repeal, which has passed the Senate by a vote of 17 to 12.

The West.

A postoffice clerk is under arrest at La Crosse, Wis., for burning letters to save the trouble of distributing them....A serious riot among the Chinese of Sacramento, Cal., occurred last week. Pistols were freely used, and several persons were dangerously wounded....The war against the Apaches goes bravely on. Maj. Randall, of the Thirty-third Infantry, recently attacked a band and killed 41 warriors and captured a number of women and children. Large numbers of the worst Apaches are suing for peace, promising to surrender and go on the reservations....Secretary of Interior Delano was recently hung in effigy by the people of Yreka, Cal....Spring brought Nebraska the hardest snow-storm of the last sixteen years. It lasted three days, destroyed a large number of cattle, and probably some human life, although but one death has been reported.

Congressman Crebs, of Illinois, and Cotton, of Iowa, repudiate the back pay.

A San Francisco dispatch of the 21st says: The peace conference at Camp Verde resulted in the unconditional submission and surrender of two of the worst bands of Apaches. Peace was brought about through the complete rout of the Apaches, who have for the last 20 years defied the Government. Over 200 warriors have been killed in the last campaign in the fastnesses of the Apache country. The warriors gave up their arms. When the talk began the Apache chiefs were the first speakers. All acknowledged complete defeat. They desired peace. Gen. Crook accepted in a few remarks. The chiefs promised to send word to all outside Indians in arms to come in and surrender. Passes to protect runners were promised, when the conference broke up. The vanquished Apaches went up the river to the old post, where a feast was given them. The General's policy will be to treat the Indians humanely, place them on reservations, make them no promises which will not be fulfilled; to maintain order among them, instruct them in their simple duties to God and man, and thus prove to them that peace is far better than war....A telegram from San Francisco of the 20th says: A Yreka dispatch reports that the Indians are still in the lava-bed, some of the Modocs having been seen where young Hovey was shot, evidently keeping open communication with the lake for water. A number of shots were fired along the line just before he left. The troops are still remaining in the lava-bed. The Indian found in Jack's cave was Scar-Faced Charley, without doubt, by the description. He was dead, instead of wounded, as before reported. Eugene Hovey's body was buried near the camp on Friday. It was so horribly mutilated as to be scarcely recognizable.

Two workmen on Potter Palmer's new hotel, in Chicago, were killed the other day, by the giving way of an insecure scaffolding. ...Reports of the late storm in Western Nebraska show it to have been one of the severest ever known. Men were frozen to death within two rods of their houses while trying to get to their stock to feed them. Families were compelled to take refuge in cellars or keep their beds for three days. The destruction of horses was great, some losing all they had. One party lost his whole herd of 75 head. The gullies of the railroads were filled with snow as hard as ice. Snow-plows were useless.

The wheat throughout Northern Kansas is in good condition, and promises a large yield. ...A Mr. Robinson, from Minnesota, aged 122, passed through Milwaukee, the other day, to visit a young son in Illinois aged 98.

A party of four persons—William and Joseph Falkington, and John and Thomas Mitchell, from Macoupin county, Ill.—were recently murdered by Indians in Southwestern Kansas....Cincinnati's manufactures last year amounted to $143,000,000, a gain over the preceding year of $7,500,000....The borax mines in Southern California are being extensively worked, over 200 claims having already been located. The first shipment of crude borax, 4,500 pounds, has just been made.

The South.

A public meeting of the citizens of Richmond, Va., was held last week, at which resolutions expressing sorrow at the death of Gen. Canby were passed.

United States troops have been sent from New Orleans to Grant parish, La., the scene of the recent disturbances.

Half of the town of Owingsville, Ky., has been destroyed by fire.

Washington.

The Supreme Court has unanimously decided that aliens who domiciled in the South during the rebellion, and who were guilty of acts of treason, come within the amnesty proclamation of President Johnson of Dec. 25, 1868, and are therefore freed from the taint or odium of treason. The matter came up on an appeal from the Court of Claims in the case of Carlisle vs. The United States. This decision settles a number of claims pending for cotton taken, amounting to $300,000.

It is now announced that as soon as practicable after the organization of the Civil Service Commission by the acceptance of the appointments of Messrs. Eaton and Shellabarger, the rules prepared by the old commission will be so modified as to enlarge the authority of the appointing power, and possibly give greater scope to the discretion of the heads of departments and others in the selection of subordinates....Senator Sumner continues to improve slowly, and his prescribing physician, Dr. Brown-Sequard, who was recently in Washington, has strong hopes of his entire recovery. The Senator is still prohibited from work of a mental character, but is allowed to read to some extent. He is much better now than he was in January last, when hypodermic injections of morphine were a nightly necessity.

Foreign.

Baron Justus Liebig died at Munich, April 18, aged 70....The wife of Henri Rochefort is dead.

Reports from San Salvador state that the authorities still persist in rebuilding the city on the same site, although this is the eighth time within 150 years that city has been destroyed. Most of the people, nevertheless, have removed to Santa Tecla. The only building that stood the shocks without the least injury was a building erected of timber. The impulse at present is to import timber from California, for the construction of such earthquake-proof houses. Aid and money have been tendered and sent from all parts of the Republic. Everything has risen to exorbitant prices. The United States Consulate was a mass of ruins inside, though the walls were standing. Mr. Biddle, United States Minister, with his five little ones, had a narrow escape. During two days three officers remained in San Salvador, and they felt light shocks. In some places the ground cracked a foot wide and very deep. At every shock all the cocks in the place began to crow, and pigeons whirled about wildly in the air. The English visitors think it is tempting Providence to rebuild the city again on the same spot. The crust below is evidently a mere shell. The ear placed close to the ground hears a noise like running water, and the fall of a heavy stone produces a hollow sound. The Indians would never build on this site....Advices from Spain state that the Republicans continue to rule the city of Barcelona. The Carlists last week stopped a diligence in the Province of Gerona, shot all the passengers and seized the mails....The leprosy is spreading among the natives of the Sandwich Islands. ....The epizootic has reached Honolulu....Advices from Belgrade state that a plot for a general massacre of the Christians of Bosnia, during the observance of the orthodox Easter, had been discovered and frustrated....The Shah of Persia has started on his European tour....The Pope is again out of danger. He rose at half-past seven the other morning, and said mass in his private chapel. He subsequently gave audience to a deputation bringing Peter's pence.

Gen. Pieltan, the new Captain-General of Cuba, was received at Havana by a large concourse, not one of whom raised a cheer or uttered a word of welcome....Six thousand square feet more of space have been yielded American exhibitors at Vienna, and their articles will be received until June 10.

Frankfort, Germany, was recently the scene of a terrible riot, caused by an advance in the price of lager beer. During the conflict twelve persons were killed and forty wounded. Sixteen breweries were wrecked by the rioters, and there was much rioting....At Paris, the other day, Minister Washburne presented to Baron de Itajuba, the Brazilian Ambassador, on behalf of the American Government, two cases of silver plate, in recognition of the ability and impartiality with which he discharged his duties as a member of the Geneva Tribunal of Arbitration....An advance is to be made in Atlantic cable rates....The Dutch losses during the late campaign against the Atchenese were 7 officers and 38 men killed, and 35 officers and 383 men wounded. The Dutch expedition has been recalled for the present, and hostilities have ceased....Fred Roca, United States Consul at Manzanillo, Cuba, was drowned recently while on a fishing excursion.

The recent report of the murder of Sir Samuel Baker and party turns out to have been a canard.....The celebrated Tichborne case is up again in the London courts.....The Czarowitz of Russia and wife will shortly visit London.....The Japanese Ambassadors traveling in Europe recently had a lengthy conference with an eminent German Professor of Jurisprudence, at Berlin, regarding the propriety of endeavoring to establish Christianity as the State religion of Japan. The Professor earnestly dissuaded them from the project. The Ambassadors had already come to regard the change as probable, and were favorable to it. They listened eagerly to the reasons of the Professor, who adduced facts from the history of Christendom to show that religion cannot be enforced by Governments. He said it was only vital when it grows amongst the people and from the people. He counseled the granting of full religious liberty as the most desirable course to pursue. The Ambassadors expressed satisfaction with the advice.

The Murder of Gen. Canby—Additional Particulars.

The following additional particulars of the massacre of the Peace Commissioners have been furnished: Capt. Anderson was at Col. Mason's camp when the attack was made on the peace-commission party. He says Lieuts. Sherwood and Doyle were attracted out from the camp by a white flag. They went 400 or 500 yards, when they met what they supposed were only two Indians, who said they wanted to talk to "Little Tyee"—Col. Mason. They were told they did not want to talk, and for the Indians to go back to their camp and they would return to theirs. As they turned around the Indians, four in number, fired upon them, wounding Lieut. Sherwood in the arm and thigh; the latter being a very serious wound, the bone having been shattered by a bullet.

Capt. Anderson who was on duty at the signal station on Hospital Rock, saw plainly the attack upon Col. Mason's front, and telegraphed to Gen. Gillem to notify the Peace Commission immediately. Col. Biddle, who was at the signal station at Gillem's headquarters when this message was received, at once placed his field glass upon Gen. Canby, as the party sat together about one mile distant. Very soon the whole party scattered. He followed the General's course with his glass while he ran about 50 yards, threw up his arms, and fell backward dead. Two of the Indians who were following him jumped upon him, one believed to be Capt. Jack, stabbed him in the neck, and he was completely stripped. Dr. Thomas wrs also entirely stripped. His purse, containing about $60, was found under his body, the Indians having dropped it.

Mr. Meacham was shot in three places, one ball entering at the inner corner of his right eye, another on the side of his head. These are both believed to have lodged within his cranium, a third passing through his right fore-arm. He also received a cut in his left arm, and a scalp wound five inches in length. He was found about 50 yards from the spot where the slaughter began, in a direction opposite to that taken by Gen. Canby. He was entirely stripped and bewildered in mind. Meacham says he thinks he shot Schonchin in the abdomen, and blood was found, which indicated that one of the Indians had been wounded. The soldiers who were ready started on a double-quick immediately upon the firing of the shot, met Dyar and Biddle and his wife before they were half way to camp. The Indians retired to their retreat about 600 yards in advance of the soldiers, who followed them half a mile beyond the murder ground, and there remained until dark, and were withdrawn, as they were not provided with supplies.

Another Railroad Slaughter.

A dreadful accident occurred to a train on the Stonington and Providence railroad on the morning of the 19th. While running from Stonington to Boston, the train fell through the bridge at the Richmond switch. Six cars were burned, and some fifteen persons killed. The train left Stonington about thirty-five minutes late, and was running at the rate of forty miles per hour. As it approached the bridge, the fireman and engine-driver became aware of the existence of the watery gulf before them, but saw the danger too late to prevent the disaster, or even save their own lives by leaping from the engine. The locomotive jumped the gap, about 30 feet wide, and landed on the other side, in a sand-bank, plunged into it with such force as to wreck her completely. Some idea of her speed may be ascertained from the fact that a piece of rail was broken up and shot through the boiler so that it remained like a shaft exposed at both ends. The engineer, William Gould, when discovered, was between the driving-wheel and engine, there being but just enough of his body left to identify him. The fireman, George Eldridge, was crushed to a jelly. There were about eighty passengers, and the scene can better be imagined than described. As the overturned stoves and lamps set fire to the woodwork, cries for assistance rent the air from the smoking caldron. Frantic husbands were calling for wives, and wives for husbands, sons and daughters. Some escaped through the car windows; others were pulled out of the water below, while many more were writhing beneath the ruins. One man, with his body partly out of the window, could extricate himself no further, and was calling wildly, "Oh, save me, I am burning to death." His screams and moans were not heeded, and death put an end to his sufferings.

When Mr. Allen met his death, he was standing on the front platform of a car, and, as the train struck, his foot was caught in the grappling-iron, and in this condition he was burned to death.

THE MODOC WAR.

Battle of the Lava Beds—Capt. Jack Forced from his Stronghold.

A dispatch dated Headquarters Modoc Expedition, Camp South of Tule Lake, April 16, gives the following account of the way in which the Modocs were forced out of the lava beds:

The day opened warm and still, but was ushered in by a roar of musketry and occasional booming of howitzers. Gen. Gillem, who had been waiting for the arrival of his stores and the Warm Spring Indians, issued orders yesterday for the tents to be struck down in a compact place near the hospital, for the troops to be supplied with three days' rations and 100 rounds of ammunition. Next, for the cavalry to be ready to move at 2 a. m. to-day, and for Col. Mason, on the opposite side of the lava bed, to move at the same hour on the enemy. Col. Perry's and Lieut. Cressan's cavalry were to conceal themselves until joined in the morning by the infantry and artillery. It was hoped when the latter companies left camp that the Modocs would observe them, and, in an attempt to cut them off, fall into the hands of the cavalry. These movements were faithfully executed, and probably hurried a little on our side by the escape of Long Jim, a Modoc, who was under guard a prisoner of war. At midnight he leaped past the guard and escaped, though many shots were fired at him.

At daylight we had an irregular fusilade on the opposite side of the lava bed, and we knew that Col. Mason's forces or his skirmishers were engaged. At 6 we heard the boom of a howitzer and saw shells bursting over Capt. Jack's camp. At this time the rocks were swarming with Indians, and the firing was rapid. The plan of battle was from the north side. Col. Mason was in advance of his command on the right of Warm Spring, the Indians on his left. From this side there was only the lake for the Modocs to escape by. Lieut. Greery was in camp in charge of the arms and ammunitions. Capt. Trimble, First Artillery, with twenty men, was left in charge of the camp on this side. Col. Green, at 7 o'clock a. m., united with Col. Perry's company. In about an hour and a half after leaving camp the ball opened. While marching along the lake shore, just at the head of a long cave, about a mile and a half from Jack's camp, they encountered the first opposition, with straggling shots from the bluff, at long range.

The men deployed in open skirmish order, and advanced slowly under such cover as the rocks afforded. Our right gorge opened on the bluff, from the right bank of which came straggling shots, while a few fell around us from the left point. Our skirmishers crept up, supported by reserves, until we arrived within short range, when a severe volley was fired from the bluffs, evidently there being twenty-five or thirty Indians posted there. The fire was heavy. After standing about fifteen minutes, the order to charge was given, and the men sprang forward amid the most deafening yells from the Modocs. Such was the rapidity of the onslaught, and so unexpected, the troops were on them before they knew it, and in a few minutes were masters of the situation, and our brave boys behind the rocks resting at their leisure. Gen. Gillem had sent an order to Col. Mason to stir them up on his side, and he let into them with a vengence, distracting their attention materially and assisting our troops. The charge was a gallant one.

At 2 p. m. the order was given to advance the mortars. Maj. Thomas is in command. Lieut. Cranston Howe, Fourth Artillery, Sergeant Ramer, and nineteen men composed the party, as gallant a set as ever handled guns. At half-past 4 the line deployed down the lake opposite Jack's camp, and crossed the intervening open space at double-quick without receiving a shot. They are now in readiness to charge on the Bluffs when the mortars have done their work. The mortars arrived on the ground, and took position. All quiet until 5:30, when a sudden and heavy volley rolled along Mason's line, and continued several minutes. Maj. Thomas dropped shells directly into it, provoking frantic war-whoops. There was a sudden extinguishing of the fire. Another shell dropped in the same locality, and was followed by yells of pain and dismay. The Modocs then appeared and challenged the soldiers to come out and fight. Another shell was the answer, and they were driven back.

Ar 9 o'clock Col. Gillem's command moved forward from the position gained on Tuesday, and soon occupied the ridge next to Jack's camp. Col. Mason then moved right forward as rapidly as possible, to form a junction with Gillem's left, cutting off the Modocs from the lake, and from their only source of water supply. The junction was effected at noon. At 2 p. m. the mortars were throwing shells in excellent range. Col. Green fell behind the ledge, awaiting the Modocs, should the shells drive them out. After firing they replied through yells, which were frequent. On the fifth shell there came a raking fire and sheet of flame. A small party of men sprang out of the chasm and came into the lines amid a shower of bullets. The falling back was caused by the Modocs flanking and opening a cross fire. Col. Miller, in attempting to form a junction with the Warm Spring Indians, missed them. As he swung down in the great chasm, the Modocs sprang up and cut him off, with thirteen men. Miller fortified himself, when they fought for their lives until the mortars opened.

The Indians withstood the fire until 4 p. m. When the shells began falling in their midst they took cover, dashing across the ledge, losing two men and one wounded. The line reformed and held around the Modocs. Mason signaled that the Modocs on the left flank were trying to get out.

Costello says the blaze of musketry firing along the lake shore about the time of his departure last night was terrible and grand. He believes the Modocs made a strong effort to escape by the lake or to get water, but were completely routed. From the appearance of the firing and the length of its continuance, the Indians were certainly disheartened. He watched them with a glass at long range at different times during the day's fight. They were running from one point to another, with no apparent strategic move, seemingly bewildered by the advance of our forces.

It is learned that we have 24 casualties—5 killed and 19 wounded; some slightly.

Advices from Gen. Gillem's headquarters, in the lava-beds, to April 21st., give the following intelligence: Eleven bodies and one live Modoc were found in the cave at the lava-bed to-day, which makes sixteen warriors slain. Some of the bodies were horribly mangled by shell. Six soldiers and one civilian were slain, and eleven wounded, two seriously. Col. Mason has moved his camp into Capt. Jack's lair. Lava-Bed presents a horrid spectacle. Bodies are discovered in crevices, and from under heaps of rocks a sickening stench is filling the air. There must have been many killed and wounded we know nothing of. We have evidence of the death of seventeen Modocs. Their wounded must be at a greater rate than ours. The ground is literally covered with fragments of broken shells all over the place. Three shells fell in the main ravine, in the center of their camp. Most of their women and children were removed before the massacre of the Peace Commissioners, and, therefore, a large portion of them are still alive. There are about 220 men, women, and children, sixty of whom could fight. Probably fifteen warriors were slain in the three days' fight.

If the Indians make a stand, this country will be in a horrid state this summer. The ranchers with all their cattle will be compelled to abandon the ranches. Fifty desperate savages roaming these rocky fastnesses will work incalculable destruction to property, and cause a fearful loss of life. They will lay waste the country, and the soldiers will be comparatively powerless, because they cannot hurt them when they find them. They cannot venture out without an escort, for they know not what branch of sage brush conceals a foe. The troops will not be idle. The Modocs will have no chance to recruit their shattered forces. Extermination is the word.

Some volunteers, escorting Hovey's remains to town, talked with Fairchild, and learned that Scar-Faced Charley was not killed, the body supposed to be his being Shack-Nasty Frank. Schonchin's body was found, and his head taken to camp. He was not killed, only wounded by Meacham, and afterwards killed by a shell. His whole body below the breast was torn out. Watchnatate, another young Modoc, was also recognized among the dead. The shell that killed Schonchin and others was picked up by Watchnatate before it exploded.

Dr. Cabaness was along the line during the day's fight. He says he counted twelve warriors slain. How many they buried no one knows.

The following is a list of the wounded and killed during the three days fight and skirmishing:

Wounded—E Company, Fourth Artillery, Privates Henry Meagan, John McManus, and Cunningham. K Company, First Cavalry, A. N. Phineas, Bernard, and Sergt. Frank Gilmore. F Company, First Cavalry, Dennis Delany, Corporal Pilpick, and Owen Deeley. G Company Twelfth Infantry, Sergt. Gochy. One Warm Spring Indian. Total, 10.

Killed—Fourth Artillery, Company E, Sergt. Morgan and Private Howard. K Troop, First Cavalry, Chas. Johnson. F Troop, First Cavalry, Bugler Wm. Gerstz. M. Battery, Fourth Artillery, Wm. Smith, and one citizen, Eugene Hovey. Total, 7.

Americans in French Prisons.

An official list of the inmates of French prisons has recently been published, which contains the names of a large number of native Americans. Among these are James G. Wells, claiming to be a native of Boston, where he says he formerly performed the duties of a clergyman. He was convicted some time since of keeping a gambling house, and was sentenced to three months' hard labor. A. B. Popple, formerly of Philadelphia, was sentenced to pay a heavy fine for the same offense, but on refusing to pay the amount named he was sent to jail, where he says he will remain forever rather than make the necessary payment. P. V. Howland, of Cincinnati, has had his sentence prolonged several times for bad conduct, being afflicted, he states, with delirium tremens. He has twice attempted to escape jail, and is consequently kept in a straight-jacket, and is nourished on bread and water alone. Perry Walker, claiming to be a resident of Indianapolis, Ind., as well as an ex-Congressman, was convicted some time since of selling spurious certificates of the Mormon loan, and sentenced for three years. He is employed in the manufacture of wisp brooms, and is said to be both intelligent and industrious. Three young girls, natives of New York, Newark and Louisville, respectively, are confined for various effenses. The full list of Americans of both sexes is at present about twenty, which is said to be the largest number ever known to be confined in jail at one time in French prisons.

Strange Interruption of a Marriage Ceremony.

The Saratogian tells the story of a young man named Albert E. Knights, of Half Moon, who for several moons past has been "paying his distresses" to a respectable young lady of East Line, in Saratoga county. His attentions culminated in an engagement of marriage, and the time fixed for the ceremony was the 2d day of April. As the event turned out, the 1st of April would have been a more appropriate appointment. The friends of the parties were assembled at the bride's residence, and the Rev. J. M. Webster was called in to tie the knot. Previous to the ceremony, however, the clerical gentleman was invited to a private interview by the groom, who intimated that "he wished the marriage ceremony cut short," objecting articularly and refusing to assent to that part of the form to "love her, comfort her, honor and keep her, in sickness and in health; and forsaking all others, keep thee only unto her so long as ye both shall live," saying "he could not promise to live with her until death, not knwing what might happen." The dominie remonstrated, and on the groom's persistence, refused in toto to perform the service, remarking that "if he (the groom) felt that way he had better stop where he was;" upon which he withdrew, first informing the lady's parents how the case stood. Imagine the consternation of the bride expectant, the indignation of her friends, and the mortification of the parents and friend of the groom at this exhibition and exemplification of the "free love" teachings of the Woodhull-Claflin school.

The Origin of the Late Horse Disease.

The veritable origin of the horse disease is the subject of a paper in the American Naturalist, by Mr. Moorehouse, of New York. He examined the matter exuding from the nostrils of the affected animals, and besides the regular pus, found no less than three different kinds of vegetable organisms, all in states of vigorous development. One was a species of minute lichen, and known as Urbeolaria scruposa. These were in every form of development, there heing hundreds of fragments in a single drop. Another was an unknown species of Anergillus, also giving evidence of propagation and growth. The third form was an unknown species, not hitherto described. In order to prove that these spores were floating in the atmosphere, they were caught on moistened glass in the atmosphere in the vicinity of the disease. This brings the atmospheric and vegetable origin of the diseasenearer to a demonstration, but does not prove it, as the atmospheric vegetable spore may have simply found a favorable nidus in which to germinate in the mucous matter given off by the disease.

POSTAGE MATTERS.

No More Free Matter to be Sent Through the Mails—The Postal Rates as They Now Stand.

[From the Postal Record.]

The recent Congressional legislation provides that "all laws and parts of laws permitting the transmission by mail of any free matter whatever be, and the same are hereby, repealed from and after June 30, 1873."

This cuts off the free exchange of newspapers between publishers, and the the free circulation of papers within counties of publication.

No changes in the rates of postage have been made, consequently postage charges will be as follows:

GENERAL RULES.

Full prepayment by stamps is required on all transient printed matter, foreign and domestic.

All letters not prepaid by stamps, all such as are received in the office with stamps cut from stamped envelopes, or with such postage stamps as were in use prior to 1861, or with revenue stamps on them, are treated as "unmailable" and sent to the Dead Letter Office.

Letters which have not been delivered can be forwarded, without additional charge, upon a written request.

Letters once delivered from a postoffice cannot be remailed without prepayment of postage.

Departmental postage after June 30, 1873, will be prepaid by special stamps, prepared and furnished by the Postoffice Department.

It will, nevertheless, become important for correspondents of the several departments and bureaus to fully prepay their postage after the 20th of June next. Of course, the local officers and agents of the departments will be instructed to this effect.
